Politically Mr. Peck has been a life long supporter of the republican party, in whose interests he has been active, being a frequent delegate to county and state conventions. He has been an active and prominent member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he has received every degree of the order and has passed through all the chairs save that of grand master. He had the unique distinction of holding at the same time the offices of grand patriarch and department commander, the only case on record in the history of the order in Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Peck are members of the Congregational Church. Mr. Peck has acted well his part in life, and while primarily interested in his own affairs he has not been unmindful of the interests of others, as his efforts to advance the public good and promote the welfare of his fellow men abundantly attests. In every walk of life he is recognized by all classes as a high-minded, talented, courteous gentleman of integrity and true moral worth.

JOHN J. SWARTZ. To be descended from a long line of honorable forebears is a distinction all men cannot claim, although more than one plutocrat would give millions to be able to point with pride to a family tree bearing the names of some of the distinguished men of this and other countries. Pride of family and determination to live up to high standards of morality set by noble ancestors are virtues which cannot be too highly commended, and they are possessed in marked degree by John J. Swartz, for fifteen years the efficient government representative at Hot Springs. Mr. Swartz's most cherished possession is a family tree dating back to an English ancestor in 1480, William Ball, lord of the manor of Barkham, England. From this tree Mr. Swartz is able to trace his relationship to Gen. George Washington through his mother, whose maiden name was Mary Ball. Another ancestor, Joseph Ball, a cousin of George Washington on the maternal side of the house, was the owner of a large foundry in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and through his turning its facilities to the manufacture of ammunition for the colonial troops much of the successful operations of the Revolution may be directly traced. The true American can appreciate Mr. Swartz's pride in his relationship to these great men, founders of the country he loves so dearly, in whose employ he now is, and to preserve which one of his children served during the Great war.

John J. Swartz was born in Clearfield County, Pennsylvania, a son of Peter and Sarah (Boner) Swartz. After attending the public schools of his native state he took a two years' course at the Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, College, and then began traveling, visiting every state in the Union except Kansas and Oklahoma. Finally, fifteen years ago, he took the civil service examination, passing with a high percentage, and since then had been in the service of the Government, with headquarters at Hot Springs. During that period he has never had one of his reports returned for correction, nor have any of his orders been rescinded or overruled. This is a very remarkable record and one which reflects great credit upon his reliability and good judgment. Since casting his first vote Mr. Swartz has been a stanch republican, and intends to continue his support of that party, for he realizes now, as he has in the past, that the administration of the country's affairs under republican rule has been the best for all persons concerned. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, of which he is an elder, and has been honored by this office for many years. His wife is equally consistent in her support of the faith of the Baptist creed.

Mr. Swartz was married to Mrs. Alice Headly, and they have the following children: Tasso W., Rollo G., John A., Frances Sarah, Alice E and Dwight A. The eldest born, Tasso W., was in charge of the Spokane Underground System Electric Company of Spokane, Washington, when the United States entered the World war, and he enlisted in the ammunition corps, being first a second lieutenant, but rising until he was in command of his company. During the Saint Mihiel drive his company hauled 400 tons of ammunition and rendered the most dangerous kind of service. He is married, the maiden name of his wife having been B. Lee Lough, and they have a daughter, Gertrude Maria. Robert G. Swartz married Zeffa Kenneda, and was engaged in railroad work, with residence at Los Angeles, California, when this country called for volunteers for the ship yards. He was one of those who responded, and remained in the Government ship yards as long as there was need of his services. John A. Swartz married Marguerite Stonehouse, and is engaged in ranching in Montana. He has a son, Arthur. Frances S. married Rex McCarter, and they live at Portland, Oregon, and have two children, Frances and Alice. Alice Swartz is in the employ of the Western Union Telegraph Company at Portland, Oregon. Dwight is also a resident of Portland, Oregon, and is a workman at the ship yards at that point.

Few families of Montana have as good a record for constructive citizenship as has this one, and Mr. Swartz and his sons are living up to the best ideals of American manhood and setting an excellent example for those who come after them to follow.

JOHN L. SLATTERY has gained prominent recognition in the public life of Montana, and at present is state senator from Valley County and an attorney of note in this community. He has been a resident of Montana since 1904, coming into the commonwealth from North Dakota, where he had spent several years with his uncle, W. E. Purcell, former U. S. senator from North Dakota, and he had come to the West from his native state of New Jersey, where he was born at Flemington on the 2d of September, 1878.

Michael Slattery, his father, was born at Waterford, Ireland, but his mother, Margaret Purcell, was a native of Flemington, New Jersey, and of Irish parentage. Her father, Joseph Purcell, a building contractor, came from County Cork to the United States in 1854. He located in New Jersey, and spent the remainder of his life there. He and his two sons, James and John, were Union soldiers during the war between the states. James Purcell, who is now a resident of Pennsylvania, was confined for a time in Andersonville prison during that struggle. Michael Slattery was born in 1852, and his wife is three years younger, and their home is still at Flemington, New Jersey. In their family were the following children: Ella, the wife of Joseph Corcoran, of the City of New York; Joseph A., an attorney at Glendive, Montana; John L., the Glasgow senator; Richard P., of Flemington, New Jersey; James L., assistant cashier of the American National Bank at Helena; Robert E., of Newark, New Jersey; Mrs. William Earle, whose home is at Rutherford, New Jersey; and Purcell, at the old home in Flemington.

John L. Slattery spent the first sixteen years of his life in the home at Flemington, and then joined his uncle, U. S. Senator W. E. Purcell, at Wahpeton, North Dakota, and prepared for college in the Red River Valley University. He had completed his high school training at Flemington, New Jersey, and on returning to the East, entered LaFayette College at Easton, Pennsylvania, and graduated from that school in 1901, with the degree of Ph. B. He was then ready to prepare for the profession he had chosen as his life work, and entered the New York Law School in the City of New York, but after one year there returned to North Dakota and read law in the office of his uncle.

Mr. Slattery was admitted to the bar of North Dakota in September, 1903, before the Supreme Court, and located for practice at Forman in that state in association with his brother, Joseph A. Slattery, the firm engaging in both law practice and the abstract business. In October of 1904 John L. Slattery came to Montana and was admitted to the bar on motion at Helena, and resided there with another uncle, R. R. Purcell, and was in his office a few months before locating at Glasgow. Mr. Slattery tried his first lawsuit in the police court of Helena. In Valley County his practice has covered all character of cases, many prominent as criminal cases and others as civil suits. He defended and secured the acquittal of young Armington for the murder of his stepfather, a case which aroused the county and created much sentiment for the child murderer. While serving as county attorney he prosecuted a number of murderers for attacking a homesteader and his family at night in an effort to run them out of the country, killing the man and a child and destroying the home, and some of these outlaws went to prison for their share in the crime. Mr. Slattery was twice elected to the office of county attorney, first in 1906 and again in 1912, serving two years in each term.

Mr. Slattery was reared in a home and community where democratic principles held sway, but when the time came for him to vote he cast a republican ballot, voting for Major McKinley in 1900, and has supported the national ticket of that party since save when Colonel Roosevelt led the progressive republican ticket in 1912. Mr. Slattery was elected to the Senate of the Legislative Assembly of Montana in 1918, succeeding Senator Hurd in that body. He was assigned to and made chairman of the committee on insurance, also served on the judiciary, education, water rights and irrigation, towns and counties committees, the joint committee of the House and Senate in consideration of the terminal elevator matter, and he was on a special committee to investigate the state educational institutions regarding the teaching of socialism, and a member of another special committee to confer with a legislative committee of the State of Washington respecting soldiers' relief. He centered his attention upon education and the work of the judiciary committee. He helped draft terminal elevator bill, introduced a bill establishing an interest rate of 10 per cent and a chattel mortgage bill requiring a copy of the chattel mortgage to be given the mortgagor at time of execution of note. He also introduced the bill extending the time in which farmers could pay their seed loans.

Senator Slattery married in Glasgow, Montana, February 14, 1906, Miss Lear E. Humphrey, a daughter of John and Ellen Humphrey. Mrs. Slattery was born and reared in Linn County, Kansas, was liberally educated, became a teacher, and after coming to Montana in 1901 taught at Malta. She was subsequently elected the county superintendent of schools of Valley County, and served in that office for two terms, having been married during the incumbency of her second term. She is one of a family of seven children, and one of the three daughters who are living in Montana, Mrs. I. L. Brooks of Culbertson and Mrs. Harvey Booth of Glasgow being her sisters.

Senator Slattery served as chairman of the executive committee of the Red Cross Chapter of Valley County throughout the period of the war, and his chapter stood the highest of all the counties in the United States for per capita Red Cross production in the year 1918. He was a Four Minute Man during that time, was a member of the Board of Legal Advisors, and made the first speech to the departing soldiers, and he also had the honor of making the last speech to the boys who joined the colors just before the signing of the armistice.

HARRY COSNER. An old time citizen of Malta, who saw the town when it contained only three log buildings, and who for nearly thirty years has made his personal influence and activities count in the development and upbuilding of the region, Harry Cosner in many ways has led a life typical of the older west. He has never been afraid of hardships or dangers, has lived the life of the cowboy and rancher, and has filled many public offices, including a term as sheriff.

He was born in Bureau County, Illinois, January 6, 1867. His grandfather, Joseph Cosner, was a native of Pennsylvania, lived for a number of years as a farmer in Ohio, and later moved to Illinois and died near New Bedford in that state. His children were: Robert, who moved to Colusa, California, in 1852; Adam, who died at Clarks, Nebraska; Harvey, who died near Chillicothe, Missouri; Samuel, who died at Rock Island, Illinois; Joseph, who died at Clarks, Nebraska; Amanda, who became the wife of William Adams, of Clarks; Mrs. Terwilliger, who lived at Chillicothe; and two or three other sons who gave up their lives while serving as Union soldiers in the Civil war.

Another son of Joseph Cosner was William Cosner, who was a native of Ohio but in early life moved out to Illinois. When the Civil war came on he enlisted in Company I of the Twelfth Illinois Infantry. His early service was under General Grant, for two years he was a scout, and later he was with the army of General Sherman on the march to the sea, and participated in the Grand Review at Washington in the summer of 1865. He served two enlistments and all the time was a private soldier. He was never wounded, but while on scouting duty was twice captured, though both times he escaped.

Soon after the war William Cosner married Rosetta Epperson, who was born in Bureau County, Illinois, a daughter of Hezekiah and Mrs. (Heaton) Epperson. Her father came from Tennessee and settled in Bureau County in 1830. William Cosner and wife moved to Nebraska in 1882, and they continued as farmers until burdened with years, when they sold their land and retired to Clarks, Nebraska. William Cosner was a democrat and served as an official in Merrick County, Nebraska. His widow, now living at Scotts Bluff, Nebraska, is actively identified with the Congregational Church. They were the parents of four children: Harry W.; Robert L., who died at Scotts Bluff, Nebraska; Edith, wife of Clay Patterson, of Scotts Bluff; and Hazel, wife of Harry P. Johnson, of Scotts Bluff.

Harry Cosner was fifteen years of age when his parents moved out to Central Plains country of Nebraska. He acquired a country school education, and before reaching his majority left home and became a cowboy and cattle herder in Central and Western Nebraska. He herded cattle which he had gathered along the Kansas-Nebraska line, and ran them on the Loup River on the old Pawnee Indian Reservation for a share of the profits. Altogether he was on the range for twelve years. While in the business he paid his first visit to Montana in 1889 as a member of a party of six driving a herd of cattle through from Cheyenne, Wyoming, to Birch Creek on the south side of the Bear Paw Mountain. These cattle belonged to the N. L. Livestock Company and were moved into Montana to establish a new ranch for the firm. After a brief time Mr. Cosner went down into Utah and helped bring up 3,700 head of steers for the Circle C outfit, starting them from Milford, Utah, and stopping them at Malta. These were the property of the Coburn Cattle Company, whose ranch was forty-five miles southwest of Malta.

Mr. Cosner, who left the range in 1893, had already become identified with Malta in 1892. About the time Valley County was created he was chosen a county commissioner, serving four years, his colleagues being Daniel Kyle and S. P. Mitchell. Mr. Cosner was elected sheriff of the county in 1902 as successor of Sheriff Griffith. During his two years in this office there occurred a noteworthy jail break in which five men escaped, one of them being the murderer Hardy, while two others were charged with grand larceny and two with jail breaking. All but one were recaptured by Sheriff Cosner and his party of deputies, though only after a pitched battle in which two of the deputies were killed. This battle took place on Snow Creek. One of the outlaws was killed by the posse, while the other was killed by John Darnall at his ranch the next day.

After leaving this office Mr. Cosner was appointed a deputy game warden of the state, and performed the duties of that office eight years, at the same time carrying on a real estate business at Malta. A part of Malta was laid out on his homestead, and he personally supervised the sale and management of the lots on that portion of the townsite. He platted Cosner's First, Second and Third Additions to Malta and improved some of the lots himself. Mr. Cosner recalls that his first glimpse of Malta thirty years ago disclosed a little log saloon, a log store run by R. M. Trafton near the railroad bridge, and a log restaurant conducted by James Hyatt and wife close to the saloon. Since then he has witnessed the development of a thriving little city, and as a good citizen has done all he could to promote development and improvement. He served as a member of the Malta Council and as mayor of the city, and about the only public responsibility that has not been conferred upon him was as a member of the school board.

He cast his first vote for Grover Cleveland as president and his last for Woodrow Wilson in 1916, and as a democrat he frequented local and state conventions of his party in earlier days. Fraternally he is a past master of Malta Lodge of Masons, a member of Glasgow Chapter No. 57, Royal Arch Masons, and belongs to the Consistory and Shrine at Helena. During the war he was a member of the local Council of Defense and was one of the zealous workers in behalf of the bond and other sales campaigns during war times.

At Malta January 12, 1896, Mr. Cosner married Mrs. Mamie Philbrick, widow of Emery Philbrick and a daughter of William Thompson. She was born in Philadelphia March 24, 1875, and as a child came to Montana when her father brought his family to the Musselshell Country, where she grew up and was first married near Ubet. Mrs. Cosner's son Clarence enlisted and served almost two years in France as a member of the 20th Engineers.

George Thomas McGee as a mining engineer has had a busy professional career for a quarter of a century and at different times has been connected with mining interests in nearly all the western states. He first came to Montana in 1897, and for a number of years has been a mine manager, with home in Helena since 1910.

Mr. McGee was born at Jackson, Michigan, March 10, 1869. Both his father and grandfather were able lawyers. His grandfather, David McGee, moved from New York State to Michigan in pioneer times and practiced for a number of years at Jackson. Melville McGee was born at Bolton, New York, in 1828, and was a boy when his parents settled in Jackson, Michigan. He was reared and educated there, and became prominent as a lawyer and public official. For several terms he was probate judge of Jackson County. He was a republican and a member of the Congregational Church, and he died at Jackson in 1908. His wife was Charlotte Anne King, who was born in Lima, New York, in 1832, and died at Jackson, Michigan, in 1906. All of their six sons proved able men in business and professions. Charles King, the oldest, for many years was identified with manufacturing at Ann Arbor, Michigan, but is now living retired in Pasadena, California; Edward, a Jackson business man, died in that city in 1891. William F. is a manufacturer of Jackson. The fourth is George Thomas. Albert M. is in the life insurance business at Jackson and is a past master of Jackson Lodge of Masons. Harry Stowe is a graduate in medicine of the University of Michigan, a member of the Psi Upsilon College Fraternity and is now practicing as a physician and surgeon at Douglas, Arizona.

George Thomas McGee graduated from the Jackson High School in 1888 and in 1895 received the degree Bachelor of Science in Civil Engineering from the University of Michigan. While in University he was a member of the Theta Delta Chi fraternity. Before receiving his degree he had acquired considerable practical experience in civil engineering. From 1892 to 1895 he was employed on the survey and construction of the Illinois and Mississippi Canal, with headquarters at Milan and Sterling, Illinois. After graduation he went to Leadville, Colorado, being employed in the Moffet-Smith mines and remaining there until the summer of 1896, when the great mining strike occurred. Following that until 1897 he was employed as a mining engineer by the Dalamar Gold Mining Company at Delamar, Nevada, and in September 1897, came to Butte, Montana. The Anaconda Copper Mining Company employed him as a mine surveyor until the summer of 1898. Mr. McGee spent nearly two years abroad, and for a time was employed as a mining engineer at the Great Boulder Perseverance mine at Kalgoorlie, Australia. He returned to the United States by way of England, visited the Paris Exposition in France, and reached this country in the summer of 1900. After a brief period of employment engaged in surveying interurban lines between Jackson and Detroit, Michigan, he returned to Butte in the fall of 1900 and again entered the service of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company as mining engineer. He was one of the first employed by that company in its newly created geological department. After two years he was appointed assistant superintendent of the Anaconda group of mines including the Anaconda, Neversweat and St. Lawrence mines. That was his work for two years, and the following two years he was superintendent of the Gagnon mine, and after that was manager of the Butte Copper Exploration Company until June, 1907.

Since September, 1907, Mr. McGee has been manager for the Barnes-King Development Company. He handled its mining interests at Kendall, Montana, until the mine was shut down in 1910. With the same company he was examiner of mining properties with headquarters at Helena from 1910 to 1912, having established his permanent home at Helena in the former year. In 1912 the Barnes-King Company purchased the North Moccasin Mine and resumed operations, and Mr. McGee has since been manager of that property at Kendall. During the following three years the same interests acquired the Gloster mine and the Shannon mine at Marysville, and Mr. McGee has the management also of these gold properties.

He resides at 2005 Jerome Place, Helena. He is widely known over Montana as a skilled authority in all branches of mining and is vice president of the Montana Society of Engineers and a member of the American Society of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers. He is a republican and a member of the Montana Club.

In June, 1901, at Chicago, he married Miss Margaret Zimmerman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John S. Zimmerman, residents of St. Louis. Mr. Zimmerman was for many years connected with the Chicago Gas Light and Coke Company. Mrs. McGee was educated in the University of Michigan and took the library course at the Pratt Institute in New York. To their marriage have been born four children: Margaret Anne, born in September, 1903; Donald B., born in June, 1905; Mary P., born in May, 1907; and John A., born in January, 1910.

Perry James Moore, who since the early seventies has been a prominent rancher in the vicinity of Twodot, is a real Montana pioneer, having come to the territory when its chief interests were mining, in the spring of 1866.

He was at that time an ex-Confederate veteran, and had given his service cheerfully for three years of the long and hard struggle between the North and the South. He was born at Shelbyville, Missouri, May 8, 1844, son of John W. and Eleanor (Holliday) Moore. Both the Moore and Holliday families have been prominently represented in Montana since early days. Perry J. Moore grew up on his father's farm, acquired a country school education in Missouri, and in May, 1862, at the age of eighteen, enlisted in Colonel Porter's regiment. His brother John T., who also became a prominent Montanan, was a member of the same regiment. After the defeat and disbursal of the Confederate forces in northern Missouri, Perry J. Moore, his brother John and a companion started south through Kentucky and after many baffling delays and roundabout travel passed through the Federal territory and rejoined the Confederate command under General Bragg, becoming members of the Ninth Kentucky Mounted Infantry under Col. W. C. P. Breckenridge. While the Federal forces were laying siege to Chattanooga Mr. Moore was ill with typhoid fever in a hospital in Georgia. He rejoined his command in time to take part in the battle of Missionary Ridge, and during the winter of 1863-64 was shot in the leg and again spent several weeks in the hospital. In the spring of 1864 he came under the command of the forces led by General Wheeler and General Johnston and was in the hundred day fighting from Chickamauga to Atlanta, and also in the concluding campaigns in the Carolinas. He was one of the escort for President Davis and his cabinet, and for many years retained a dollar of Confederate currency given him as pay for that service.

The war over Mr. Moore returned to Missouri and in July, 1865, engaged to drive an ox team from Nebraska City to Denver. The winter was spent in Denver and in 1866 he came on to Montana. His first destination in the territory was Bannack, from there he went to Last Chance and then to Diamond City. In association with his brothers John and Sanford he engaged in contracting, employing a number of teams and men in getting out and hauling timber for the mines. After about two years Mr. Moore removed to Smith River Valley and in partnership with his brothers bought a saw mill and furnished lumber to Fort Logan. He was one of the first arrivals at White Sulphur Springs when that town was founded. He and his brother John owned and operated a ranch in the Smith River Valley, twenty-five miles from White Sulphur Springs. Mr. Moore in 1878 came to the present site of Twodot, taking up a homestead of 160 acres, and has lived in that locality for over forty years. He developed his holdings until he now owns 12,000 acres, and is one of the leading land owners and for many years was one of the most prominent sheep men in that section of Montana. His ranch has been devoted to hay, grain, cattle and sheep, and his home is still on the ranch. In recent years he has practically retired, turning the management of the ranch over to his sons, and has spent much of his time in California.

Mr. Moore was elected on the democratic ticket to the Territorial Legislature in 1885, representing Meagher County. He also served as school trustee at Twodot for many years. He is a past master of Diamond City Lodge of Masons at White Sulphur Springs, a member of Harlowton Chapter No. 22, Royal Arch Masons, and belongs to Loyal Lodge No. 27, Knights of Pythias, at Twodot. He is also a stockholder in the State Bank of Twodot.

August 17, 1881, Mr. Moore married Miss Nellie Robertson, who was born in 1859 at Prescott, Ontario. Her father, George F. Robertson, came to Canada from Scotland. Perry J. Moore and wife had four children. Nellie, the oldest, now assistant cashier in the State Bank of Twodot, is the widow of Dr. H. B. Tice, who was a physician and surgeon in that town. The two sons are Perry James, Jr., and George Fulton. The other daughter, Margaret, still lives with her parents.

George Fulton Moore, the youngest of the family, was born at White Sulphur Springs May 15, 1894, and was educated in the public schools of Twodot, attended the Shattuck Military Academy at Faribault, Minnesota, one year, and completed his education in the College of Montana at Deer Lodge. Leaving school in 1914, he began assisting his father on the home ranch and in 1916 he and his brother Perry leased the ranch, and during the past four years have maintained it at the same high state of efficiency that characterized their father's administration. They are extensively engaged in sheep and cattle raising. George F. Moore is a democrat in politics and fraternally is affiliated with Musselshell Lodge No. 69, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons at Harlowton, Harlowton Chapter No. 22, Royal Arch Masons, Lewiston Lodge No. 456 of the Elks, and Loyal Lodge No. 27, Knights of Pythias. February 4, 1920, at Billings, he married Miss Charlotte Coleman. Her parents, Charles H. and Josie May (Brown) Coleman, are residents of Judith Gap, Montana. Her father is in the real estate business and is also town marshal. Mrs. Moore finished her education in the Billings Polytechnic Institute.

William M. Rhodes. While his ranch and farm adjoining Sheridan is by no means one of the largest in the state, its pure bred sheep and cattle have given William M. Rhodes a reputation that is completely state wide. He is one of an increasing number of men in Montana who have found the pure bred livestock business profitable, satisfactory and more reliable than the large scale production practiced on the old range, which is now rapidly disappearing.

Mr. Rhodes was born at Marshalltown in Marshall County, Iowa, August 16, 1871. His paternal ancestors came from Engand and were early settlers in New York State. His father, I. N. Rhodes, was born in New York State in 1835, was reared there, was married at Grinell, Iowa, and for many years was a successful merchant at Marshalltown. Since 1876 he has lived at Azusa, California, was a merchant and orange grower, but sold his grove in 1918 and is now retired. He is a republican and a member of the Presbyterian Church. I. N. Rhodes married Miss Jennie Fisk, who was born at Three Rivers, Michigan, in 1846. She died at Sheridan, Montana, in 1909. She was the mother of two children, Mabel and William M. The former is the wife of Zebulon J. Cheney, a farmer at Twin Bridges, Montana.

William M. Rhodes acquired his early education in the public schools of Marshalltown, Iowa. When his mother brought him to Sheridan, Montana, he entered the public schools there and also attended a normal school for two years at Twin Bridges. In 1889, his education completed, he became a ranch hand, and in 1892 engaged in the livery business at Twin Bridges. He first became interested in a practical way in the sheep business in 1899. After following it for three years he sold his flocks and then spent two years in the grocery trade at Butte. Returning to Twin Bridges, he resumed the sheep industry, caring for his flocks on the ranges. Gradually as the range has been diminished he has concentrated his business by eliminating his common stock and specializing in pure bred Hampshire sheep and Scotch Shorthorn cattle. His entire industry is now confined to his home farm and ranch, consisting of 330 acres. This ranch comes up to the city limits of Sheridan on the west, his home and ranch headquarters being half a mile west of town. Much of his land is irrigated. His Shorthorn cattle and Hampshire sheep serve to advertise this ranch all over the state, and much of his stock is sold for breeding purposes to ranchers.

Mr. Rhodes is a republican in politics. In 1903 he married Miss Mabel Tout, a daughter of Sylvanus and Sarah Tout, her mother being now deceased. Her father is a resident of Butte and an employe of the Short Line Railway. Mr. and Mrs. Rhodes have three children: Vere, born April 11, 1904; Meredith, born May 21, 1906; and Mabel, born December 9, 1913.

Scott K. Cassill is cashier of the First State Bank of Ovando, a bank in which his father, C. H. Cassill, bought the controlling interest in 1916 and is president.

C. H. Cassill, widely known as a prominent figure in banking and politics in several of the northwestern states, is now a resident of Spokane, Washington. He was born at Humboldt, Iowa, in 1868, a son of Alexander B. Cassill, a native of Ireland. Alexander Cassill came to America when a young man, was a pioneer farmer in Iowa, and during the Civil war served with an Iowa regiment of cavalry all through the period of hostilities. He died at Garner, Iowa, in 1898.

C. H. Cassill was reared at Garner and as a young man went to Hudson in Lincoln County, South Dakota, where he was married and where he was cashier of the Hudson State Bank. Later he was cashier of the Farmers State Bank at Canton in Lincoln County, and lived there until he removed to Spokane in 1909. At Sioux Falls, South Dakota, he was vice president of the Sioux Falls Savings Bank, and in Spokane is extensively engaged in the real estate business. While in South Dakota he represented Lincoln County in the Senate, was state treasurer of South Dakota under the administration of Governor Coe I. Crawford, and has many times thrown his influence in behalf of progressive movements in northwestern politics. He is a progressive republican, is an active member of the Congregational Church, and is affiliated with Hudson Lodge of Masons, is a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason, a member of the Scottish Rite Consistory at Yankton, South Dakota, and the Sioux Falls Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is a past grand chancellor commander for the State of South Dakota in the Knights of Pythias and also a member of the Woodmen of the World.

C. H. Cassill bought a controlling interest in the Bank at Ovando in 1916, and has since been its president. This bank was established under a state charter in 1919. Anton Jacobsen is the vice president, while S. K. Cassill is cashier and C. H. Cassill, Jr., assistant cashier. The bank has a capital of $20,000, surplus and profits of $5,000 and its deposits aggregate $110,000. C. H. Cassill, Sr., also served as a member of the State Guards in South Dakota for a number of years. He married Louella Brown, who was born in Iowa in 1869. Scott K. is the oldest of their three sons. C. H. Cassill, Jr., born June 14, 1900, was educated in the public schools of Canton, South Dakota, graduated from the Lewis & Clark High School of Spokane in 1918, and had charge of the Bank at Ovando while his older brother was in the army during the World war. He is now in his freshman year in the University of Washington at Seattle. Lorain, the youngest of the family, was born October 21, 1902, and is in the junior class of the Lewis & Clark High School at Spokane.

Scott K. Cassill was born at Hudson, South Dakota, September 12, 1896, and was educated in the public schools of South Dakota and at Spokane, graduating from the Lewis & Clark High School in 1914. For one year he was a student in Cornell University in New York, and while there was a member of the Phi Delta Theta college fraternity. He began his banking career in 1915 as collector in the Exchange National Bank of Spokane, was promoted to assistant paying teller, and in 1916 became cashier of the First State Bank of Ovando. He is a republican, a member of the Congregational Church and is affiliated with Missoula Lodge No. 13 of the Masonic order, with the Helena Scottish Rite Bodies and the Helena Temple of the Mystic Shrine. Mr. Cassill, who is unmarried, enlisted in the World war in July, 1918, was in training in Seattle, Washington, and later assigned to the radio department. He made one trip overseas before the signing of the armistice, and was mustered out early in 1919.

Herbert A. Maillet, M. D., is one of the distinguished men of his calling whose success as a specialist in diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat has not only gained him fame but brought relief to many who otherwise might not have been helped. Both as a specialist and also as a physician and surgeon Doctor Maillet is numbered among the most representative professional men of Butte, where he maintains his headquarters.

Herbert A. Maillet was born in Burnt Fork, Montana, on April 8, 1877, a son of Louis R. Maillet. Doctor Maillet's great-grandparents emigrated from Lyons, France, to Quebec, Canada, in the early years of the last century. Louis R. Maillet was born at Saint Dennis, not far from Montreal, Canada, in 1834, and he died at Montreal, Canada, in 1906. Leaving home when he was fourteen years old, he came to the United States and in 1849 went to Saint Louis and Saint Joseph, Missouri, and from that state in 1851 went on into the Northwest, becoming a trader for the Hudson Bay Company at old Fort Hall, and also at The Dalles in the Bitter Root country, Montana, as well as other then famous trading posts. Finally he went to live at The Hump, which was located between German Gulch and Silver Bow in Deer Lodge County, where he held many important public positions. Subsequently he moved to Burnt Fork, Montana, and from thence to Butte, but at last returned to Canada. He was one of the pioneers of Montana and the whole Northwest, and participated in many of the early undertakings, among other things driving cattle from Salt Lake City, Utah, to the Coast, and operating extensively during the early days in the mining fields of Alder Gulch, Virginia City and Bannock. Louis R. Maillet had the following children: Henry, who is a mining assayer of Butte; Doctor Maillet, who was the second in order of birth; Claude, who died at Montreal, Canada, when twenty-one years old; and Stella, who married Lawrence Bourgois, of Saint Hyacinthe, Canada, a merchant, died in 1919 of the influenza.

Doctor Maillet attended the public schools of Butte, a commercial college in Canada, and then entered Saint Mary's College of Montreal, Canada, from which he was graduated in 1899 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Following that he matriculated in the University of Laval, Montreal, Canada, from which he was graduated in 1902 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. In 1903 Doctor Maillet went to France and took a post graduate medical course at the "Faculty of Paris" University, and was connected with various hospitals, including the Saint Joseph's, the Hotel Dieu and the Hotel Saint Antoine. Doctor Maillet while in Paris was the first assistant of Doctor Chatellier in Saint Joseph's Hospital, who at that time was professor of diseases of the ear, nose and throat and known all over Europe and the United States for his knowledge of his profession and his writings on these special subjects. Doctor Maillet is an all round athlete and while at Montreal held the record for the 100-yard dash as a member of the National Club of that city. He played in championship games of la crosse with the Nationals against the old Shamrocks and won the championship with his team in 1901 and 1903. His record as a hockey player has gained him considerable reputation, and he organized teams for playing this game at Butte, and brought them into first class place.

After Doctor Maillet completed his studies at Paris he took an extended tour all over Europe and visited all of the leading hospitals. Returning to the United States in 1906, he established himself in practice at Butte, and has developed into the leading specialist in diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat in Montana. His offices are at Nos. 316 to 322 Phoenix Building, and his residence is at No. 907 West Porphyry Street, he owning the latter. In addition to his practice Doctor Maillet is interested in mining.

A democrat of some prominence, Doctor Maillet has served as health official of Silver Bow County. He belongs to the Roman Catholic Church, his family supporting its creed as far back as there is any record of them. Butte Council No. 668, Knights of Columbus, has him as a member, and he has been made by it a Fourth Degree Knight. He also belongs to the Sons and Daughters of Montana Pioneers and was one of its first presidents, the Silver Bow Club, the Silver Bow Country Club, the Butte Gun Club, Butte Lodge No. 240, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Butte Hunting Club.

In 1907 Doctor Maillet was married at Saint Hyacinthe, Canada, to Miss Elvina Richer, born at Sherbrook, Province of Quebec, Canada, and graduated from the college of that city. Doctor and Mrs. Maillet have the following children: Lawrence, who was born in 1910; Lucille, who was born in 1912; Madaline, who was born in 1916; Andre, who was born in 1917; and Jean, who was born on November 4, 1918.

Doctor Maillet was a volunteer during the late war for the medical corps, and devoted the majority of his time to examinations of the first, second, third and fourth contingents leaving Montana. Doctor Maillet and Dr. P. H. McCarthy were the only two physicians at the time of the great fire in the Speculator Mine who volunteered to go down into the mine and render assistance to the miners. For this instance of distinguished courage these two gentlemen were recommended by the mayor of Butte for the Carnegie medal. Neither one of these two physicians have been able to realize the extent of their bravery, both merely regarding it as part of the work demanded of them by their oath and in this modesty displaying to a somewhat unusual degree the attitude of the conscientious physician, who looks upon his calling as an obligation to render aid to the suffering no matter what it may cost him to do so, and without thought of material recompense. This brave act endeared these two physicians to the people of Montana as nothing else could have done. Whenever there is any kind of a disaster in the mines the community realizes its helplessness, and when the horrors of fire are added the distress is appalling. In this great catastrophe in 1917 at the Speculator, everyone realized that many of the miners would die of their injuries before it would be possible to raise them to the surface, but no one thought of asking a physician to risk his life to go down. It was not necessary for a request to be made. There were present in the crowd of citizens anxious to help if possible two men who did not hesitate, although death went with them on the descent, and did not leave them until they once more saw daylight, but insisted on being lowered to give of their skill, their experience, their humanity to their injured brethren. That they lived to continue their work of healing in no way minimizes the supreme bravery of their action, and it is doubtful if the Carnegie medal was ever bestowed upon men more deserving of the testimonial to their courage than these two physicians of Butte.

Anton I. Anderson. The merchant who brings about his success through honest, careful business methods not only benefits himself but his community, mutual trust, good will and progress being the natural results. A leading merchant and thoroughly dependable business man of Roundup, Montana, is found in Anton I. Anderson, who is president of the Roundup Elevator Company.

Anton I. Anderson was born at Lanesboro in Fillmore County, Minnesota, January 9, 1875, the fourth in a family of nine children born to Mons and Ingeborg Anderson. Both parents were born in Norway, the father in 1845 and the mother in 1843. The latter died in 1903, seven of her children surviving her. The father of Mr. Anderson came to the United States on a sailing vessel when a youth of fourteen years. He landed in the harbor of New York and from there made his way to Wisconsin, from there going to Minnesota, in which state he married and settled in Fillmore County as a farmer and stockraiser. He became a man of importance in his township, has served three terms as township assessor and in other capacities, is a member of the Lutheran Church and is a republican in his political affiliation.

Anton I. Anderson remained at home and gave his father assistance on the farm, in the meanwhile attending the public schools of Fillmore County. When twenty years old he took a complete course in Breckenridge Business College at Decorah, Iowa, his natural inclination leading him to prepare for a business rather than an agricultural life. After some preparatory mercantile experience he embarked in general merchandising at Thief River Falls, Minnesota, where he conducted a store for two years. Later he accepted the position of manager of a sawmill at Ohop, Washington, where he remained several years and then came to Roundup, Montana. On July 12, 1911, he engaged in the grain business as president of the Roundup Elevator Company, handlers of grain, feed and seeds by the sack or by the car load. This is one of the town's well managed and flourishing enterprises.

On March 6, 1907, Mr. Anderson was united in marriage to Miss Edith Prichard, who was born at Inwood in Lyon County, Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and take part also in many ways in the town's quiet social life. Mr. Anderson is well known in Masonic circles in this part of Montana, belonging to Unity Lodge No. 71, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Roundup Chapter No. 30, Royal Arch Masons. Like many other thoughtful, observing men of the times, with no desire for public office, he has not allied himself with any particular political party, feeling better satisfied to cast an independent vote.

Levi S. Wild. More than fifty years ago Levi S. Wild was manager of one of the pioneer offices of the Western Union Telegraph Company in Montana Territory. A few years ago he was retired on a pension after nearly half a century of faithful service to that corporation. Mr. Wild would indeed be an interesting figure in any convention of old time telegraphers, but more than that he is one of the few men now living who constitute a link of memory between the present and that throbbing and romantic period while the great west was being contended for by the pioneers against Indian foes and the obstacles placed by nature.

Mr. Wild was born at Albion, Michigan, March 10, 1846. His maternal ancestors came originally from Wales and were colonial settlers at the City of Salem, Massachusetts. His father, John E. Wild, was born at Salem in 1810, but spent his early life near Rochester, New York. He had some military training in the old New York State Guards. After his marriage he journeyed by wagon and team to Michigan Territory in 1834 and settled in the woods of what was then called Sheridan Township, later Albion, Michigan. He built the first frame house in the woods on the outskirts of that village. When the town was incorporated he became the first president of the board. He was a charter member of the first Masonic Lodge there, and served it as master many years. His old farm is now the site of the Malleable Iron Works at Albion. In 1865 John E. Wild moved to St. Joseph, Missouri. There he became associated with his son-in-law, B. F. Lathrop, in selling wagons as part of the equipment for the caravans outfitting at that point for crossing the plains. He remained in business at St. Joseph until 1869, when he moved to Quincy, Illinois, and died there in June, 1870. He was a Douglas democrat, and in Calhoun County, Michigan, filled several local offices. He was paymaster for the first organization of Nationl Guards in Michigan, formed in 1836. John E. Wild married Mary Rice, who was born at Elmira, New York, in 1814. She died at Chicago in 1894. Anna, the oldest of their children, died at Lansing, Michigan, wife of B. F. Lathrop, who died at Chicago, and during the last thirty years of his life suffered blindness. Frances is the wife of Gen. R. C. Bradshaw and they live at Kansas City, Missouri. General Bradshaw distinguished himself as a Union officer during the Civil war, and was severely wounded while leading a charge in the battle of Franklin, Tennessee. Florence, a twin sister of Frances, is the wife of W. I. Midler, and they reside at Los Angeles. Mr. Midler was for forty years connected with the Pullman Car Company, and for twenty-five years of that time was general ticket agent of the company at Chicago, being retired on a full pension in 1910. Mary, living in Chicago, was first married to H. W. Darling, a lumberman who died at Kalamazoo, Michigan, and her second husband, H. W. Adams, also deceased, was a prominent Chicago architect.

Levi S. Wild was the fifth and youngest of the family. He acquired his early education at Albion, Michigan, attending Albion College there. In the local offices of the Michigan Central Railroad at Albion he learned telegraphy, and at the outbreak of the war became a regular operator. In 1863 he was sent to Chicago as an operator in the Western Union Telegraph office, then at the corner of Lake and Clark streets. In 1865 he followed his parents to St. Joseph, Missouri, where he took charge of the American Telegraph Company's office. This company in 1866 was merged with the Western Union Company, and he remained at St. Joseph until 1867.

In the spring of 1867 Mr. Wild started on an interesting journey across the plains on horse-back from St. Joseph to California with a party of young men friends. At Fort Sedgwick, Nebraska, the party was joined, and organized by the government, by a large "Bull freight" train headed for Montana for protection against hostile Indians. There were almost daily encounters with the Indians, but the party succeeded in repulsing their attacks and early in September reached Salt Lake City. There Mr. Wild left his young adventurers and continued his journey by the Wells Fargo stage as far as Cisco, California, then the terminus of the Central Pacific Railroad. On the cars of this road he proceeded to Sacramento and thence by boat to San Francisco, where for three months he was again in the service of the Western Union as a telegraph operator. From there he returned to Salt Lake City, and in November, 1867, arrived at Virginia City, Montana, where he was appointed manager of the Western Union office. He remained in Virginia City until 1869, and in those two years saw a great variety of the incidents and personalities that comprise the pioneer history of the territory. From Virginia City he returned to Salt Lake City by stage, in 1870 was again in San Francisco, and in 1872 became paymaster for Ben Holladay, doing railroad construction work in Oregon and Washington. At the beginning of the financial panic which shut down all railroad construction work in 1873 he returned to San Francisco, and then to Virginia City, Nevada, and for several years following had some varied experiences in the southern states and for a time was in the employ of the Pullman Car Company at Chicago. In 1880 he returned to the mountains, this time at Denver, later at Ogden, and on November 10, 1886, Mr. Wild arrived at Butte, the city which has remained his home and the center of his affections for over thirty years. For over a quarter of a century Mr. Wild continued as manager of the Western Union Telegraph office at Butte. Following this for two years he was commercial manager for the state of Montana, and in 1916 retired with a well deserved pension.

Mr. Wild enjoys the comforts of a modern home at 725 West Granite Street. Politically he has always been identified with the republican party. He is a member of the Royal Arcanum and the National Union, and is affiliated with the Silver Bow Club and the Butte Young Men's Christian Association.

December 26, 1886, at Butte, Mr. Wild married Miss Pauline Bryan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Milton E. Bryan. Her parents are now deceased. Her father was a pioneer of St. Joseph, Missouri and Wathena, Kansas, across the Missouri River from St. Joseph. Mrs. Wild graduated from a college at Columbia, Missouri. She is a sister of Mrs. Bryan Irvine, who became a resident of Butte during the late seventies.

John Edgerton Wild, only son and child of Mr. and Mrs. Levi S. Wild, was born October 8, 1888, at Butte and graduated from the Butte High School in 1908. He then pursued the full course at the University of Wisconsin, graduating A. B. in 1912. He was a member of the Beta Theta Pi college fraternity there. In 1912, on leaving the university, he returned to Montana and began mining. He leased mines for four years at Southern Cross, and was a successful operator in the gold fields there. In 1918 he established the Peoples Fuel Company of Butte, whose plant and offices are at 1152 West Park Street. John E. Wild resides at 218 South Excelsior Street. He is an independent voter, a member of the Rotary Club, and one of the popular and enterprising young business men of the city. In 1914, at Butte, he married Miss Carrie Wharton, daughter of J. R. and Elizabeth (Noyes) Wharton, residents of Butte. Her father is manager of the Butte Electric Railway Company. Mrs. Wild is a graduate of the Montana State University at Missoula. They have three children: Elizabeth, born October 10, 1915; Jesse, Wharton, born April 17, 1918; and Pauline Bryan, born January 17, 1920.

Harry B. Hill. The honor of being one of the real pioneers of Montana belongs to Harry B. Hill, the present assessor of Sheridan County. He has witnessed and participated in its growth and development from the days of military rule to the present, and there are few men now within the borders of the commonwealth who antedate the arrival of Mr. Hill.

He came here from the east to take a position with the well known firm of T. C. Power & Brother, and entered upon his duties with this firm on May 15, 1876, at Fort Benton, at that time the general supply point for a wide scope of country in the United States and Canada. During the navigation season goods came into the locality by boat and in the winter months were hauled from Corinne, Utah, the nearest point to the Union Pacific Railroad. Indians came to the Fort from as far distant as Edmonton, Canada, and Fort Benton in those early days distributed supplies over a radius of five hundred miles. Mr. Hill was a resident of the locality long before a railroad was built into Montana, and after the coming of the Oregon Short Line, originally the Utah Northern, it became the distributing factor for the locality and boating began to decline. A small garrison of soldiers were maintained at Fort Benton to protect the Government freight that came up the river, and troops were also garrisoned at Fort Assiniboine and Fort Shaw about that time. In fact the entire region of Montana in that day was under military control, and on his way into this country Mr. Hill saw the Seventh Cavalry at Bismarck coming out to Montana to take part in quelling the Indian uprisings, and he was at Fort Benton when he received the news, a few months later, of the massacre of the command on the Little Big Horn River, which occurred on June 25, 1876.

Mr. Hill remained at Fort Benton until 1890, but he served the Powers firm only a brief period and then engaged in the hotel business as one of the proprietors of the Chouteau House. But after two years in the hotel business he became the bookkeeper for the First National Bank there, and when the bank received authority from Congress to change its charter it moved to Great Falls in 1890 and became the Northwestern National Bank, and Mr. Hill became the assistant cashier. He continued to reside in Great Falls until 1899, but in January, 1893, left the bank and followed numerous occupations during the following few years, mining being one of his chief interests. He put in two years at mining at Neihart, where he served as superintendent of the mining interests of the owners of the Queen of the Hills Mine, while at the same time he was engaged in mining on his own account at Winston, to which place he transferred his residence in 1899 and opened a general store there. Mr. Hill continued his identification with the mercantile interests of Winston until March, 1903, also following mining during all that period, and at the latter date he went to the Barnes-King mine at Kendall, Montana, and spent fifteen months there in an official capacity, returning then to Winston and opening the old mine he had formerly worked, but it proved unprofitable and he closed it down.

Mr. Hill next took up park improvement work with T. C. Power of Helena and Paul McCormick of Billings, and they constructed roads through the Yellowstone National Park until July 1, 1905, when Mr. Hill came to Mondak and accepted a clerkship in a store, and on January 1, 1906, was appointed by his old boyhood friend, Judge Hunt, as a United States commissioner. He opened his office at Mondak, and was also appointed a justice of the peace for the purpose of restoring law and order in that town, and he accomplished the work to which he was assigned to the entire satisfaction of the general public. Mr. Hill continued to serve as a commissioner until 1913, and terminating his connection with Mondak about that time he came to Plentywood.

With the organization of the County of Sheridan on March 11, 1913, he was made the county's assessor and opened his office in Plentywood. His first assessment of the county showed a valuation of a little more than $6,000,000, while in 1918 the property values had increased to $17,500,000. But before the next annual assessment the tax law was changed by the Legislature and the gross valuation of the county showed $30,000,000. This same legislative body cut off Roosevelt County, which took away about forty per cent of the taxable property, leaving a net valuation of about $9,250,000.

Mr. Hill's active participation with the political affairs of Montana began with his settlement in the state. He brought with him a conviction that the republican party should control the commonwealth, but he found Montana in the control of the democrats, of which there were two kinds, the Irish democrats and Missouri democrats. At Fort Benton Mr. Hill met Judge Hunt, whose father was secretary of the navy under Garfield's administration, and the two young westerners became the first republican delegates from Chouteau County to the territorial convention at Helena. Mr. Hill was made secretary of that convention and Col. Wilber F. Sanders was its chairman. In the session of 1899 Mr. Hill was appointed journal clerk of the Senate of Montana, and while serving with that body he participated in the liveliest session Montana has ever had, this having occurred during the Clark senatorial contest. Mr. Hill's next official service began when he entered the office of assessor of Sheridan County.

This Montana pioneer, business man and public official, Harry B. Hill, is a native son of the East, born at Great Barrington, Massachusetts, January 13, 1853, but in 1857 his parents moved to Chicago, where they located when the city contained a population of perhaps 75,000 people. His father, Henry L. Hill, was also born in Massachusetts, a descendant of pioneers of that state of English extraction. Henry L. Hill married Sophia, a daughter of Alvin Blakesley, and Harry B. Hill was the only child of their union. After about a year in Chicago he was taken by his mother to Central Mississippi, where they were located when the rebellion broke out, and while in the South Mr. Hill saw some of the inner movements of the Confederacy, and he was with his mother in Richmond, Virginia, when the first Confederate Congress convened. They ran the blockade down the Potomac River, and securing passage on a steamer at Baltimore reached home while the war was still in progress. Two half brothers of Mr. Hill were serving as Union soldiers with Illinois troops. The young lad completed his educational training in Chicago, and left the city to come into the far west and enter upon his career in Montana. The boat on which he secured passage at Bismarck left that city on the 1st day of May, 1876, and arrived at Fort Benton on the following 15th of May, the steamer's passenger list comprising chiefly army officers coming out to assume their commands.

At Spokane, Washington, February 4, 1902, Mr. Hill was married to Miss Cora Silvey, who was born near Plymouth, Indiana, June 24, 1873, a daughter of Oliver P. and Martha (Bourden) Silvey. The father was born in Richmond, Virginia, a son of Piner Silvey, an early Indiana settler. Oliver P. Silvey came to Montana and began ranching in the Bitter Root Valley, but subsequently moved to Snohomish, Washington, where he spent the remainder of his life. His widow now resides in Plymouth, Indiana. In their family were three children, Mrs. Hill, Laury A., of Bourbon, Indiana, and Mrs. Oliver Kirkwold, of Butte, Montana.

Mr. and Mrs. Hill contributed liberally to the war auxiliaries of Sheridan County, and Mrs. Hill had charge of the night class of the local Red Cross.

They are in belief and practice Episcopalians, but in the absence of an organization of that denomination in Plentywood Mrs. Hill takes an active part in the Sabbath school work of the Congregational Church, serving it as superintendent. Mr. Hill is a Master Mason at Plentywood.

D. J. McGrath. As superintendent of the Davis-Daly Colorado Mine, D. J. McGrath, of Butte, is exercising his talents as a manager of men and a director of their energies, and at the same time is proving himself a valuable adjunct to the city. He was born in Rutland county, Vermont, on January 30, 1872, a son of Patrick McGrath, born in Ireland in 1844. The paternal grandfather, Daniel McGrath, was born in Ireland in 1816, and died at Pawlet, Vermont, in 1892, where he was engaged in farming from 1845, in which year he emigrated from Ireland to the United States.

Patrick McGrath was brought to the United States in 1845 by his parents, and was reared and educated at Pawlet, Vermont. During the war between the states he enlisted as a soldier in the Seventh Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and served for four years and six months, participating in all of the engagements of his regiment. After peace was declared his regiment was sent to the Gulf of Mexico and kept there for eighteen months. Following his honorable discharge from the army Patrick McGrath returned to Pawlet and resumed his farming operations, living there until 1898, when he retired and moved to Mechanicsville, New York, where his death occurred in 1911. He was a republican and a Roman Catholic.

The maiden name of the wife of Patrick McGrath was Mary Mars, and she was born in Ireland in 1846. Mrs. McGrath survives her husband and still lives at Mechanicsville, New York. Their children were as follows: Julia, who is unmarried, lives with her mother; Margaret, who owns an apartment house and lives at Butte, Montana; D. J., whose name heads this review; William, who died in childhood; Mary, who married a Mr. Leonard, lives at Greenfield, Massachusetts, where he is employed as a locomotive engineer; Frank, who is a locomotive engineer, lives at Mechanicsville, New York; Alice, who lives with her mother; Edward, who is a miner, lives at Butte, Montana; Nora, who married James Walsh, a railroad conductor, lives at Mechanicsville, New York; Helen, who is in business at New York City, New York; Albert, who is a railroad employe, resides at Butte, Montana; and Theresa, who is married and resides at Deerfield, Massachusetts.

D. J. McGrath grew up in Rutland County, Vermont, and attended its rural schools, remaining on his father's farm until he was sixteen years old, at which time he began working by the month as a farm hand. Until he was twenty-eight years old he continued at this work, and then in 1899 came West to the Black Hills region of South Dakota and was engaged in mining for one year. In July, 1900, he came to Butte and engaged as an underground miner for the Rarus mine, owned by F. August Heinze, remaining there until the mine was taken over by the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, at which time Mr. McGraft was shift boss. He then became assistant foreman of the Rarus & Tramway Mines in 1909, but in 1911 left that company to go to Madison County, Montana, where he operated a mine in which he owned an interest. After ten months he sold this interest at an excellent profit and returned to Butte to become shift boss at the Original Mine of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, and held that position for eighteen months. Leaving that company, Mr. McGrath went to the highlands of Silver Bow County, and for eight months worked a mine on his own property, but then came back once more to Butte and was shift boss at the Tramway Mine for four months, when in 1912 he was appointed deputy state mine inspector and served as such for six years. In 1919 he resigned and became foreman of the Colorado Mine, owned by the Davis-Daly Company, and in September of that same year was promoted to the superintendency of the property. The mine is located in the rear of No. 250 East Park Street, and is a copper property. Mr. McGrath has 300 employes under his supervision and his offices are at the plant. Since coming to Butte he has bought a modern residence at 640 South Montana Street. He is a democrat in his political faith. Brought up in the Roman Catholic Church, he is a consistent member of it, and he also belongs to Butte Council No. 668, Knights of Columbus, in which he has been made a Third Degree Knight. He also belongs to Butte Aerie No. 11, Fraternal Order of Eagles. In addition to his other responsibilities Mr. McGrath discharges those connected with the directorship of the Butte Plutus Mining Company, which has control of his Highland property, now owned by Mr. McGrath and E. M. Norris of Butte. The company also owns mining property in Granite and Silver Bow Counties.

In April, 1905, Mr. McGrath was married at Butte, Montana, to Miss Margaret Sullivan, a daughter of Jerry and Honora (Shea) Sullivan. Mr. Sullivan was a miner who come to Butte in 1896, where he was engaged in his calling until his death in 1899. Mrs. Sullivan survives her husband and lives with Mr. and Mrs. McGrath. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. McGrath are as follows: Kathleen, who was born March 25, 1906; and Harold, who was born October 28, 1909.

Mr. McGrath is an upright, hard working and reliable man, who has capably discharged every duty in each position he has occupied, and won the appreciation of his associates. While his responsibilities have hitherto absorbed his time and attention, he has not overlooked his duty as a citizen, and he is careful to exert his influence in behalf of good government and to give his support to those measures and policies which in his judgment will work out for the ultimate betterment of his community and the advancement of its residents.

Rev. Francis Xavier Batens. A man of earnest convictions, strong personality and deep consecration, Rev. Francis X. Batens of Walkerville, pastor of the Saint Lawrence Catholic Church since March, 1897, entered upon his work in this locality with an enthusiasm born of a strong determination, firm convictions and noble purpose, and the work that he has accomplished within the past twenty-nine years seems almost incredible, so varied and extensive have been his labors. A native of Belgium, he was born December 11, 1866, at Haasdonck, near Antwerp. His father, Isadore Batens, a farmer by occupation, spent his entire life in the vicinity of Antwerp, Belgium, as did his wife, Nathalia (Rooman) Batens, whose birth occurred in 1822, and her death in 1896.

Francis X. Batens, the only member of the parental household to come to the United States, received his preliminary education in the Petit Seminary at Saint Nicholas, Belgium, studying in that institution eight years. Completing his philosophical and theological studies at the American College in Louvain, Belgium, he was ordained June 29, 1891, by Bishop Glorieux of Idaho, who was then visiting there. Coming to Montana on October 12, 1891, Father Batens was assigned to missions of Townsend, Boulder, Boulder Valley, White Sulphur Springs and Castle, and ministered faithfully to the people of those parishes until 1893, when he was appointed assistant pastor of Saint Patrick's Church in Butte, a position which he worthily filled for nearly four years.

On March 17, 1897, Father Batens was appointed pastor of the Saint Lawrence Catholic Church at Walkerville, with which he has since been actively identified, its rapid growth and its present high state of efficiency being almost entirely due to his untiring efforts. Father Batens established the Saint Lawrence Parish in 1897, and in October of that year the erection of the present church edifice was begun. The work progressed with such rapidity that the first mass therein was celebrated on Christmas Day, 1897, and in January, 1898, the church was dedicated by Bishop Brondel.

The church and parsonage are located at 1302 North Main Street, Walkerville, and the ground on which they and the near-by parochial school, conducted by nine Sisters, and the residence occupied by the Sisters stand, was donated by the Butte & Boston Mining Company, which is now the A. C. M. Company. Saint Lawrence parish is large, the Saint Lawrence Church administering to 450 families, all of whom, it is safe to say, are devoted to Father Batens and freely come to him for advice, counsel and consolation.

Father Batens is a member of Butte Council No. 668, Knights of Columbus, being a third degree Knight, and of the Catholic Knights of America.

W. H. Nevin. Sound in his judgment, possessing excellent business acumen and tact, W. H. Nevin, superintendent of the Anaconda Mine, holds a position of importance in the mining regions of Silver Bow County, and occupies a noteworthy place among the esteemed and highly respected citizens of Butte, his genuine interest in the promotion of municipal affairs having won him hosts of friends. A native of Nevada, he was born September 25, 1878, in Virginia City, where his father, the late Dennis Nevin, was a pioneer merchant.

Dennis Nevin was born in Ireland, County Galway, in 1843, and as a boy came to the United States, where he was reared and educated. Migrating to Nevada in early life, he became a pioneer settler of Virginia City, where he was for several years engaged in mercantile pursuits. Coming to Montana in 1882, he was one of the earlier settlers of Butte. Becoming interested in the mining industry, he was foreman of the Wakeup Jim Mine until he there met death by an accident. He was a sound democrat in politics, and a consistent member of the Roman Catholic Church. He married in Virginia City Winifred Donahue, who was born in County Galway, Ireland, in 1849, and died in Butte, Montana, in 1900. Seven children were born of their marriage, as follows: Mary, wife of P. S. Sullivan, an ex-assessor of Butte, now employed by the Anaconda Copper Mining Company; Martha, who married Thomas Sheehan, a business man of Butte, died in early womanhood, and her husband is also dead; George, a resident of Butte, is assistant master mechanic for all of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company's plants; Margaret, wife of Oscar Comstock of Butte, a miner; W. H., the subject of this sketch; Charles P., the leading plumber of Butte, and ex-mayor of the city; and Winifred, wife of John Donnelly of Butte, a traveling salesman.

Educated in the parochial and public schools of Butte, W. H. Nevin began work at the age of sixteen years with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company as an engine wiper, a position he filled for two years, and the next two years was a tool carrier. Beginning after that experience as a miner, he was promoted to shift boss in 1902 at the Anaconda Mine, and in 1911 was made assistant foreman at the same mine. Performing all the duties devolving upon him in that capacity with fidelity, Mr. Nevin was again promoted, in 1914, being advanced to his present responsible position of superintendent of the mine with which he had been so long associated and he has under his supervision 900 employes.

Religiously Mr. Nevin is a member of the Roman Catholic Church. Politically he is a steadfast democrat, and for two years, in 1913-14 served as street commissioner under his brother, C. P. Nevin, then mayor of the city. Fraternally he is a member of Butte Aerie No. 11, Order of Eagles.

Mr Nevin married at Butte, in December, 1902, Nellie Jones, daughter of Samuel and Mary Jones, residents of Butte, Mr. Jones being a well known smelterman and carpenter. Mr. and Mrs. Nevin have one child, Mildred, born February 8, 1911.

Daniel S. Williams. Some of the very notable achievements in educational progress in Montana are properly credited to the leadership, work and influence of Daniel S. Williams, who for the past eleven years has been superintendent of the city schools of Glasgow, while he has been a Montana school man altogether for seventeen years.

Mr. Williams was born in Waukesha County, Wisconsin, December 14, 1878, son of David and Mary (Price) Williams. His parents were both born in Wales, coming to the United States when young and were married in Waukesha. David Williams was about eighteen when he came to this country, and within twelve months after landing was in the Union army fighting for the preservation of the Union. He enlisted in Company C of the Twenty-eighth Wisconsin Infantry, and spent much of his time in Mississippi doing police duty along the Mississippi River, following in the wake of General Grant's army and occupying the captured territory. He was discharged at Camp Randall, Wisconsin, at the close of the war, and was never wounded nor made prisoner. With the close of the war he engaged in farming, and that was his steady occupation until he retired at the age of sixty-eight. He is still living at Waukesha and has served on the school board of his locality for a quarter of a century. He has always been a republican in politics, is one of the older members of the Grand Army of the Republic, and he and his wife have for many years been identified with the Congregational Church. Their children were: David, a farmer in Waukesha County; Sarah, wife of Humphrey Williams, of Wales, Wisconsin; John U., also an educator and superintendent of schools at Harlowton, Montana; Joseph G., a lumber merchant at Dousman, Montana; Daniel S., Arthur and Orson P., farmers at Waukesha; Eunice H., bookkeeper for the I. B. Rowell Manufacturing Company of Waukesha; and Alvin H., a farmer near Pewaukee, Wisconsin.

Daniel S. Williams grew up in the environment of a Wisconsin farm, finished his high school work at Waukesha, and attended the White Water Normal School and Carroll College in Wisconsin, graduating at the age of twenty-two. As a teacher his first work was at Ironton, Wisconsin, where he served two years as principal, and he then came to Montana in 1903, and for six years was superintendent of schools at Whitehall in Jefferson County. Mr. Williams has distinguished himself as an educator of broad vision, well informed as to the educational standards of the time, and able to work realizable ideals in school programs. While at Whitehall he instituted the high school work, and since then a three year high school has been maintained with regular graduations. He introduced practically all the equipment for high school work, and at the beginning was the only teacher of high school courses. Before he left Whitehall a science laboratory had been provided, 350 volumes had been put on the shelves of the school library, and the school was participating in the declamation and public speaking contests of the state.

On the basis of his splendid work at Whitehall Mr. Williams was called to Glasgow as successor to H. A. Brown. Up to that time, 1909, the Glasgow school had graduated only two high school students. There were two school buildings, though only four rooms of the eight room building on the south side were in use. Three teachers comprised the faculty of the high school. At the present time the high school has an attendance of 135 pupils, with a staff of ten teachers, and in 1920 there were twenty graduates, while the total of graduates to date are 111. The high school in 1909 had only the meager facilities of a library of 100 volumes, while the school library today contains 1,375 volumes. Mr. Williams has also used his influence to secure more attractive and inspiring surroundings, and the decorations on the walls of the schoolrooms alone would require more than $600 to replace or duplicate. For instruction in science the only facilities when Mr. Williams came to Glasgow were a limited equipment for physics. Now there are well equipped departments for chemistry, agriculture and biology, manual training, domestic science and domestic art, and commercial work and normal training have also been provided for. Glasgow takes much pride in its beautiful high school of twenty-one rooms, erected in 1915, at a cost of $60,000. The cost of the equipment for special work in the laboratory and science departments in the high school amounted to $3,425. The Glasgow High School is accredited in the Montana North Central Association and the Northwestern Association of colleges and secondary schools.

Among Montana high schools Glasgow has a splendid record in competitive contests. In the state high school debates Glasgow won first place two years in succession, the winner for the school being Olive McKay, who also won state honors once in the state essay contest. In the state public speaking contest Glasgow has one triumph to its credit, and for the past five years has been the northern district champion. In athletics Glasgow at the Northern Montana Track Meet of 1916 won the largest total of points. During the past five years Glasgow has been represented three times in the state basketball tournament and twice was winner of the northern district championship. Glasgow has had a representative for ten years at the state declamatory contests, and gained second place twice, and third place once and first place once. It was the first high school in the state to issue a regular weekly magazine "The Prickly Pear Weekly," whose editors are elected from the student body at the beginning of the school year. Their work is supervised by the English department of the school.

Mr. Williams cast his first vote for Robert La-Follette for governor in Wisconsin, and while he has attended some local conventions his interest has been chiefly expressed through voting as a republican. He took his Masonic degrees in North Star Lodge at Glasgow, and is a Knight Templar Mason. During a part of 1918-1919 he was chairman of the Four Minute Men, had charge of the county Red Cross campaign for membership and was county chairman of publicity in the War Savings drive.

August 6, 1901, at Ironton, Wisconsin, Mr. Williams married Miss Ida Pearson. She was born at Ironton May 20, 1874, being the seventh of the eight children of Charles and Martha (Harrison) Pearson. She is the only one of the family living outside of Wisconsin. Her parents were both born in England. She was educated in the public schools at Ironton, and was a successful and popular teacher there for eight years, until her marriage. Mrs. Williams was chairman of the inspection committee of all knitting work of the county during the war, and supervised the inspection of practically all of the stockings and sweaters made in Valley County. She is conductress of the Glasgow Chapter of the Eastern Star.

Fred C. Gabriel. Phillips is one of the newer counties of the state and as a distinct political organization it has been fortunate in its official personnel, particularly in the incumbent of the office of county attorney, Fred C. Gabriel, who has served a few months by appointment and in 1916 was the first regularly elected county attorney.

His record as county attorney speaks for itself. During the first two years in office he appeared before a jury only three times, and yet he won convictions in thirty-three cases out of thirty-six, thirty-two being on pleas of guilty. A summary of the criminal cases of the county during that period shows forty informations filed, thirty-three convictions, two acquittals and four cases pending. To explain briefly how all this came about is not easy. The readiest explanation is found in the care with which he investigates cases, involving a long search for evidence, and it was his practice to keep his automobile equipped with meat and canned goods, coffee and other equipment for camping out, so that the office of county attorney was, in fact, a migratory one and he was on the trail of evidence night and day. He never relied upon "hearsay," but sifted charges to the bottom and secured possession of real evidence when there was any. With this evidence piled up high he confronted the offender and in the majority of cases completely overwhelmed him and compelled him to enter a plea of guilty. Such systematic effort largely accounted for the fact that in two years only three men were arraigned for trial, two of them on murder charges. Mr. Gabriel's idea of the duty of county attorney is to gather all the evidence having real bearing on the particular case, and if it seems insufficient for a conviction he refuses to spend the county's money for arrest and trial. However, with a proper accumulation of evidence he does not wait the dramatic sequence of a trial, but uses it to secure confession and permit the offender to throw himself upon the mercy of the court.

Mr. Gabriel, who has been an active member of the Malta bar since 1914, was born on a farm at Watkins, New York, August 10, 1874. His father, Er Cleveland Gabriel, was also born at Watkins, New York, in November, 1849, and has spent his life on the old homestead which his grandfather, Luther Cleveland, entered from the government in pioneer days. Though equipped with a limited education, he has been a very successful farmer and a substantial citizen, and several of his children have achieved distinction in the professions and in scholarship. Er Cleveland Gabriel married Julia Price, a daughter of Ezra Price, of Orange County, New York. She died at Watkins in 1884. Her children were: Fred C., Ezra P., a farmer at Watkins; Plummer, a merchant at Odessa, New York; Ralph, a professor of economics and history at Yale University; Harry, a professor of agricultural science in Cornell University; and Ralph and Harry, both of whom were soldiers in the World war, going into the army as privates and being discharged as first lieutenants. Harry was in the Argonne drive, and received a Croix de Guerre and was cited for a distinguished service medal. Ralph was detailed to the general supervision of a camp in the quartermaster's department, and functioned in that capacity until the armistice. Incidentally it should be noted that Fred C. Gabriel was merely disqualified by age for the last draft law, but filled out his questionnaire and waived all exemptions.

Mr. Gabriel grew up on the New York farm where he was born, attended district schools, the Seminary at Starkey, New York, and for two years, 1897-98, was a student of law in the University of Michigan and finished his law studies in the Chicago Law School, graduating in 1901. He opened his office and tried his first case in South Bend, Indiana, and continued his profession there until he came to Montana. For five years he practiced alone, and then was senior member of the firm Gabriel and Hammond until he left for Montana.

Mr. Gabriel came direct to Malta from South Bend in 1914, and began his professional career among strangers. He has never formed a partnership, and his practice has been of a general nature and has involved many cases of importance in addition to those handled through his office as county attorney. Mr. Gabriel cast his first presidential vote for Major McKinley in 1896, and has never missed voting at a national election, and is still a stanch republican.

While his life has been devoted to his profession he has exercised the influence of an able lawyer to the benefit of his community. During the World war he was chairman of the Legal Advisory Board of Phillips County and also Government appeal agent. He performed the delicate and difficult duties of this office with great tact and skill and permitted no open act of sedition to mar the record of the county. Mr. Gabriel does not pose as a public speaker, yet many of his utterances before a jury and on other occasions have been widely quoted. This was particularly true of his characterization of the "slacker" in one his four-minute talks. "After the Creator had made the world," spoke Mr. Gabriel, "and all living things therein, he had a few odds and ends left over that were too mean, too contemptible and too low to put into scorpion, the skunk or the rattlesnake, so he moulded these odds and ends together and made them into the form of a human being, put a yellow streak down its back and called it a slacker."

Mr. Gabriel took his Masonic degrees in South Bend and the Scottish Rite degrees at Helena, and is a member of the Consistory and Shrine in the capital city. He also joined the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at South Bend, and is a member of the lodge at Malta. On coming to Montana he exercised his right as a homesteader on the south bench near Malta, and that homestead forms a part of a rather extensive ranch he has developed and improved. He has made it productive as a grain and stock proposition and omits no effort to encourage the substantial interests of farming in this community.

At South Bend, Indiana, August 29, 1906, Mr Gabriel married Blanche Spencer, youngest daughter of Edson and Sarah (Rensberger) Spencer. Her parents were natives of Ohio and in early life moved to Indiana and became farmers. Her father was a Union soldier during the Civil war, and he and his wife both died in South Bend. Their four daughters were: Miss Belle, of South Bend; Mrs. J. C. Bowsher, of South Bend; Mrs. Bertha Bleuler, of the same city; and Mrs. Gabriel, who was born in St. Joseph County, Indiana, July 17, 1878. She was well educated and for a time was a grade teacher in South Bend. Mr. and Mrs. Gabriel have three children, Luther, Bettie and Virginia.

ANDREW J. OLSON. The history of the Village of Froid comprises a decade, and the enterprise of Andrew J. Olson has been a factor in the community from the very beginning. His chief business has been the Froid Hardware and Implement Company, and through this business organization he has also participated actively in the surrounding agricultural development.

Mr. Olson was born in Goodhue County, Minnesota, October 8, 1874. His father was Jacob Olson, who was born in Sogn, Norway, in 1839. The grandfather was known at Jacob Olson Nesse, a farmer, his last name being given because of his residence in the community of Nesse. Jacob Olson, Jr., married in Norway Martha Nesse, daughter of Andrew Anderson, a farmer of the Village of Nesse. Jacob brought his wife to the United States in 1873, first locating in Goodhue County, Minnesota, later going to Fargo, North Dakota, where he rented land two years, and then returned to the Thirteen Towns community of Polk County, Minnesota, where he bought a homestead relinquishment and proved it up and developed a good farm. He died at his country home from blood poisining in 1914. After naturalization he voted as a republican, was a Lutheran, and was known as an industrious citizen and good neighbor. His widow is still living and their children are: Ole, of Fosston, Minnesota; Andrew; Mrs. Susan Nelson, of Bagley, Minnesota; Elling, whose career is briefly noted below; Hans, of Scobey, Montana; Louis, of Fosston; and Sina, wife of Albert Hoialm, of Clearbrook, Minnesota.

Andrew J. Olson was reared in Polk County, Minnesota, spent his life on his father's farm until his majority, and had a country school education. On leaving home he joined his brother Elling and Mr. Louis Lohn in a saw mill industry at Lengby in Polk County. He went into that business with his personal confidence as his chief capital, and for four years he and the other members of the firm prospered.

Mr. Olson left Minnesota, and in company with his brother Elling came to Froid in April, 1910. They began business as the Froid Hardware and Implement Company, but after less than a year his brother Elling died and was succeeded in the firm by Dwight Lohn, son of their former partner in the saw mill.

The Froid Hardware & Implement Company put in its original stock of shelf hardware in a store room 16 by 32 feet. In the summer of the same year they built the present business house, 48 by 70 feet, with additional room for storage and warehouse, and there is also an implement shed 40 by 76 feet. The firm has been conservative and has expanded its business as rapidly as the trade, the development of the country and their resources justified, and it is now a department business, the four chief departments being furniture, hardware implements and harness.

Mr. Olson has also done a part as a farmer in this region since 1911. The firm owns eleven quarter sections in Sheridan County near Homestead. This ground was developed from the grass roots, and the company have operated etxensively as wheat and flax growers. Eight crops have been planted and something has been harvested every year, not even the disastrous season of 1919 registering a total failure. The year 1912 was the premier season, when they harvested twenty-eight bushels of wheat as an acre average from 540 acres, and eighteen bushels to the acre of flax from 400 acres. In 1919, after partial destruction by hail, wheat threshed about three bushels and a somewhat smaller quantity of flax was obtained.

Though very busy with his private affairs Mr. Olson has cooperated with his fellow citizens in community affairs, and since the incorporation of Froid has been a member of its council and also a member of the school board. He cast his first presidential vote for Major McKinley in 1896 and is a republican.

In Polk County, Minnesota, July 2, 1900, he married Miss Clara Haaglund. She was born at Sacred Heart, Minnesota, May 9, 1881. Her father Mr. Lerud married Mary Johanson, and Clara was his only child. The widowed mother subsequently became the wife of Nels Haaglund, and Mrs. Olson took that family name. Nine children have been born into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Olson, named Clarence J., Arthur M., Gladys L., Hardin L., Stella J., Clifford A., Elmer J., Marion C. and Florence A.

MELZER N. STEVENS. Fealty to facts in the analyzation of the character of a citizen of the type of Melzer N. Stevens, of Harlowton, Meagher County, is all that is required to make a biographical sketch interesting to those who have at heart the good name of the community, because it is the honorable reputation of the man of standing and affairs more than any other consideration that gives character and stability to the body politic and makes the true glory of a city, community or state revered at home and respected in other and distant localities. In the broad light which things of good report ever invite the name and character of Mr. Stevens stand revealed and secure and, though of modest deemeanor, with no ambition to distinguish himself in public position, his career has been signally honorable, and it may be studied with profit by the youth entering upon his life work.

Melzer N. Stevens was born on his father's farm in Waldo County, Maine, June 12, 1862, and is the son of Shelito and Mary (Reckleiff) Stevens. Both parents were also natives of Waldo County, the former born in 1830 and the latter in 1840, and both are deceased, the father dying in 1914, at the age of eighty-four years and the mother in 1886, at the age of forty-six years. Of the ten children born to these worthy parents six are now living. Shelito Stevens taught school in his younger days, but eventually engaged in the lumber business. He hewed a farm out of the wilderness in Waldo County and became a successful general farmer and stock raiser. He was a lover of horses and owned a number of standard bred animals, and also blooded cattle. He was a Quaker in his religious belief and a democrat in politics.

Melzer N. Stevens spent his boyhood days on the paternal farmstead, working for his father in summer and attending school in wintertime. He was intensely ambitious to make his own way, however, and at the age of seventeen years he left home and took employment in a cotton mill at Waterville, Maine, where he remained about three years. In April, 1884, he came to Montana and found employment on a ranch, where he remained until 1890. He then engaged in the sheep business in Meagher County, under the firm name of Berry & Stevens, of which Mr. Stevens was the active manager. They were prospered in their enterprise, and in 1906 the business was reorganized as the Winnecook Ranch Company, of which Mr. Stevens is president. This company owns 18,000 acres, which are devoted to the breeding and raising of live stock, and it is considered one of the most important live stock ranches in southern Montana. In 1906 Mr. Stevens assisted in the organiaztion of the Harlowton State Bank, and was elected its president. In April, 1917, the banking business was reorganized under the name of the Continental Bank and Trust Company, and again Mr. Stevens was chosen president, and still remains at the head of this well-known institution. He is also financially interested in several other banks. Mr. Stevens is in the fullest sense of the term a progressive, virile, self-made American citizen, thoroughly in harmony with the spirit of the advanced age in which he lives. He made good use of his opportunities and prospered from year to year, conducting all business matters carefully and systematically, and in all his acts displaying an aptitude for successful management.

On July 31, 1892, Mr. Stevens was united in marriage with Therese M. Clark, who was born in Waldo County, Maine, the daughter of Dudley and Lucy (Warren) Clark, both of whom also were natives of the old Pine Tree State. On the maternal side she was a direct descendant from General Warren of Revolutionary war fame. These parents had eleven children, of whom nine are living. Dudley Clark spent practically all his life in Maine, excepting during the great gold excitement in California in 1849, during which period he spent some time in the Golden State, but eventually returned to his old home farm in Maine, where he spent the remainder of his days.

To Mr. and Mrs. Stevens have been born two sons, Irving T. and Richard W. Irving secured a good education in the public schools and then entered the Montana State College at Bozeman. In June, 1918, he enlisted in the military service of his country. He was first sent to Fort George Wright, whence he was transferred to Fort Riley and then to Camp Lee. After the signing of the armistice he received his discharge at Fort Logan, and is now a student in the Montana Agricultural College at Bozeman. Richard W. is a student in the high school at Harlowton.

Politically Mr. Stevens is a republican and has taken a laudable interest in public affairs. Though not a seeker after office, he was elected a representative to the Legislature in 1915 and served as a member of the ninth session. Fraternally he is a member of Star of the West Lodge No. 38, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Unity, Maine; Waterville Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, at Waterville, Maine; Waterville Commandery, Knights Templar, at Waterville; Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Helena, Montana. Personally Mr. Stevens is a most companionable gentleman and has a host of warm and admiring friends.

MISS GRACE MARIE LEARY, principal of the high school at Polson, has done some splendid work as an educator in Montana, is a graduate of the State University, and is a member of one of Montana's prominent families.

She was born at Merrill, Wisconsin, a daughter of James Edward and Margaret (Rousseau) Leary. Through her mother she is of French ancestry. She was one of the younger of five children, and in 1906 came with her parents to Montana. Her father located at Libby, where he engaged in the lumber and mining industry. He and a partner operated the first saw mill at Libby. James E. Leary served two terms as a member of the State Senate of Montana, and was a leader in business and public affairs.

Grace M. Leary graduated with honors from the Libby High School in 1911, and soon afterward entered the University of Montana at Missoula, where she took the full four years' course, while Dr. E. B. Craighead was president of the university. She received her Bachelor of Arts degree in 1915, and while at university was a member of the local chapter of Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority. After graduating Miss Leary remained at home about a year, and spent much of her time in outdoor activities. She is a typical western young woman, and finds both pleasure and relaxation in the mountains and valleys of the Treasure State. For three years she was teacher of English in the Lincoln County High School at Eureka, and in 1919 entered upon her present duties as principal of the high school at Polson. She has proved her ability as a school administrator, and possesses the qualifications of scholarship and the other qualities that make up the successful educator. Miss Leary was reared in a home of Christian influences and is a member of the Catholic Church.

James S. Egan. Many of the more active and prosperous business men of Silver Bow County are identified with the great mining interests of the state, prominent among the number being James S. Egan, of Centerville, the efficient superintendent of the Mountain Consolidated Mine, one of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company's properties. A son of John F. Egan, he was born December 21, 1875, in Virginia City, Nevada, where his parents were pioneer settlers.

Born in County Galway, Ireland, in 1833, John F. Egan came to the United States in 1844, a bright, active lad of eleven years, and as soon as able to work for wages engaged in farming in New York State. Not content with tilling the soil, he migrated to California when a young man, but not finding congenial employment soon made his way to Virginia City, Nevada, locating there in 18—, in early pioneer days. Becoming familiar with pick and shovel, he was engaged in mining and prospecting throughout Nevada, and for fifteen years was superintendent of the Andes Mine. A clear-headed, brainy man, possessing marked executive and business ability, he became an influential member of the republican party and very prominent in civic and political affairs. He served as a member of the Nevada State Legislature a number of terms, and at the time of his death, April 14, 1894, was serving as state treasurer, a responsible position which he assumed January 1, 1890, under the administration of Governor Colcord, his death occurring a few months before the expiration, on December 31, 1894, of his term of service. He was a member of the Roman Catholic Church, and belonged to the Catholic Knights of America.

John F. Egan married in 1866, in Virginia City, Nevada, Mary E. Bride, who was born in County Cork, Ireland, in 1841, and having been brought by an aunt to this country when a child was reared and educated in Boston, Massachusetts. She died at a comparatively early age, her death occurring in Nevada, at Virginia City, in September, 1892. Seven children were born of their union, as follows: Mary, wife of Richard Galligan, of Butte, a miner at the Montain Consolidated Mine; John, of Butte, employed as a stationary engineer with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company; Annie, who died in infancy; Lillian, wife of George Wright, a prominent business man of Virginia City, Nevada; James S., the special subject of this sketch; and Edward and Gertrude, who died in infancy.

Acquiring his rudimentary education in the parochial schools of his native city, James S. Egan entered the Nevada State University at Reno when a boy of fifteen years, and there took a business course of two years, and a two years' course in mining engineering, continuing his studies in that institution for a year and a half after the death of his father, when he was forced to leave in order to earn his own living. Locating in Butte on April 14, 1896, Mr. Egan began as a miner with the Miles-Finlen Company at the Ramsdell-Parrot Mine, where for four years he was time keeper, and was afterward at the Old Parrot Mine until it was shut down. Returning to the Ramsdell-Parrot Mine, he continued with it until that, too, was shut down. For a year thereafter he was in the employ of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company as bookkeeper in its hardware department. Subsequently beginning as a miner at the Speculator Mine, he was soon promoted to blacksmith helper, a position that he held two years. Entering then the employ of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, he began work as a common miner in the Bell Mine, and was subsequently promoted, and for sixteen months served as assistant mining engineer. Being made mining engineer at the Mountain Consolidated Mine in 1909, Mr. Egan filled the position to the entire satisfaction of all concerned until February 14, 1919, when he was promoted to his present responsible position as superintendent of this mine, having under his supervision 500 employes. This mine is situated north of Butte, in the Town of Centerville, and on the property of the mine owners Mr. Egan has his residence and offices.

He married June 7, 1899, in Butte, Mary T. Leary, a daughter of John and Mary (Brennan) Leary, neither of whom are now living. Her father, a native of Massachusetts, was a pioneer of Virginia City, Nevada, where he was for many years employed as a foundry moulder. Mr. and Mrs. Egan became the parents of four children, namely: Mary, born in March, 1900, was graduated from the Butte High School, and is now a sophomore at the State Agricultural College in Bozeman; Alice died at the age of thirteen years; John died in infancy; and James Harold was born December 7, 1906.

Religiously Mr. Egan is a member of the Roman Catholic Church. Politically he invariably supports the principles of the democratic party. Fraternally he is a member of Butte Council No. 668, Knights of Columbus, and is a fourth degree Knight.

Edward M. Gans, M. D. As a physician, surgeon and banker Doctor Gans has been a prominent citizen of Judith Gap for a number of years, and added a further distinction by more than a year of overseas duty as an officer of the Medical Reserve Corps.

Doctor Gans was born at St. Cloud, Minnesota, December 27, 1875. His father, Mathias Gans, of German ancestry, was born at Treves, Province of Loraine, in 1829. He was reared in his native city and was very liberally educated. He was a skilled musician, and became prominent in the early life and affairs of the State of Minnesota, where he lived for many years. He soon acquired an apt knowledge of the English language after coming to this country in young manhood. For one winter he worked in the South, and then pioneered to Stearns County, Minnesota. For a number of years he taught school in Minnesota, during the '70s served for eight years as county treasurer of Stearns County, and after that lived quietly on a farm at St. Cloud, where he died in 1906. He was a democrat in politics, and had made prominent friends in the public affairs of Minnesota. He was a Catholic in religion. At St. Joseph, Stearns County, he married Mary Eva Pung. She was also born near Treves, Loraine, in 1839, and was five years of age when her father, Arnold Pung, came to America and settled at Fond du Lac, Wisconsin. Arnold Pung became a Wisconsin farmer and died at St. Joseph, Minnesota, at the age of eighty-six. Mrs. Mathias Gans is still living at St. Cloud, past eighty years of age. She and her husband had a very large family of children, thirteen of whom grew up: John, a music instructor at St. Cloud, Minnesota; Hubert, owner of a job printing establishment at St. Cloud; Joseph, who for many years has made his home at Uniontown, Washington, where he was formerly a teacher and later a rural mail carrier; Peter, a Catholic priest at Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Michael J., a druggist at Perham, Minnesota; Mary, wife of W. L. Morton, owner of a poultry farm at Watertown, Wisconsin; Edward M.; Leo P., a Doctor of Canon Law and rector at the Catholic Cathedral at St. Cloud; Nestor, a railroad man in the service of the Grand Trunk Railway at Canada; Norbert, a foreman in the Republic Iron & Steel Company's mine at Gilbert, Minnesota; Anna, unmarried and employed in a book bindery at St. Cloud; Wilhelmina, wife of E. J. Treischel, a farmer a mile south of St. Cloud; Rose, wife of Joseph Schroeder, an electrician at St. Cloud.

Doctor Gans spent his early youth in Stearns County, Minnesota, was educated in the rural schools, and then qualified and taught in similar schools in that county for three years. In 1899 he graduated from the State Normal School at St. Cloud, following which he was principal of schools at Carmen one year and another year at Clearwater, Minnesota. He then entered the medical department of the University of Minnesota at Minneapolis, and received his M. D. degree June 1, 1905. For two months he was an interne at St. Mary's Hospital in Duluth, and after that was connected with the Moore Hospital at Eveleth, Minnesota, until March 1, 1911. He practiced about a year at Dickinson, North Dakota, and in April, 1912, located at Judith Gap, where his abilities quickly gained him a profitable general practice in medicine and surgery.

Doctor Gans signed up for the service of the Medical Reserve Corps July 12th at Kalispell, and was commissioned a first lieutenant August 28, 1917. He reported for duty April 1, 1918, at the Medical Officers' Training Camp at Fort Riley, Kansas, and was sent overseas June 1, 1918, sailing from Hoboken on the 12th of June. Thenceforth the detailed record of his military service is as follows: Landed at Liverpool, England, June 23, 1918; was on duty at Base Hospital No. 3 at Monpont, France, to September 9, 1918; went to the front lines in Alsace with the First Battalion, Forty-Second Artillery, C. A. C., operating at LaChapelle and Dannemarie; after the signing of the armistice sailed from St. Nazaire, France, February 5, 1919, arriving at Newport News, Virginia, February 18th, and was mustered out at Camp Grant, Rockford, Illinois, March 5, 1919. He received a commission as captain November 11, 1918.

Doctor Gans returned to Judith Gap April 15, 1919, and at once resumed his private practice. His offices are on Main Street and his home on Meagher Avenue.

Doctor Gans has been quite active in public affairs at Judith Gap, serving as mayor three years, until he resigned to enter the army. He was also health officer of Judith Gap. Politically he is a republican and was commander of Wheatland County Post of the American Legion from the time of his return from abroad until January 1, 1920. He is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 456 of the Elks, Duluth Council No. 447 of the Knights of Columbus, and is a member of the Fergus County Medical Society, the Montana State Medical Society, which he served as third vice president, the American Medical Association, the Association of Military Surgeons, and the American Officers of the Great War. Doctor Gans is also vice president of the Security State Bank of Judith Gap and a stockholder in the State Life Insurance Company.

September 26, 1906, at Stillwater, Minnesota, he married Miss Genevieve Aurelia Wolf. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Wolf, reside at Stillwater, her father being owner of the plant of the Wolf Brewing Company. Mrs. Gans is a graduate of the Young Ladies' Seminary at St. Joseph, Minnesota, and of St. Joseph's Academy at St. Paul, where she specialized in water color painting. Doctor and Mrs. Gans have three children: Paul, born August 5, 1907; Edward, born June 10, 1909; and Genevieve Aurelia, born March 2, 1914.

Joseph B. Simpson. The development of the state of Montana from the open range of former times to the carefully cultivated ranches of today has been brought about through the indomitable energy and persistent industry of the men who had faith in their undertaking and were broad-visioned enough to know that their work would terminate successfully although they had to pass through much hardship to reach such an end. The state has always been, and will continue to be, a great cattle and sheep country, and the most successful of the operators have recognized this fact and, while experimenting with some crops, have specialized in the stock industry with very gratifying results. One of these men who is numbered among the worth-while residents of the state is Joseph B. Simpson of Gildford, one of the extensive stockmen of his region.

Joseph B. Simpson was born at Port Burwell, Ontario, Canada, September 22, 1873, a son of John and Elizabeth (Kennedy) Simpson. John Simpson was born in Birmingham, England, and died at Delaware, Ontario, Canada, in 1914, when ninety-five years of age. He and his wife were married in Canada, and they had three sons and three daughters born to them, all of whom are living. Of these Joseph B. Simpson was the second son and fourth child. The mother of these children died when Joseph B. Simpson was a small child. John Simpson was a soldier in the English army and served in the Crimean war and also in Ireland, following which he came to Canada by sailing vessel, and after landing taught music in Quebec until 1873, having been bandmaster in the army and a natural musician. In 1873 he embarked in a boot and shoe business at Lawrence Station, Canada, and continued in it until his retirement, when he moved to Delaware, Canada, and there spent his last years. All his life he was a member of the Church of England.

Joseph B. Simpson attended the schools of Canada, and early became a wage-earner, his first money being acquired herding cows and pigs, for which he was paid one dollar a month. Later he engaged as a farm hand, first receiving four dollars a month, his stipend later being increased to eight dollars per month, and finally to fifteen dollars per month. Having by this time reached the age of twenty years, in the spring of 1893, he realized that he must branch out if he intended making anything of his life, and he came into Montana. Reaching Havre, he was engaged by a sheepman as sheep herder, and for three years Mr. Simpson continued to work for him, during that period being almost completely isolated, away from railroads and civilization, practically all of the time being alone, save for now and then meeting with an Indian or two. During this time he saved his wages, and then in partnership with his brother Ernest J. he bought 1,000 head of sheep and entered upon his career as a stockman, branching out until now he buys, sells and raises sheep, cattle and horses. His magnificent ranch of 4,000 acres of his own and 4,000 additional he has leased from the United States Government is located on Milk River and Wild Horse Lake near the Canadian line, and contains Blue Joint Meadow. With the exception of about twenty-five acres in alfalfa Mr. Simpson devotes his ranch to his stock industry and is carrying on a very large and profitable business. He is a republican, but has never cared for office and confines his political labors to exercising his right of suffrage. A Mason, he belongs to Havre Lodge No. 55, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Chouteau Chapter No. 19, Royal Arch Masons; DeMolan Commandery No. 15, Knights Templar; Algeria Temple, Mystic Shrine of Helena, Montana; Havre Lodge No. 1201, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and Gildford Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In September, 1910, Mr. Simpson was united in marriage with Flora McKey, born at Medicine Hat, Canada. Mr. and Mrs. Simpson have two children, Joseph B., Jr., and Flora Bell. Having played an important part in the changes in Montana during the past quarter of a century Mr. Simpson is naturally attached to his section and a firm believer in its future. He measures up to the highest standards of citizenship and is one who holds the confidence and esteem of all with whom he is brought in contact, and is recognized as a representative man of Gildford and Havre as well as this part of Montana.

THOMAS P. STRODE. For nearly forty years Thomas P. Strode has followed his diverse interests as a stockman over many of the hills and through many of the valleys of Montana, and in his experience he has come in contact with many of the noble characters and many of the outlaws of territorial days, and has earned a place among the successful and influential citizens of the state.

Mr. Strode, whose home is at Whitlash in Hill County, was born on his grandfather's farm in Mason County, Kentucky, October 26, 1862, son of William B. and Eliza Ann (Sutton) Strode. His parents were natives of Kentucky. His grandfather, Samuel Strode, spent his life as a Kentucky farmer, and that was also the occupation of William B. Strode, who in addition became a dealer in mules, and drove a number of bands to market at Atlanta, Georgia. He conducted a livery stable at Paris in Bourbon County, Kentucky. During the war he was on the Confederate side and was a follower of the famous rebel raider, John Morgan. Some years after the war he moved to Illinois and located in the center of the corn belt in McLean County, near Bloomington, where he used his experience and capital successfully in the raising of corn, cattle and hogs, and was one of the leading cattle feeders in that section of the state. He died in Illinois in 1892, in his fifty-eighth year. He was never a seeker for public honors, being a democratic voter. His wife died in Kentucky in 1874, when a comparatively young woman. Thomas P. is the oldest of her children and the youngest, Emma, died in infancy. Olney P., the second, lost his life at the age of twenty-five during a storm in April, 1892, in the Sweet Grass Hills of Montana.

Thomas P. Strode spent his boyhood days in Kentucky, and was fourteen years of age when he left that state with his fathher and went to Illinois. He busied himself with duties on his father's farm until the fall of 1881, when he started out to see the world dependent upon his own resources. For a month or more he was in the Red River Valley of Minnesota, shocking grain and feeding a threshing machine. Returning to Minneapolis, he was a brakeman with the Minneapolis and St. Louis Railway until March, 1882, and then went hunting, spending most of the months of the year in looking for big game. In the spring of 1883 he crossed over the divide to Bozeman, Montana, traveling with mule teams. Reaching there, he bought a mule and rode it to Augusta over the Priest Pass, where he went to work on the horse ranch of China Clark. After about a year he began running a small bunch of horses of his own, but in May, 1888, traded his horses for sheep and trailed them to the Sweet Grass Hills. Mr. Strode handled the sheep business on an extensive scale until 1902, when he sold out and turned his capital and enterprise to the cattle industry. In 1910 in turn he sold his cattle and then for several years was a sheep man. In the winter of 1917 he disposed of the last of his sheep, and since then his ranch has resumed its aspect as a cattle proposition. Mr. Strode owns leases and operates about 15,000 acres of land in Hill County. Ever since 1883 he has done some farming, cultivating from forty acres upward to grain, and he is able to speak with authority on every branch of agriculture in this section of the state.

Mr. Strode has also done his part as a good citizen in his various communities. He served as a school trustee many years, is affiliated with Havre Lodge No. 55, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, with Havre Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, and with the Scottish Rite Consistory and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. Politically he is a republican.

Mr. Strode married Ella Johnson in November, 1895. She was born at Cokato, Minnesota. Six children have come into their home: Eva, who is a nurse in the Deaconess Hospital at Great Falls; Annie, who was educated in the schools of Dillon and St. Paul and for a time was a stenographer in the Security State Bank of Havre; Thomas O.; William F., who died at the age of sixteen in 1917; Edris, who also died in 1917; and George, the youngest of the family.

FRANK J. REICHEL. Few states offer better opportunities for agricultural activities than Montana, and the men of this region who have taken advantage of them have no reason to be discontented with their choice of a calling. Compared with many other sections the land is cheap, and its possibilities, especially for stock raising, unlimited, and those who are willing to work hard can be sure of ultimate success. One of the men thus awake to existing conditions is Frank J. Reichel, who is engaged in ranching and raising and selling horses twenty miles north of Havre. He was born on his father's farm in Wright County, Minnesota, September 12, 1878, a son of Jacob and Susan (Mross) Reichel. Jacob Reichel was born near Warsaw, German Poland, July 12, 1841, and his wife was born in the same place July 26, 1841. They were married in their native land on July 7, 1862, and six of their fourteen children were born before they set out for the United States in a sailing vessel in 1874, bringing with them Jacob's parents, Joseph Reichel and his wife. They landed at Baltimore, Maryland, and from there traveled west to Wright County, Minnesota, and bought eighty acres of land, to which more was later added, and on it they continued to live until 1894, when they retired and went to Waverly, Minnesota. After several years there they finally located at St. Paul, Minnesota, which is still their home. In 1912 they had the pleasure of celebrating their golden wedding anniversary, and on July 7, 1919, their children and grandchildren gathered about them in honor of their fifty-seventh anniversary. Eight of their children still survive, and of them Frank J. is the ninth in order of birth. They recall with pride what they accomplished during the early days in Minnesota when they brought a home out of the wilderness, for they were among the pioneers of that region and endured all of the hardships incident to frontier life. It has been given to them to live to see their children and grandchildren prosper and the place where they made their first home in this country develop into one of the fertile farming sections of the state. Both these excellent people are devout members of the Roman Catholic Church.

Frank J. Reichel attended the public schools of Wright County, Minnesota, until he was sixteen years old, and then came west to Havre, Montana, and was engaged in draying for about three years. For the next two years he was a hotel clerk, after which for four years he conducted a retail liquor business. Selling it, he went into a grocery business for one year, and then embarked in ranching, specializing on raising horses and developing the latter industry until he is now buying, selling and shipping very extensively, especially to the Dakotas. His ranch is located twenty miles north of Havre. While living at Havre he served as alderman from the Fourth Ward for one term, being elected on the republican ticket. The Roman Catholic Church holds his membership. He belongs to the Eagles and Knights of Columbus.

On August 15, 1910, Mr. Reichel was married to Elizabeth O'Connell, born at Houghton, Michigan, a daughter of Thomas and Mary (Sullivan) O'Connell, both natives of Ireland, who are now deceased. They were married at Houghton, Michigan, and of their ten children, nine survive, Mrs. Reichel being the third in order of birth. Mr. O'Connell came to Montana in the early '80s, engaging in mining at Marysville and being one of the pioneers miners of that region. At one time he had three claims. His wife passed away in 1905, at the age of forty-four years, and he survived her only a year, being at the time of his demise fifty years old. He belonged to the Ancient Order of United Workmen. In religious faith he was a Roman Catholic, and in politics, a democrat. Mr. and Mrs. Reichel have two children, Mary Mabel and Elizabeth Bernice.

PLINEY S. RICHARDSON. It is a little more than thirty years since Pliney S. Richardson arrived in Montana, a young man, with normal strength and ambitions, no money, with some training in farm work, and a readiness and willingness to adapt himself to the new conditions of a new country.

Mr. Richardson has done exceedingly well, though not without the average vicissitudes and set-backs as a rancher, and was one of the first settlers and is today one of the leading citizens of Powder River County.

Mr. Richardson, who enjoys an extensive acquaintance over Eastern Montana, and who is known by no other christian title than "Dick," was born near Carthage, Hancock County, Illinois, October 31, 1866. He is of New England ancestry, his grandfather, Jesse Richardson, being a native of Vermont. Jesse Richardson was a stone mason and worked on the Erie Canal construction and again did canal and turnpike building in Pickaway County, Ohio. In later years he moved to Illinois, and is buried in Hancock County. He married Margaret Whiteside, and their four children were George, Nelson, Mrs. Rebecca Renshaw and Andrew.

George Richardson, father of the Montana rancher, was born in Ohio and was an early settler in Hancock County, Illinois, with his father Jesse. He acquired but an ordinary education, and early in the Civil war enlisted in the One Hundred and Eighteenth Illinois Cavalry. He was under the command of Sheridan and took part in the Vicksburg campaign and toward the end of his service was sent by water to Texas. He escaped wounds and capture, and for many years was a pensioner. In the early eighties he moved to Northeastern Missouri and lived on a farm there. He died at Newark, Missouri, in January, 1909. His wife was Elizabeth Jennings, a daughter of James Jennings, a native of Indiana. Mrs. George Richardson died in November, 1903. Her children were: Lawrence, of Los Angeles County, California; Pliney S.; George, of Newark, Missouri; William, a rancher near Powderville, Montana; Laura, wife of Frank Hunter, of Carthage, Oklahoma.

"Dick" Richardson was sixteen years of age when his parents moved to Knox County, Missouri. He acquired his education chiefly in the country schools of Illinois, and he lived with his parents in Missouri until he was about twenty-three years of age. It was on the 28th of June that he arrived at Miles City, Montana in the year 1889. His parents were unable to give him any capital when he left home, and he reached Miles City with a dollar and forty cents, therefore being obliged to make his labor immediately available. His first employment was at corral building on the sheep ranch of H. H. Sykes. He had no previous experience to qualify him for this work, but used his American initiative and soon became a useful hand. In winter he became a shepherd, working for thirty dollars a month and board. He left the ranch to become a stage driver from Powderville to Willow Creek. He drove the stage at night three times a week, resting during the day. It was a sixty mile drive, and while there were certain hazards and difficulties due to uncertainties of road, there was no danger from road agents. He was thus employed from July until the following April.

On changing employment Mr. Richardson went with the Seven-O-L-Ranch on Powder River as a wage earner, and eventually served that organization two and a half years as ranch manager. After that he was a ranch hand on the Cross ranch, and then made his first independent start as a rancher, squatting on a claim on Crow Creek. The land had been unsurveyed, and he lived on his claim during the winter and worked for wages during the summer. His first home was a log cabin with a single room. When he married he took his bride to the claim and built a two-room cabin. After several months they abandoned the claim, sold the improvements, and Mr. Richardson took a band of sheep to run on the shares, acquiring by purchase the improvements on the old Seven-O-L-Ranch. He used the surrounding land for grazing his sheep. It was in the fall of 1898 that he established himself in that locality, and it has been his home continuously for over twenty years. He and his wife exercised their rights under the various land laws of the United States, and have acquired title to a section of land. Their entire ranch now embraces 4,270 acres, and is used for the raising of cattle.

Mr. Richardson for many years regarded sheep as the most profitable form of livestock farming in Montana. However, there were occasional reverses that all but swept away the accumulation of years. Then the influx of settlers caused a fencing off of water rights and brought about other changes that made it advisable to sell his sheep and take up cattle instead. Mr. Richardson breeds the White Face cattle and sells his surplus from the range at the age of three and four years. For a quarter of a century he also raised horses on a modest scale, though some of his stock went to eastern markets.

Though Mr. Richardson came to Montana the same year that it was admitted to the Union, his home in the eastern section of the state was sparsely settled and it was almost a quarter of a century before a school district was laid off and a school established in his community. He was made a member of the first school board. In his early years in that country there was not a public highway or bridge, no machinery for road working, and the Custer County he first knew embraced the present counties of Rosebud, Prairie, Fallon, Powder River, Carter and Wibaux, a territory equal almost to the eastern end of Montana.

In the fall of 1916 Mr. Richardson was elected to the Custer County Board of Commissioners for a term of six years, succeeding Charles Daly. The chief service of the board has been road building and adjusting business between the new county of Powder River and Custer. Politically Mr. Richardson was reared a republican, casting his first vote for Benjamin Harrison in 1888 at Newark, Missouri. He is affiliated with the Masons, Odd Fellows and Elks. Mrs. Richardson was clerk of District No. 2 while her husband was trustee of that school district. She took a very earnest and hard working part in the local Red Cross Chapter during the World war.

October 30, 1896, Dick Richardson married Miss Nettie Hart, daughter of Isaac and Jane (Miller) Hart. Her father moved from Minnesota, in which state Mrs. Richardson was born August 8, 1879, to North Dakota, and then on to the Snake River country in Washington, and died at Asotin in that state. There were four daughters and two sons in the Hart family, and those still living are Mrs. Mary Gillis, of Canada, Mrs. Ida McKenzie, at Miles City, Mrs. Hattie Jordan, in Dawson County, Montana, and Mrs. Richardson.

Mr. and Mrs. Richardson have five children: Clarence, Roy, Lois, William and Harold. Clarence was in the One Hundred and Seventy-Second Aero Squadron, received intensive training in England, and at the signing of the armistice was at Bordeaux, France. He and his brother Roy are now associated in the ranching business with their father.

Randolph Deibel. With the year 1920 Mr. Deibel is able to claim thirty years of participation in the ranching activities of Custer County. His name has become prominently associated with livestock, business and civic affairs in Eastern Montana. Since 1885 he has lived at Miles City, moving his home from his ranch in order to give his children better educational advantages.

The Deibel ranch now comprises 10,000 acres, much of its grazing land in the Pine Hills back from the Yellowstone.

Mr. Deibel was born at St. Louis, Missouri. He represented Custer County in the Fifteenth Legislature, serving one term as a democrat. He was a plain citizen in the Legislature, and opposed every effort at political manipulation. He is an Elk and has served as an officer in the Elks Lodge and is also affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

He was married at Santa Ana, California, December 22, 1909 to Miss Rena M. Wilson, his wife being also a former resident of Miles City. To Mr. and Mrs. Deibel have been born five children: Randolph, Jr., Dorothy, Hazel Ardus, Richard Wayne and Florence Elizabeth.

Calvin Todd. A modest ranchman on Mizpah Creek, fifteen miles above Mizpah, Custer County, Calvin Todd settled in Montana in 1902, coming as a cattleman from Texas, in which state he had been reared. He is a native of Madison County, Kentucky, born not far from Richmond, May 2, 1875, and was an infant when taken by his father to Grayson County, Texas, where the elder man, John Todd, was a stock farmer for some years, then moving on west to Montague County and still later to Swisher County, in the plains country. There John Todd was a cowman and passed his remaining years, eventually becoming the owner of the best herd of cattle in that locality. He was a democrat in politics and was fraternally affiliated with the Masons. He married Martha Denham, a daughter of Jesse Denham, who died in Grayson County, Texas, June 5, 1877, and belonged to the old Kentucky people of that region. Mrs. Todd died in Kentucky, leaving issue: Nancy, who married J. P. Moody and resides in Swisher County, Texas; John, a farmer in Potter County, Texas; Will M., a ranchman of Swisher County; Jessie, the widow of James Turman, of Tulia, Texas; Mary, who married George Watts, of Tulia; and Calvin. John Todd, Sr., married for his second wife Minerva Moody, but no children were born to their union.

John Todd was born at Richmond, Kentucky, March 16, 1834, and passed away near Tulia, Texas, June 5, 1905. His first wife was born in Madison County, Kentucky, October 5, 1835, and died there November 6, 1875. The mother of John Todd was Nancy Stenson and his father was John Todd, Sr., and both died in Madison County, Kentucky.

Calvin Todd had poor school advantages, the Hopewell School of Montague County, Texas, giving him his first lessons. He finished his school days in Rannells County while living with his sister, Mrs. Turman, and when sixteen years of age began farming with his brother-in-law on shares, continuing to be thus engaged as long as he was there. When he went to the plains country with his parents he began running cattle, in the employ of Johnson Grake, who had the "Three Circle" outfit, and when he left them after four years spent two terms in school at Canon City, and paid his expenses from his savings. Leaving school for good, he went back to the bunch of cattle he had accumulated and began ranching on his section ranch, which he sold in 1902 on coming to Montana. Mr. Todd arrived in this state without knowledge of the country except that acquired through reading of its advantages as a stock country, and his first four years were spent in working for ranchmen. He worked for two years for the Concord Cattle Company on the Yellowstone River, and another two years for Harrison & Kimes on the Tongue, and then, convinced that this was the country in which he should locate, purchased the ranch and cattle of Thomas T. Hill and began with title to a quarter section of land and 132 head of cattle. His plan of operation of the ranch is to carry 100 cows and to market their increase annually, and his ranch has expanded by homestead entries to 840 acres. He and Mrs. Todd have each entered lands from the public domain, and these are being used as a part of the ranch. Mr. Todd has been in the past a shipper limitedly from this locality, his stock going from Miles City to the Chicago market. He has always manifested a warm friendship for public education, being embarrassed himself somewhat by lack of early school advantages, and organized the first school in his district, building a log cabin to accommodate his own children and conducting a private school for three years, or until a public school was established in the neighborhood and a new schoolhouse erected by the district.

Mr. Todd was married in Hale County, Texas, January 13, 1907, to Miss Nona Knight, a daughter of Charley and Amanda (Powers) Knight. Mr. Knight came to Texas as a child with his father and settled at Midlothian, in which community Mrs. Todd grew to womanhood. Charley Knight moved out to Hale County when that region was being settled, and at present is a stock farmer of Running Water, Texas. His family is comprised of the following children: Nona, who is now Mrs. Calvin Todd, Minnie Lee, Gertrude, Dona, Chloe, Gladys, Lewis and Loss. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Todd: Dorothy, Lewis Calvin, Gladys, Winnie and Maxine. Mrs. Todd is identified with church work in her community, and is a Baptist in faith, having been reared in that church as a child and continuing to be true to her faith as a woman.

Frank D. O'Neill is a prominent and well known ranchman on Powder River, with headquarters on Trail Creek, and since becoming a resident of Montana in 1885 he has also been conspicuously identified with the political life of the commonwealth.

Mr. O'Neill was born in Guelph County, Ontario, Canada, December 18, 1864, but was reared near Lawrence, Kansas, where his father, James O'Neill, owned a large Galloway stock farm. The senior Mr. O'Neill was born in Valcartter, Province of Quebec, and was of Irish parentage. He established his home in Kansas in 1867, going there from the Province of Ontario. He married in early life Margaret Ryan, who was born in Tipperary, Ireland. From Kansas Mr. and Mrs. O'Neill went to Saline County, Missouri, where the former spent the remainder of his life and died, and his widow subsequently passed away in Miles City. Their children were: John, who died without issue; James E., a wholesale merchant at Butte, Montana; Thomas, who died before marriage; William, of Miles City, Montana; Mary E., a resident of Butte, Montana, and a suffrage leader of the state; and Frank D.

Frank D. O'Neill remained at the parental home until about eighteen years of age, when he made his way to Nebraska, thence on to Oregon and Washington, down into California and finally to Montana. He had spent about one year as a laborer on ranches in the vicinity of Stockton, California. It was in April, 1885, when a lad of twenty-one, that he came into what was then the territory of Montana from the Golden State, traveling over the Northern Pacific Railroad. He had little knowledge of the country he was entering and was seeking work. His first opening was as a sheep herder for Oscar Gruell, whose ranch was located on Froze-to-Death Creek, north of the Yellowstone, and for this work he received $40 a month. During a period of three years he worked at herding and shearing sheep, and then entered the sheep business for himself, starting the industry as a half owner with Arnon Laney in 1,000 head near the mouth of the Mizpah on Powder River, and he remained identified with the range of that region until he established his headquarters on Trail Creek in 1888. He continued associated with Mr. Laney for two years, then entering the business alone, and has so continued ever since. Mr. O'Neill started his sheep industry with and held to the Marino blood, as he was advised and found that sheep herds closer to the flock, shears a higher priced fleece and finally produces as much mutton as other breeds, and they also do well on a close and rough range. While at the height of his business as a sheep man Mr. O'Neill handled 12,000 head, which sheared him 95,000 pounds of wool. He sold much of his output at 9¼ cents a pound, with little or no profit to himself, but he had confidence enough in the future of the sheep industry to believe that the price would return to a profitable basis, and his intuition proved true, for he eventually sold wool at the high price of 25 cents a pound. He gave up the sheep business in 1913 because of financial difficulties, and in a duration of thirty-six months he disposed of 17,000 head at the average price of $1.98 a head.

After going out of the sheep business Mr. O'Neill turned his attention to the cattle industry and has since handled the Herefords under the "ON" and "3 bar gate" brands. He produces them for beef, and has become one of the most prominent cattle shippers of the region.

Mr. O'Neill entered his homestead at the mouth of Trail Creek, also an additional homestead under more recent legislation, and his domain now embraces 1,100 acres along Powder River. His pioneer home was built at the mouth of Trail Creek, a log structure now being used by the "TN" Cattle Company. The improvements where he now lives are of his own making and add materially to the appearance of the community. Mr. O'Neill is also interested with his brother in the wholesale produce business, and in his livestock interests he is associated with his sister.

In Custer County, Montana, October 21, 1901, Mr. O'Neill was married to Miss Margaret C. McKenzie. Her father, John G. McKenzie, brought his family from Stillwater, Minnesota, to Montana, in 1892, locating at Miles City. He engaged in the hotel business there. His death occurred, however, on the O'Neill ranch when he had reached the age of eighty-five years, and his widow passed away there a few years later. They were the parents of three sons and three daughters, namely: Mrs. Kenneth McLean, of Miles City; Alexander G., whose home is at Salt Lake; Mrs. W. T. Perham, of Glendive, Montana; Mrs. O'Neill, who was born in Stillwater, Minnesota; Fay W. and Royal McKenzie, who are the two youngest of the family and are Powder River stock men. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. O'Neill: Aileen, Thomas A., Robert, Margaret, Emmet and Roma.

Mr. O'Neill has always taken an active part in the civic and political activities of his community and his county, and as a democrat has made himself known and felt locally. He was elected to the Thirteenth Montana Legislature, where he served under Speaker McDonald, and his committee assignments were appropriations and mileage, and his interests lay principally in livestock legislation in opposition to measures prepared in the interest of so called farming. He also introduced some road legislation, embracing the idea of contract and specified road work, but this measure failed of passage as a result of lobbying against it. He supported Walsh for election to the United States Senate, and he was a friend of Senator Clark during the latter's political regime. Mr. O'Neill served as a committeeman for Custer County as a member of the State Democratic Committee, continuing in that office for about ten years, and he has attended most of the state conventions of his party since 1892.

Franklin J. Murphy. Any gathering of old time Montana trailsmen and cattle men would be incomplete as a representative convention if Franklin J. Murphy was absent. From his standpoint as a cowboy and rancher he has known this country for forty years, and he has been in at the making of cattle range history over all the great range states and territories from Texas to the Canadian boundary.

Mr. Murphy was born at Orange, New Jersey, September 24, 1858. His grandfather, Dennis Murphy, an Irishman, was a laboring man in New York City, where he died. His only child was John Dennis Murphy, who was born in New York City and married Sarah C. Jacobus, a native of New Jersey and of Holland Dutch stock. In 1869 when Franklin J. Murphy was eleven years of age his parents moved to southwestern Texas, locating in Frio County. John D. Murphy was a farmer and rancher there until his death. His widow died at the home of her son in Miles City in 1914, at the age of eighty-four. Her children were: Mrs. Mary Hilliard, who lives at Billings; Sarah, her twin sister, who married Will Campbell and died in New Jersey; Mrs. Jennie Stephenson, who died in New Jersey; and Franklin J.

Franklin J. Murphy received most of his education in common schools before the family went to Texas. He grew up in one of the most remote districts of the Lone Star State, and just as naturally as a boy along the sea coast turns to the career of a sailor he took to cow punching. He got his earliest experiences in that industry fully as early as 1875. Besides riding the range for some of the immense herds that grazed over the southwestern Texas prairies he also drove the trail north to Dodge City for two trips, one trip to Fort Hayes, and made his final trip from the south to Julesburg, Colorado. From there he went into the Black Hills district of the Dakotas and joined a buffalo skin hunting outfit. It was with this outfit that he made his original entry into Montana in the month of October, 1879. He is one of the last survivors of the white men who were in Eastern Montana at that time. That fall after loading his wagons with hides and meat the buffalo hunters returned to Deadwood and spent the winter. In the spring of 1880 Mr. Murphy engaged in freighting as a "bull whacker" between Mandan and Deadwood and Pierre and Deadwood, continuing that work until the summer of 1881. He was in the service of Jim Vance, who ran an outfit of thirty wagons with ten yoke of cattle to the wagon. His next experience began at Sidney, Nebraska, where he boarded a train for Kelton, Utah, and then traveled by stage to Baker City, Oregon. In Oregon he joined the "N bar" outfit, which soon afterward started five herds of cattle over the trail towards Running Water, Nebraska, but diverted four of these herds to Montana to the newly acquired ranch on Powder River, while the fifth herd was sent for beef to the Pine Ridge Indian Agency. Mr. Murphy came into Montana with this outfit, and remained a cowboy for the old ranching concern along Powder River. Later for two years he worked for Billy Moses, manager of the "v v v" outfit, and still later for Rus Wilson on Grand River, the "E-6" outfit, and also for the Hash Knife outfit run by Billy LaForce. His last work as a cowboy was for Joe Scott on Powder River with the "G-H" outfit managed by Bud Burdette. That ended his employment by others, and he then began ranching for Franklin J. Murphy on the Yellowstone River at Shirley.

Mr. Murphy started his operations there with 150 head of common range cattle, his headquarters being on Brook Creek near Shirley. For several years he grazed the public domain. His "NF-quarter circle" became one of the well known brands of that vicinity. This ranch he exchanged for that of the Concord Cattle Company on Mizpah Creek, securing the company's improvements and a squatter's right. The land had been only recently surveyed, and he filed a homestead claim to a quarter section. On this quarter his ranch headquarters and other improvements are now located. The old ranch and that which brings comfort and accommodations to travelers is the one he now occupies. Since then he has been engaged continuously in the cattle business. He added to his homestead a desert claim and also a railroad section, giving him a domain of 960 acres in one body. Mr. Murphy is distinctly a cattleman, but has also become interested in farming owing to the change in climatic conditions and the need of winter feed for the stock.

He is one of the supervisors of the road district of Custer County, also one of the local appraisers of the Federal Farm Loan Bank, and he served as secretary of the local council for war work. He aided in putting his district over on all demands made by the Government for funds. Mrs. Murphy was also one of the energetic Red Cross workers, and she is a factor in the community life as postmistress of Mizpah at the ranch headquarters. Mr. Murphy and family have for twenty years been resident of the locality at the mouth of the Mizpah on Powder River. Politically he has attended a number of democratic conventions. He served as a deputy sheriff under Sheriff Hugh R. Wells, and at an earlier date was a deputy under Sheriff William Savage.

In Custer County January 10, 1893, Mr. Murphy married Miss Mary E. Smith, daughter of Dr. J. W. and Mary (Krohn) Smith. Her father was a veterinary surgeon, who moved from Louisville, Kentucky, to St. Peter, Minnesota, and a number of years later to Spokane, Washington, where he is still living. Mrs. Smith died in St. Peter. Mrs. Murphy, who was born in 1868, has an older brother, William C. Mr. and Mrs. Murphy have an adopted daughter, Elizabeth.

In 1882, when Mr. Murphy entered Montana as a cowboy, he saw about the last remnants of buffalo running at large. A few small bands were scattered about but disappeared altogether in a couple of years. The gray wolf roamed in bands over this region until a very recent time, and was very destructive to all kinds of live stock. The mountain lion, though not so numerous, was a dangerous pest, while the coyote was a menace only to the sheep.

John Henry Hasty. Both as a ranchman of the Yellowstone Valley and commissioner of Custer County John Henry Hasty is deserving of more than passing notice, having in both capacities won the respect of his fellow citizens because of his ability and effective ideas. He was born in Aroostook County, Maine, January 24, 1857, a son of John Henry Hasty also a native of Maine, born in that state in 1832. The elder Mr. Hasty after completing a collegiate course went into lumbering, and followed that calling all of his active life. When the news reached him of the outbreak of the war between the North and the South he was engaged in driving logs down the Aroostook River, but he "hung up his drive," settled with his men, and immediately enlisted in the Union army as a member of Company C, Fifteenth Maine Volunteer Infantry, and was assigned to the Army of the Potomac. Enlisting as a private, he rose rapidly and was mustered out after three years of service as captain of his company. In 1870 he went to Minneapolis, Minnesota, and continued in the lumber business until his health failed, principally operating in the vicinity of Grand Rapids, that state. He was a strong advocate of republican principles and doctrines, and was equally staunch in his support of the Episcopal Church, of which he was a consistent member, and his wife also held to the same creed. His death occurred in 1909, but his widow survives him and lives in Minneapolis, although eighty-five years of age. Her maiden name was Martha R. Goss, and she is a daughter of Thomas Goss, born near Bangor, Maine, who spent his active years as a farmer and stockman. He married a Miss Chase, and they had thirteen children. Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Hasty, Sr., became the parents of the following children: John Henry, whose name heads this review; Martha R., who is the wife of D. M. Warner, of Minneapolis, Minnesota; and Lydia W., who married E. E. Witchie, of Minneapolis.

The Hasty family is a very old one in the United States, it being claimed that one of the name came to the colonies in the historic Mayflower. As far back as there are any definite records the Hasty family has been connected with lumbering interests. The paternal grandfather of John Henry Hasty of this review had the following children: John H., who was the father of John Henry, Jr.; Daniel, who spent his life in Maine, Minnesota and Montana, and is now living near Baker, of the last named state; and Lydia, who married William Winchell and died leaving a family now residing in Maine.

A defect in eyesight deprived John Henry Hasty of the usual amount of educational training, but being an unusually intelligent man he has remedied this by close observation and study. Before he reached his majority he was self-supporting, having entered the employ of the Minneapolis Street Railroad Company and remained there for four years, rising until he was in charge of the main barn of the company. Leaving this employment, he went into a merchandise business and was doing well until he, like many other small dealers, was affected by the low-tariff policies of the Cleveland administration, and lost what he had invested. He then began handling grain and milling, and was so engaged at Minneapolis for nearly ten years. Too close application to business brought about a failure in his health, and acting upon the suggestion of his physicians he sought a change of climate. Mr. Hasty reached Terry, Montana, on April 7, 1900, and was so impressed with the improvement he felt almost immediately that he decided to locate here permanently and embark in the cattle business. Pursuant to that resolution Mr. Hasty bought the ranch settled in 1883 by Watkins and Sons, located on Sandstone Creek, about fifty-five miles southeast of Terry, and lived on it for eleven years, raising horses, cattle and sheep. He ran his stock under the brand "Lazy P-hanging H," and his enterprise developed from a modest undertaking to one of large proportions, his cattle numbering thousands and being of the Shorthorn and White Face strains, while his horses were of the Percheron strain, and bred highly. Mr. Hasty not only was well known during this period as a shipper to the Chicago market, but also as an aggressive stock dealer.

At the expiration of eleven years he sold his ranch and coming to Miles City bought the W. B. Johnston ranch under the Yellowstone and Tongue River irrigation ditch, and since then his efforts have been devoted more to farming than to stockraising. Grain, alfalfa and potatoes constitute his main crops, and his accessibility to water insures his continuance in this line. His improvements have been added to by him in a substantial manner, including the modernization of his residence by the introduction of electric light, hot and cold water and sanitary conveniences, and the erection of a commodious barn.

As a citizen Mr. Hasty has ever taken an active part in public affairs. He learned from his father the principles advocated by the republican party, and adopted them as his own, casting his first presidential vote for James A. Garfield, and never since has missed voting at a presidential election, nor swerved from his support of republican candidates. His first official service was performed as commissioner of Custer County, to which office he was elected in 1918, his colleagues on the board being Joseph R. McKay and P. S. Richardson. The board has directed much attention to the development of good roads, and the district under Mr. Hasty's supervision contains about 125 miles of post roads and the Yellowstone Trail, and in addition to these the laterals have been worked and placed in commission as available highways. A settlement of the business affairs between Custer and Powder River counties has been arrived at satisfactorily by this board, and it is considering a road project under the State Highway Commission which calls for an outlay of $11,000 on the part of Custer County.

John Henry Hasty was married at Minneapolis, Minnesota, on January 5, 1879, to Jennie Crow, a daughter of George and Clarinda J. (Ellsworth) Crow, the latter being a cousin of Lieut. Elmer Ellsworth, the first man killed in the war between the states, his death resulting from an attack made upon him by a hotelman named Jackson at Alexandria, Virginia. George Crow was born in Michigan in 1834, but went to the vicinity of Sandusky, Ohio, where he was engaged in farming at the time of his marriage. In 1858 he went to Minnesota and was in that state at the time of the outbreak of the Chippewa and Sioux Indians, and he and his family were driven from their homestead by the dusky warriors. In 1862 Mr. Crow enlisted in Company I, Seventh Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and died in the service of his country in December, 1864. His widow passed away in December, 1884. She was seven years his junior. Their children were as follows: William A., Henry, Fred and Mrs. Hasty, the latter being the only survivor of her parents' family. She was born in Stearns County, Minnesota, on July 2, 1860, and was educated in the public schools of that locality. Mr. and Mrs. Hasty have a daughter, Ada Belle. She married N. A. Eggleston, of Ellensburg, Washington, and they have the following children: Altha Bernice, Glen Hasty, Harlan John, Lola Jane, Ruth and Delberta. Mr. Hasty is a Master Mason, an Odd Fellow, Knight of Pythias, and also belongs to the Sons of Veterans, the Foresters and Ancient Order of United Workmen.

CHARLES H. MILLER. Few citizens of Carter County are more widely and favorably known than Charles H. Miller, of Piniele. His life has become a part of the history of the community in which he lives, and his active and honorable business career has brought him before the public in such a way as to gain the esteem and confidence of his fellow citizens and give him a reputation such as few of his contemporaries have attained. Keen perception, tireless energy and honesty of purpose, combined with mature judgment and every-day common sense, have ever been among his most prominent characteristics, and while laboring for individual success and for the material interests of the community he has also been largely instrumental in promoting the moral welfare of those with whom he has mingled.

Charles H. Miller was born in Boswell, Ohio, on August 9, 1859, and is a son of Noah and Samantha (Grable) Miller. Noah Miller came of stanch old Dutch stock of Pennsylvania, from which state he came to Ohio, locating in Boswell, where he engaged in the mercantile business. He married there and spent the rest of his life there, dying at the comparatively early age of thirty-two years, while his widow passed away at the age of thirty-seven. The latter was the daughter of Jonathan Grable. Mr. and Mrs. Miller left three children, namely: Alice, who became the wife of J. N. Rickards and died at Beatrice, Nebraska; Alva M., of Oil Center, California; and Charles H., of this review.

After the death of his parents Charles H. Miller made his home with his mother's people, living with his maternal grandmother until her death, her home being in the Village of Aetna, Ohio. He received a good practical education in the public schools. When the time came for him to take up life's responsibilities on his own account he turned his face westward, his first location being at Beatrice, Nebraska, where he obtained employment as a clerk in a hardware store. Two years later he engaged in the hardware business for himself at Kearney, Nebraska, being so engaged from 1879 to 1891, when he went to Boise City, Idaho, where he spent eight years, engaged in the mercantile business. Then for a few years he was in business in Spokane, Washington, whence he moved into the Black Hills country, spending the following nine years in Deadwood. Then for a year he was a resident of Belle Fourche, South Dakota, where he was engaged in business. On March 15, 1911, Mr. Miller came to the locality where he now lives and with which he has been actively and closely identified ever since. At that time he opened a mercantile establishment, which he conducted for six years, selling the business at the end of that time to the Piniele Mercantile Company. That was the pioneer store of this section of the county and it was a financial success from the beginning. Mr. Miller entered a homestead in section 23, and upon a portion of his entry the Village of Piniele is located.

Piniele was promoted actively by Mr. Miller and his associates, and the fourteen acres devoted to the townsite were platted by him. He erected the first building on the site, which served as his first residence and store, and which is now the hotel, and the other buildings of the place have almost altogether come into existence through his assistance and aid. He is a stockholder of the Piniele Milling Company, and aided in the erection of its building, and is also a stockholder in the Piniele Mercantile Company and in the Piniele State Bank, of which he was a promoter and is the vice president. Mr. Miller was appointed United States land commissioner soon after he came here and for seven years he has filled that office. It is through his court that filings of lands have frequently been made and through the same court that titles to lands have been passed to the actual settlers. He tries contests and all disputes over the rights of the settlers on the public domain and represents the Government in the taking of testimony and then submits the case to the Government for final decision.

In Kearney, Nebraska, on October 31, 1883, Mr. Miller was married to Clara B. Scott, who was born at Sheffield, Illinois, on April 13, 1864, the daughter of Albert G. and Emily E. (Smith) Scott. Mr. Scott was born on June 12, 1825, at Barry, Vermont, and received a liberal education. He became an active business man in Sheffield, Illinois, but in 1879 he moved to Kearney, Nebraska, where he established himself as a grain dealer. He became prominent in public affairs, being World's Fair Commissioner for Nebraska and in many ways evincing a live interest in the public welfare. While a citizen of Illinois he served in the Legislature of that state. He was a republican in politics, a member of the Masonic Order and of the Congregational Church. His death occurred in Holdredge, Nebraska, on June 30, 1895, while his widow passed away in Spokane, Washington, on July 3, 1899. Their two children who reached maturity were Mrs. Miller and Herbert W., who was a grain dealer in Hastings, Nebraska, and died in 1908. To Mr. and Mrs. Miller have been born three daughters, namely: Laura Scott, the wife of Charles S. Einsel, of Piniele, Montana; Katherine Emily, the wife of Fred A. Porter, of Atlanta, Nebraska; and Alberta A., who is a graduate of the Spearfish Normal School and has spent two years as a teacher in the public schools.

Politically Mr. Miller is a stanch supporter of the republican party, having cast his first presidential vote for Gen. James A. Garfield. He joined the Masonic fraternity at Kearney, Nebraska, in 1882, and is now a member of the Blue Lodge at Deadwood, where he also belongs to the Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, the Commandery of Knights Templar and the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. His career presents a notable example of those qualities of mind and character which overcome obstacles and win success, and because of these things he enjoys to an unusual degree the confidence and good will of the entire community.

EDGAR C. BUSSERT. As a town community thoroughly adequate in all its resources and with a citizenship far above the average, Forsyth is properly proud of its schools and educational work. The city has been fortunate in having continuously the high class ability and services of Edgar C. Bussert as superintendent of schools for nearly ten years. Mr. Bussert is an exceptionally able school administrator and has handled the local situation in a most admirable manner, co-operating with the progressive forces in the community, using his initiative and leadership where needed, and in every way possible re-enforcing and building up school standards that are a matter of just pride to the community.

Coming from a state that has contributed so many prominent men to the professions and statesmanship Mr. Bussert was born in Fairfield County, Ohio, May 16, 1880. He comes of a family of farmers, and is a grandson of Solomon Bussert, who came from Maryland early in the history of Ohio and settled along the edge of the southeastern hills in Hocking County, a wooded and farming district adjacent to the rolling coal and mineral region of the state. There he opened a farm out of the timber, and from that locality his descendants have scattered to other points of the United States. Asher Bussert, the oldest of the nine children of Solomon, was fifteen years of age when his father died, and he had a limited education and early assumed serious responsibilities as head of the household. Though too young for front line duty in the Civil war, he belonged to the Squirrel Brigade. His quiet and earnest efforts were in the main devoted to farming, and he lived in his locality until his death, at the age of sixty-nine. He married Mary Koch, whose people came out of Pennsylvania, and were, like the Busserts, of German ancestry. She is still living, the mother of three children, Mrs. Frank Reed, of Fairfield County; Edgar C.; and Frank R., a Chicago business man.

Edgar C. Bussert graduated from the Fairfield Union Academy at Pleasantville, Ohio, at the age of twenty, and soon afterward began his career as a traveling salesman for E. R. Dumont of Chicago. For three years he covered an important territory east of the Mississippi River, but in that time conceived that his talents and duties belonged in the field of education. He therefore entered the Ohio State University, acquiring his Bachelor's degree in 1908 and two years later, after an interval of teaching, his Master's degree. For a time he was superintendent of the public schools of New Lexington, Ohio, and came direct from there to Montana to assume his duties as superintendent of schools at Forsyth, the only town and position with which his work as an educator has been identified in this state. He has been constantly alert and busy in directing the educational program of the county seat of Rosebud County.

In 1911 Forsyth had two school buildings, a corps of ten teachers, a graded system of twelve grades, with a high school fairly instituted, though not yet accredited and with less than twenty pupils enrolled.

While many obvious handicaps have been imposed upon school progress in recent years, it is easy to discover numerous prominent improvements and advancements at Forsyth. The enrollment in the high school is 105, while nine pupils were graduated in 1920. Commercial and domestic science courses have been added, and a complete rearrangement and enlargement of the four year high school course undertaken. There has been an interesting change of attitude among high school graduates, who formerly considered their education "finished" when they received their high school diplomas, but more recently the tendency has been for the graduates to enter higher institutions of training. The Forsyth school has shown a creditable though not over emphasized interest in athletics, has been well represented in basket ball and track work, the team standing third in the district in basket ball. In literary contests the school had a representative in debating at Miles City and Hysham in 1920, and in the declamation and extemporaneous speaking contests at Missoula. There are now eighteen teachers on the staff of the Forsyth schools and eight in the district outside the supervision of Mr. Bussert. A high standard has always been maintained for teachers. Grade teachers must present diplomas from normal schools or equivalent training, while the high school teachers are all college graduates, and once in four years every teacher must attend a summer session of a reputable institution for training teachers.

In material equipment the outstanding feature of Forsyth's educational facilities is the new high school building in course of construction during 1920. In this building is an auditorium with a seating capacity of 750, a gymnasium 90 by 43 feet, a complete locker system, nineteen perfectly appointed class rooms, and altogether a building that represents some of the most advanced ideas of high school architecture. The cost of the building complete will be $150,000. When it is occupied the high school work will be enlarged to comprise a six year program.

Mr. Bussert, while he has had a very busy program since coming to Forsyth, has kept in close personal touch with outside sources of inspiration to the educator. He has done considerable residence work in the Columbia University Teachers' College at New York City, and has from that state institution the degree of Master of Arts and the Superintendent's diploma. He has been a working member of the State Teachers' Association of Montana, and is a former president of the eastern branch of the association.

In his home community he has entered with zest into the civic program, is an active member of the Chamber of Commerce, being chairman of its Parks and Playgrounds Committee, and is a director of the County Fair Board, through which a deep interest has been stimulated in agriculture and related arts. During the war he was chairman of the Thrift Stamp campaign in Rosebud County, helped with all the Liberty Loan campaigns, and was a member of the executive board of the committee of one hundred. The Bussert household down to the youngest member did practical work for the Red Cross.

In Darke County, Ohio, August 25, 1909, Mr. Bussert married Miss Mamie Minnich. She was a teacher in that county when she met Mr. Bussert, then principal of the Arcanum School. Mrs. Bussert was born January 3, 1887, second of the four daughters of Solomon E. and Ellen (Sigerfoos) Minnich, old residents of Darke County, her father being a merchant at Arcanum. The three children of Mr. and Mrs. Bussert are Bettie, Charles and Margaret.

Carl N. Thompson. No man in the practice of law in Musselshell County has exercised an influence finer in quality and purpose than Carl N. Thompson of Roundup. It is an influence proceeding from a character of quiet strength, sanity and disinterestedness, fortified by a varied experience of men and events, directed by a kindly but keen discernment of human character and of the forces moulding the relations of men. He is a man who impresses others with his unshakable honesty as well as his ability to lay hold of the essentials of a situation, and his flaming sincerity carries conviction to the hearts of his hearers. He has attended to the legal affairs of several corporations as well as those of individual clients, bringing to them the ability of a careful, experienced and skillful lawyer.

Carl N. Thompson was born at Madison, Wisconsin, May 24, 1875, a son of Knut and Rachel (Thompson) Thompson, natives of Norway, where he was born in 1844 and she in 1849. They were married at Madison, Wisconsin, and became the parents of ten children, six of whom survive, and of them all Carl N. Thompson is the second. Knut Thompson came to the United States on a sailing vessel when a child, being brought by his parents, who after landing in New York City came west to Dane County, Wisconsin, and were pioneer farmers of that region. There Knut Thompson was reared and educated, but in young manhood went to Madison, Wisconsin, and engaged in an agricultural implement business. In 1875 he left Madison for Minnehaha County, South Dakota, and continued to deal in agricultural implements at Sioux Falls until 1895, when he retired. He is still residing in that city, and is an earnest member and worker of the Lutheran Church. In politics he is a republican.

Carl N. Thompson attended the public schools of South Dakota and the Lutheran Normal School of Sioux Falls, and then entered the law department of the University of Wisconsin, was graduated therefrom in 1903, and almost immediately thereafter was admitted to the bar of Wisconsin. Mr. Thompson was engaged in the practice of his profession at Chicago, Illinois, and Sioux Falls, South Dakota, and then, in 1908, came to Roundup, Montana, as local attorney for the Chicago, Milwaukee and Puget Sound Railroad Company, being the first of his calling to come to this city. For two years he continued to administer the affairs of this company with signal capability, and then resigned as attorney to devote more time to his increasing private practice. He belongs to the Musselshell County Bar Association, the Montana State Bar Association, and the American Bar Association. A Mason, he belongs to Unity Lodge No. 71, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and Jewel Chapter No. 48, Order of the Eastern Star, of which Mrs. Thompson is worthy matron. By instinct, training and inheritance Mr. Thompson is a Lutheran and a republican. In addition to his professional duties Mr. Thompson owns a ranch of 1,200 acres of irrigated land and is interested in the cattle industry, the development of oil property and other affairs, and is one of the most active persons in the county.

On October 14, 1903, Mr. Thompson was united in marriage with Ida M. Jensen, born at Jackson, Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson have two sons, J. Kenneth and Eldon A. Mr. Thompson represents in character and accomplishment the qualities which raise and dignify democratic citizenship and are the foundations of our best leadership. His presence and his counsel are in great demand, and he is ever ready to give the best that lies in his unusual powers, his qualities of heart and brain.

George Judson Murphy. A lawyer whose services have been given to Ismay during a number of years past, Mr. Murphy has gained a place of distinction in the courts of Custer County. He came to Montana as a citizen in April, 1907, from his native state of Indiana, although he spent a few brief years enroute in Minneapolis and Milwaukee.

Mr. Murphy was born at Spencerville in DeKalb County, Indiana, but he was reared in Allen County, that state, and his common school training which he received there was supplemented by preparatory work in college before entering the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, Ohio. He completed the sophomore year there and taught school one year in Allen County, and then soon afterward entered upon the practice of law. His preparation for the profession was obtained first under former Congressman Walpole G. Colerick, of Fort Wayne, and Mr. Murphy was admitted to the bar upon examination by a committee appointed by Judge Heaton of the Superior Court. Two days of writing was necessary to do the work of the examination. W. H. Shambaugh, city attorney of Fort Wayne, and John Morris, Jr., were two of the committee and are men who have attained eminence in the profession of the law. The law practice of Mr. Murphy began in the Justice Court before he had been admitted to the bar, and his first case was an action to collect a milk bill from a cheese factory. In the Superior Court his first case was as a defendant's attorney in a divorce case. In the main his practice has been along civil lines, and he is a member of the Custer County Bar Association and the Montana State Bar Association. In addition to his own private practice he represents the First National Bank of Ismay and is the city attorney for Ismay, while in the line of politics he has served his voting precinct as a committeeman. Although his first presidential vote was cast in the support of Major McKinley in 1900, he is now giving allegiance to the democratic party, having left the republican ranks in 1912 on the tariff issue.

George J. Murphy is a son of George Murphy and a grandson on the paternal side of John Murphy. This John Murphy, a native of New Hampshire, was for many years a merchant in Cleveland, Ohio, and lies buried in that city. He married Louisa Wheelock, also a member of a New Hampshire family and of colonial ancestry. George Murphy, his son, was born in Cleveland, Ohio, June 30, 1837, but lived in Indiana from the time of attaining young manhood. During the Civil war he became captain of Company E, Thirtieth Indiana Infantry, and was a comrade of Gen. Henry W. Lawton, who was killed in the Philippino insurrection. Mr. Murphy served with Sherman's army to Atlanta, and returned North with the army that fought the battles of Franklin and Nashville. During his service he was three times wounded, but he continued in the ranks until the end of the war, and it is believed he received his discharge as late as the date of his pension voucher, about 1880.

After resuming civil life Captain Murphy began preparing himself for the practice of medicine, and spent the remainder of his life as a physician. He took very little part in political activities but upheld the principles of the republican party, was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and late in life became a member of the Masonic fraternity. For his first wife he married Nancy Dever, who was born at Leo, Indiana, a daughter of John Dever, who removed to Indiana from Ohio and it is believed he came originally from Virginia. He was among the pioneers of Indiana, where he served in various capacities, as a trapper, hunter, as a detective and as a lawyer. Mrs. Murphy died in 1880, when her youngest child was but two years old. She bore her husband the following children: Geraldine, who resides in Garrett, Indiana; Rosemond, who married O. D. McRory, of Fort Wayne; Abbie F., who died in childhood; and George J. Captain Murphy was subsequently married to Florence Knight, and their four children are May, Irma, John and Raymond. The son John was a World war soldier with the Ninth Infantry, and saw service overseas in France.

During the period of the World war George J. Murphy served on the Legal Advisory Board and contributed loyally to the auxiliary war work of the time. He is unmarried.

Albert Roberts became identified with the Town of Ismay in Custer County almost at its foundation, and since coming here has earned and saved the money which makes him one of the prosperous and substantial residents of that locality.

Mr. Roberts is an old time cowboy, and spent many years on the ranch and range both in the South and Northwest. He was born in Gallia County, Ohio, near Gallipolis, July 20, 1874. His father, James Roberts, who was born in Virginia in 1820, moved to Ohio when a young man and entered the Union army from there. He was in the war four years, including three months in Libby Prison at Richmond. For many years he was active in the Grand Army of the Republic, and took a good citizen's interest in politics as a republican. He was a member of the United Brethren Church. His wife was Martha Cottrell, whose father, Elijah Cottrell, was one of the early children born in Gallia County. He was a farmer. Mrs. James Roberts died in 1902. She was the mother of ten children, eight of whom reached mature years and those still living are: Alonzo, of Gallia County; Truman, a farmer in Custer County, Montana, near Ismay; George, of Gallia County; and Albert.

Albert Roberts grew up on his father's farm in Southern Ohio and acquired a district school education. The spring before he was nineteen years of age he left home, telling his parents he would not be back for ten years. His mother accepted his decision as final, though the rest of the family said he would return in two weeks. By railway he traveled to Laramie, Wyoming, and there entered the service of the TV cattle outfit. He left it with three saddle horses, and with one companion journeyed 1,100 miles to Texas, the journey passing without incident save the escape and subsequent recapture of their horses. The trail was through the towns of Denver, Pueblo, past the house in New Mexico where Billy the Kid was killed, on to Portales, then to Plainview, Texas, and to the yellow houses of the XIT outfit, the largest cattle company in the world. He rode the range for that cattle company five years. He was an efficient man, commanded good wages, but spent his money as fast as it came. It was in the service of the XIT people that he first came to Montana with a trainload of cattle, the stock being unloaded at Glendive. Later he made several trips with their stock to Chicago, shipping from Fallon. After his service as a cowpuncher on the north side of the Yellowstone with the XIT outfit he went with the EY ranch as foreman, remaining there three years. When he finally left the Daily ranch to locate at Ismay on March 1, 1909, he had practically no capital.

With a small nucleus of mares he engaged in the livery business, built a barn the same fall, and has continued in the livery and livestock business ever since. Horse drawn vehicles were popular for several years, but the business suffered the inevitable decline owing to the competition of the automobile, and he now has equipment for a number of motor rigs.

His first barn was 60 feet long and was subsequently 50 feet, and is now equipped with convenient sheds and lots, enabling him to handle a large number of stock. The barn is equipped with hot and cold water, a system seldom found even in metropolitan barns. Out of his prosperity Mr. Roberts has provided liberally for home comforts. He has an ice house for refrigeration of drinks and food. His first home was a one-room shack, subsequently increased by another room, and he has built his modern eleven-room house on the installment plan. He did all the planning himself and now has a residence two stories high, 20 by 40 feet, with complete basement, in which is located Delco electric lighting plant and a furnace. Artesian water is supplied from his own wells throughout, with numerous faucets for both hot and cold water. The cellar is also generously stocked with preserved fruits and vegetables put up by Mrs. Roberts. Another feature that means a great deal to a modern housewife is a power laundry machine. Evidently Albert Roberts has built his home for permanence and for convenience. His artesian well was drilled by the East Side Water Company, in which he is a stockholder. He is also a stockholder in the Farmers Elevator at Ismay. Mr. Roberts opened a stage line from Ismay to Cabin Creek in 1916, and drove it and carried the mail a year before the Government took charge. For a time he also drove stage to the TD postoffice south of Ismay, twenty-five miles. When he married Mr. Roberts engaged in the horse business with eleven head of mares, and has bred and sold horses and developed a herd of 130 head of driving and saddle animals. Politically he is a republican, but is satisfied to cast his vote without further participation in politics.

At Glendive, Montana, December 6, 1906, he married Miss Anna Vaule. She was born in Norway and came to the United States alone. They are the parents of seven children, Daisy, Ralph, Lillie, Rolla, Ray, Violet and Rose. Five of them are now students in the Ismay schools.

CHARLES DE GRAFFENREID is a pioneer of the Northwest, whose identification with Montana began as early as 1884, and who has been a permanent resident in the state since 1893, coming to the locality from Wyoming, where he had ranged the region as a cowboy for the Grimes Company, whose ranch in Texas was at Matagorda, the region from which Mr. de Graffenreid came to the North.

Leaving the Lone Star State with a herd of cattle in 1879, he crossed the State of Kansas by way of Dodge City, went on through Ogalalla, Nebraska, and into the Dakotas near Buffalo Gap, where they came to the Cheyenne River. This was a year after the Northern Cheyenne Indians under Chief Dull Knife escaped from their reservation in the Indian Territory and crossed over the states of Kansas, Nebraska and South Dakota, massacreing settlers as they went, and some of the evidences of their depredations were still visible when the Grimes' outfit passed through the region and occasionally crossed the Indian trail. A Bohemian woman who had been maltreated by the Indians but whose life had been spared was still living, and many years afterward, perhaps twenty-five, she began suit against the United States through her attorney for damages for injuries received by the Cheyennes, and collected, it is said, a judgment of $1,000.

Mr. de Graffenreid was in and around the Black Hills country until 1883, when he made his way into Wyoming and the following year in Montana and to the Little Powder River country. The Grimes Company had previously sold their interests to the Shadley Cattle Company, and Mr. de Graffenreid was subsequently employed by them, their ranch being familiarly known as the Flying V. The Shadley Company after a time moved north to the Morrows in South Dakota, and Mr. de Graffenreid remained with them until he came to Montana to reside permanently in 1893. While with the company he filled various positions, from cowboy to wagonman and foreman, but during all this time he paid little attention to the value of his wages. When he finally located in Montana he joined the Home Land and Cattle Company, the "N-N" people, whose headquarters were north of the Yellowstone River, and which was the largest cattle outfit in the state at that time, their stock ranging from the Yellowstone River to Canada. They closed out their interests in 1898, and the "DHS" Company purchased the remnant of their outfit, but Mr. de Graffenreid went to the "L7" on the Big Dry as foreman of its ranch for the old Shadley Cattle Company. He remained in charge of that outfit until it closed its interests in 1902, and in the following year became stock inspector of the state, a position he filled for one year. He then removed to the Town of Jordan, where he was engaged in business for two years, and at the close of that period began his connection with Ismay.

Mr. de Graffenreid is the pioneer resident of Ismay. To him belongs the honor of making the first effort toward the establishment of this little town, and until recently he added to its industrial activity as a confectionery dealer. Since then he has lived retired. During his residence here he has contributed to the dwelling portion of the town as well as to its business houses, and was appointed one of its first school trustees.

Although in his more recent years a business man and identified with town building, Mr. de Graffenreid was reared as a cowboy on the range, and the cattle business claimed the greater part of his industrial career. He was born in Fayette County, Texas, January 30, 1860, was educated in the schools of his home district, and in the military school at Austin, and when he was a young lad of sixteen he was orphaned by the death of his last parent and deprived of a home. When he was seventeen he went to Northwest Texas and became identified with the region of Concho and McCullough counties, and after following the range there for a time returned to his boyhood's home and subsequently was received in the service of the Grimes Company.

Mr. de Graffenreid's father, Thomas de Graffenreid, went to Texas in 1858 from Tennessee, and during the war between the North and the South he served with the Confederacy as a soldier from Texas. After a time he accumulated a few sections of land in Fayette County, and there spent the remainder of his life and passed away in 1868. He had married Catherine Murchison, whose father, a Scotchman, had removed from North Carolina to Texas. To Thomas and Catherine de Graffenreid were born four children, namely: Mrs. Lillian Murchison, whose home is in San Marcos, Texas; Charles, of Ismay, Montana; Mrs. Addie Holman, a resident of Weimer, this state; and Mrs. Fannie Griffin, of San Antonio, Texas.

Charles de Graffenreid was reared in a democratic state of the South, and when the time came for him to cast his vote he joined that party's ranks and supported Mr. Bryan and has since remained true to the principles of the democratic party. In his fraternal relations he is a member of both the Elks and Eagles at Miles City.

Mr. de Graffenreid was married in Colorado County, Texas, November 26, 1908, to Miss Georgie Jamison, who was born at Columbus, Texas, a daughter of T. G. Jamison, who migrated to that state from Kentucky, where he was both a merchant and a stock man. His death occurred at the Town of Columbus, Texas. During the Civil war he served as a Confederate soldier and became connected with the commissary department, assisting in bringing supplies from Mexico to the Confederate forces. He married Ellen Bennett, a daughter of H. W. Bennett, who died in 1899. To this union were born the following children: Harry G., who resides at Bay City, Texas; Mrs. C. M. Bailey, whose home is in Columbus, Texas; and Georgia, who became the wife of Mr. de Graffenreid. She was born in Texas, and her parents were also married in that state. She accepted the right of franchise when it was given her and cast her first presidential vote for Woodrow Wilson. Mr. de Graffenreid during the World war was delegated to look after the families of the enlisted men of his locality and to report to the Government on the situation. Both he and his wife gave valuable aid in all the drives for funds for the carrying on of the war and in all auxiliary war work.

James Boden has lived in Montana over a quarter of a century, put up a brave and hopeful struggle against adverse odds in the early days, and has become master of a reasonably fortunate destiny as a rancher and banker at Ismay in Custer County.

Mr. Boden, whose home ranch is twelve miles southwest of Ismay, is a Texan by birth and spent his early life as a cowboy. He was born near Paris, Lamar County, Texas, January 5, 1861, son of John and Ann (Rich) Boden. His father, a native of Tennessee, went to Texas in the '50s, and spent his life as a farmer and stockman. He died near Caddo, Oklahoma, at the age of eighty-one, his wife having passed away at the age of forty-eight. Their children were: George and William, both in Oklahoma; James; Robert, in the locality of Caddo, Oklahoma; Milton, who spent most of his years in Oklahoma; Annie, married and living in Oklahoma; and Alice, who lives at Denison, Texas.

James Boden grew up on a farm between Sherman and Denison in Grayson County, Texas, and had a common school education. He left home at the age of nineteen and went into the Chickasaw country of old Indian Territory. There he was employed by a cattle outfit as a wage earner, and gradually drifted north from Durant to Falls Valley and thence to the Kansas line. For six or seven years he was a trader in stock and lands around Kiowa, Kansas.

From Kansas Mr. Boden came to Montana about 1894. One year he was employed as a cowboy by the Watkins horse outfit south of the Yellowstone, and the next year worked at several ranches. In 1896 he came to his present ranch home and became a squatter on the public domain on Cottonwood Creek. After the region was surveyed he took up land, his homestead containing his present ranch improvements. His capital of $1,000 enabled him to buy seventy-five head of Montana range cattle. He has always used the brand "UZ with a half circle," and his stock are now bred up to high grades of Hereford and Shorthorns. For a number of years he has been an individual shipper by car lots to the Chicago markets.

Mr. Boden's first home on his ranch was a log building comprising three rooms, and with subsequent additions and improvements it is still sheltering his family. His stock shelters are sheds and stables, and he kept his herd on the increase both in number and quality until 1913, since which date his operations have been curtailed largely through shortage of range. His ranch enclosure embraces about 5,100 acres. Five hundred acres are devoted to farming, his crops being the various grains and roughage for stock feeds. As a man of substantial character and resources, Mr. Boden is also president and a director of the Farmers and Stock Growers Bank of Ismay.

He settled on Cottonwood Creek before a school was organized, and employed his influence in that direction and helped build the pioneer schoolhouse, which is still being used. He is a member of the school board. Like many other good men Mr. Boden refuses to be bound by partisan ties in politics, and has voted for presidential candidates in both the old parties.

At Terry, Montana, October 15, 1899, he married Miss Julia Babcock. Her father, Clint Babcock, is a retired farmer of Montana, and a former resident of Minnesota. He served as a Union soldier during the Civil war. His wife was a Miss Montague, and they had four sons and five daughters. Mrs. Boden was born in Minnesota in October, 1881. She is the mother of three children: Floyd, George and Robert. Floyd is a student in the Ismay High School.

Charles James McKay. Both before and since he came to Montana Charles James McKay had experiences out of the ordinary. In early life he was an iron worker and sailor, and traveled and saw much of the world and men and affairs. Since he located at Ismay in Custer County in 1892 his work has been ranching, but even in that he has had to exercise constant vigilance in order not to be swept away by the vicissitudes that have overwhelmed so many ranchers in Eastern Montana.

He was born near Pembroke, Maine, April 27, 1856. His father, John P. McKay, was born on the Island of Rathlin, Scotland, and after his marriage came to the United States and settled in Maine, to take possession of some property owned by his father. He had been reared in luxury, was liberally educated, but was never able to apply himself to practical business. When thrown upon his own resources he became associated with a company for the manufacture of plaster. That enterprise, like all others which he touched, proved a failure. He spent his last years at Pembroke and died when about seventy. His wife was Margaret McCurdy, who survived him several years. Of their children, John died of wounds incurred while a soldier in the Civil war. Daniel was in the navy during the Civil war aboard the frigate Niagara, and died unmarried at St. Louis. Ann became the wife of Isaac Goff and died at Pembroke. Neill was in the Sixth Maine Infantry the last two years of the Civil war. James was drowned when a boy, and the next in age is Charles J. of Montana. Mary Ellen, widow of Alexander Hay, is a teacher by profession, lives at Great Falls, and for a time was identified with the city schools there.

Charles J. McKay acquired all his education before he was fourteen. When he ran away from home he took a boat to Boston and went to work in some iron mills, for which a brief previous experience fitted him. He had grown up near the ocean, and was quite able to take the place of an able seaman. Besides working in mills he made several trips on coasting vessels, one of them being a smuggler. He had learned the puddling trade at Pembroke, and later with a firm from Troy, New York, went to Londonderry, Nova Scotia, and worked as a puddler, was similarly employed in several mills in New York, Vermont and Pennsylvania, and while at Chester, Pennsylvania, he and his fellow workmen went on a strike and he accepted the opportunity to seek employment in another locality. He went to Birmingham, Alabama, when the first rolling mill was built and when Birmingham was a village. He was employed there as a puddler and from Alabama went to Panama. He was at Aspinwall, Panama, in 1882, during the revolution, when that city was burned by the rebels. While on the Isthmus he was employed as fireman on a dredge when the DeLesseps Company were endeavoring to cut out the canal. He remained there about eighteen months and was dredge captain when he left.

It was from the Isthmus of Panama that Mr. McKay came to Montana in the early '80s. For a few years he worked at Alder Gulch and Virginia City, also prospected around Pony, but had little to show for his efforts at mining. He also worked for wages on hay ranches in the Deer Lodge Valley and eventually came to Miles City and bought an interest in a band of sheep with Alex Cree. The band was moved from Little Porcupine over to Sunday Creek, a year later to Fallon Creek, and during the summer the grazing ground was in the region of Ismay. The next move was to Whitney Creek, where Mr. McKay had the business partly wound up when the blizzard of April, 1892, struck him. Sixteen hundred head perished in that storm, and only 600 were left. Mr. McKay then used all his credit to buy sheep, but it was a most inauspicious time to promote the sheep industry. Wool was going down and conditions were rapidly approaching the panic year of 1893. His last shipment of wool was sold for 7c a pound, and he was glad to find a buyer who would take his sheep at 90c a head.

Despite such discouraging circumstances Mr. McKay was not ready to quit and evidently liked Montana and was satisfied to cast in his lot permanently with the state. He then turned his resources more and more to cattle, ranging them on Whitney Creek, where he fenced in a large tract of the public lands. Eventually his cattle had a pasture with a twenty-mile fence around it, and besides 500 head of cattle he had about 300 horses. His original brand was the "8-5," which he soon changed to the present brand, the Lazy-3-X, described as lazy three x. Mr. McKay entered a desert claim on Whitney Creek, and placed the pioneer improvements, beginning with a one-room log shelter, which was gradually enlarged to eight rooms and a bunk-house with two rooms. He also had ample shelter for 700 head of stock, and outside there was a good protection afforded by the breaks. The next misfortunte was a fire which destroyed sheds, corrals, implements and much of his hay. After this Mr. McKay changed his location to Fallon Creek, near Ismay, going there just as the railroad was building through. Here he owned a section astride the creek, on which are located his improvements, also a section and a half cornering with the first section and another half section still further out. As a cattleman Mr. McKay exercises good judgment in crossing the Hereford, Polled Angus and Short Horns, and gets what he considers not only better beef animals, but one with a maximum of ranging ability and storm resistence. The present McKay ranch has been developed by Mr. McKay and includes ample buildings, a number of acres seeded to alfalfa, and much of the roughage required by his stock is produced on the place. Fallon Creek at this point abounds in cottonwood timber, furnishing stock shade and fuel and also quantities of lumber.

Besides the ranch Mr. McKay is a director of the Farmers and Stock Growers State Bank of Ismay, and was also a stockholder and helped establish the Ismay Fair Grounds. He is a stockholder in the Masonic Temple at Miles City, the Masonic Lodge being his only fraternal connection. He cast his first vote in the South as a democrat, but eventually allied himself with the republican party and for a number of years has regarded that as his permanent affiliation.

Mr. McKay married at Birmingham, Alabama, Josephine Witsendingler, who died there. In New York City he married Rene Parks. Mr. McKay has no children.

HAL S. WITHINGTON is an old timer of Montana, though by no means an old man. For upwards of thirty years he has been identified with the community of Forsyth, chiefly as a merchant and business man. His father was one of the prominent pioneers of Montana Territory.

His father is the venerable Peter S. Withington, now living retired in California. He was born at Ashland, Ohio, January 12, 1837, and eight years later, in 1845, accompanied his parents to Rock County, Wisconsin. Though he grew up on a farm he came of a family of watchmakers and gunsmiths. His grand ancestor was a mechanic who made clocks out of wood and later of brass, also hammered out spoons from silver coins, some of this plate being in the family today. A brother of Peter S. Withington was Charles B. Withington, who invented the first self-binder and secured a patent, but when about to lose it through infringement sold his right to the McCormicks, who adapted his invention, and for many years he remained in the company's service as foreman and mechanical adviser.

Peter S. Withington during his active life had many experiences in the Far West. As early as 1861 he freighted across the plains to Colorado. He then returned to Wisconsin, and about 1862 enlisted in the Thirteenth Wisconsin Infantry. He was with his regiment in the South, though it was his fortune to participate in none of the greater battles. He was discharged at the close of the war, having been injured when run over by a cannon, and for many years he was a pensioner.

After the war, like many thousands of old Union soldiers, he went to Kansas and settled in Franklin County, maintaining his family there near Williamsburg until 1878. However, in the meantime as an itinerant jewelry merchant and watch repairer he visited many parts of the great West. As early as 1867 he came to Montana, visiting the mining camps, selling jewelry and repairing watches. He came to know some of the pioneer personalities and the life of old Alder Gulch, and during two years saw many other historic points in the old territory. On leaving Montana he went down the Missouri River from Fort Benton in an open boat to Sioux City, Iowa.

In 1879 he acquired a more permanent interest in Montana and in 1880 brought his family to the Northwest, spending the first year in Pease Bottom. It is believed that Peter Withington shipped the first self binder into Montana, bringing it by boat up the Yellowstone to Junction and using it to harvest his own grain and that of some of his neighbors. After locating at old Junction he practically gave up his trade and business as a jeweler and watch repairer and practiced agriculture. In 1886 he removed to Wyoming, settling on Pass Creek, near Sheridan, where he continued operations as a farmer and stock man. But since 1900 he has lived at Santa Cruz, California. Peter Withington has been a republican from the time of Lincoln. In Wisconsin he married Miss Jane Griffin, who was born at Scranton, Pennsylvania, a daughter of James Griffin. To their marriage were born four children: Loran, a resident of British Columbia; Hal S.; Effie, who died at the age of six years; and Leroy, who died while a soldier in the Spanish-American war at Jacksonville, Florida.

Hal S. Withington was born on his father's farm in Franklin County, Kansas, in 1871, and was about nine years of age when he came to Montana. He grew up at the old town of Junction, and altogether had limited opportunities to attend school. When he was about seven years of age his father had taken the family back to Wisconsin, and for two years he attended a country school in that state. For two months he was a pupil on the overland stage school in Pease Bottom, Montana, and finished his education in a private school and finally a district school at Junction. In the spring of 1889 Mr. Withington went to work for the Northern Pacific Railway as freight clerk at Custer.

In 1892 he first came to Forsyth, clerking for Thomas Alexander two years, spent the following summer as a cow puncher on the roundup for the 7 U K outfit, for a year worked with Donovan & Spear at Billings, and for two or three years following was again at his old home town at Junction, employed by Charles Spear & Company. Lured by the gold discoveries, he went to Alaska in 1898 and spent some time around Dawson City, prospecting unsuccessfully. He started back toward the States on a little steamboat, and at times helped pull with rope up the swift current of the Yukon. He reached home after an absence of thirteen months in the Far North. He then continued employment with the successors of the old Spear Company until 1900, when he went to the Crow Agency and managed the store of C. T. Babcock, the Indian trader, and his successor, A. L. Babcock, until 1903.

Mr. Withington has made his permanent home at Forsyth since 1903, when in association with others he formed the Richardson Mercantile Company, taking charge of its grocery department. In 1916 he acquired this department as his independent enterprise, and has since carried on a succesful business.

Mr. Withington has always been a citizen ready to respond to various community projects and his country's need, and during a portion of the World war was food administrator of Rosebud County and a leader in the Liberty Bond sales. He cast his first presidential vote for Benjamin Harrison in 1892 at Forsyth. In that town he took his first degrees of Masonry and is a member of the Elks at Miles City.

At the Crow Agency February 23, 1901, Mr. Withington married Miss Bertha C. Conn, who was born at Peru, Indiana, and came to Montana a year before her marriage. She is a daughter of V. C. and Anna Conn, and the oldest of three children. Her brother Ed is associated with Mr. Withington in the grocery business at Forsyth. Her sister is Mrs. Guy Newsbaum, of Peru, Indiana.

Emmett F. Meyerhoff. While he came to Montana eighteen years ago as a railway agent, Mr. Meyerhoff is best known in Rosebud County as president of the First National Bank of Forsyth and as one of the men of capital and enterprise who have done most to develop the wonderful agricultural resources of this part of the Yellowstone Valley through irrigation and practical farming.

Mr. Meyerhoff was born near Villisca in Adams County, Iowa, September 22, 1867. His grandfather came from Hanover, Germany, about 1830, living for a few years in Ohio, subsequently in Seymour, Indiana, and eventually moved out to Iowa and died near Villisca about 1870. At Seymour, Indiana, was born John H. Meyerhoff, who removed to Iowa in 1856, and spent his early youth on a farm in Adams County. The year of the Civil war he enlisted a private in Company F of the Twenty-third Iowa Infantry, was with Grant's army during the siege of Vicksburg, later took part in the Red River campaign under Banks, and was in the siege of Mobile, including the reduction of Forts Spanish and Blakeley. Soon afterward the war ended and he was discharged at Davenport in the summer of 1865. His brother Fred died during the Red River expedition.

The war over, he resumed his industrious work as a farmer and that was the effective part he played in life. He died in 1890, at the age of fifty. As a republican he filled some minor offices, and was a member of the Masonic Order and the Presbyterian Church. He married Mary J. White, who died in 1906. She was born near Zanesville, Ohio, July 22, 1846. Her grandfather had been a captain in the British army during the Revolutionary war, remained in this country when independence was achieved, and became a sterling American citizen and was a pioneer of Ohio. Dennis White, father of Mrs. Mary Meyerhoff, was an Ohio man. The children of John H. Meyerhoff and wife were: Emmett F.; Dennis H., of Corning, Iowa; Mrs. Florence Wooddell, of Villisca; Miss Lillian C., of Washington, D. C.; Miss Grace, of Villisca; and Lieut. Charles L., of Villisca, who went overseas with the Rainbow Division and later served with the Seventy-seventh Division in France and Belgium.

Emmett F. Meyerhoff lived on his father's farm in Iowa until he was seventeen years of age. He attended the public schools of Villisca, and besides learning something of the practical side of farming he acquired a knowledge of telegraphy. Suffering impaired health from the climate of Iowa, he started West in search of more vigorous atmosphere, and for a time lived in the State of Nebraska. With the Burlington Railway he served as an operator at Louisville, and altogether spent a dozen years railroading. The Burlington Company sent him to Montana in 1898 as agent at Crow Agency. Leaving railroad work in 1902, he came to Forsyth as one of the organizers of the First National Bank, to succeed the Forsyth State Bank. This is one of the stable and conservatively managed institutions in that part of the state, has a capital of $75,000 and surplus of $25,000. Senator John E. Edwards was the first president, the first cashier was J. P. Auld, while Mr. Meyerhoff became assistant cashier, subsequently being promoted to cashier and has been president since 1913. Other officers and directors are: J. P. McCuiston, vice president; P.

J. Bunker, cashier; H. D. O'Brien, assistant cashier, and Charles A. Westphal, director.

Farming and farm development have been an important feature of Mr. Meyerhoff's business activities ever since coming to Forsyth. In the Yellowstone Valley he has acquired otherwise unproductive land, made profitable farms and invested a large amount of capital in substantial and permanent improvements. For the benefit of his own land and those of his associates and the valley in general he has been a leader in irrigation and was one of the first to suggest the organization of the Yellowstone Irrigation District, a project completed in 1910. This district now affords water for 12,000 acres of land, and these lands, comprising an important rural community on the south side of the river, are a tremendous asset to Forsyth's agricultural production. The original cost of the system was a quarter of a million dollars, and the annual outlay for maintenance and other purposes involve the sum of $40,000.

Busied with affairs that of themselves constitute a public service, Mr. Meyerhoff has never entered practical politics, contenting himself with voting largely for the man, though his normal preferences are for the republican candidate. He is a Mason, being eminent commander of Allenby Commandery No. 20 of the Knights Templar, and is a member of Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. During the war he was chairman of the Bureau of Civilian Relief, and is still chairman of the Home Service section of the bureau.

Miss Anna E. Dunning was born and reared on a farm in Iowa adjoining the Meyerhoff family, and was a playmate and schoolmate of Emmett Meyerhoff. They were married April 26, 1893. She had completed her education in the Presbyterian Academy at Corning, Iowa, and had been a teacher. Her parents were Almon and Eliza (Amspoker) Dunning, who reared a large family of children. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Meyerhoff is Miriam, a young woman of liberal education who has discovered for herself an interesting program of activities. She spent two years in the Western Woman's College at Oxford, Ohio, a year in Northwestern University at Evanston, Illinois, and took a special course in occupational work at Reed College, Portland, Oregon. She was in the hospital service at Camp Lewis until that service was discontinued, and during the war was also assistant superintendent of Red Cross at Forsyth and gave much of her time to that work. She is the only woman in Rosebud County honored with membership in the American Legion.

Frank K. Hollenbeck has been an interested participant in the life and affairs of Rosebud County for twelve years, and had achieved a substantial success as a rancher and stock man before he was called to his public duties as postmaster at Forsyth, an office he has filled with every degree of credit and efficiency for four years past.

Mr. Hollenbeck was born at Fremont, Dodge County, Nebraska, June 18, 1878, and represents a distinguished name of that state. His father, the late Judge Conrad Hollenbeck, was a native of Pennsylvania. From his native state he went into the Civil war as a private in the Two Hundred and Seventh Pennsylvania Infantry, and was with the Army of the Potomac from the Battle of the Wilderness until the close of hostilities.

After the war he studied law and soon became identified with the life and affairs of the western state of Nebraska. For many years he enjoyed a large practice at Fremont, which was his home when he died, though his last years were spent as a member of the Supreme Court of Nebraska, and he was its chief justice at the time of his death. He was an influential democrat and was a delegate to the famous Chicago convention of 1896 when William J. Bryan won his first nomination. While Judge Hollenbeck agreed with Mr. Bryan on the silver issue he frequently disagreed with him on other questions. Judge Hollenbeck represented an old and distinguished family lineage in Pennsylvania. The Hollenbecks originally came from Holland and were identified with some of the early colonial settlements in this country. Judge Conrad Hollenbeck married Jeanette Knox, also a native of the Keystone State and representative of one of the old Pennsylvania families. She is still living at Fremont, and of her two sons Frank is the only survivor.

Frank K. Hollenbeck acquired his early education in the city schools of Fremont, and was graduated in 1900 from the law department of the State University at Lincoln. Though educated as a lawyer he has found his chief occupation in other lines. For a time he was connected with banking at Fremont and later was cashier of the Banner County Bank at Harrisburg, Nebraska.

On leaving Nebraska Mr. Hollenbeck came to Montana in 1908 and entered and proved up a homestead on Smith Creek south of Forsyth. He made entry during the very early settlement of that locality and continued a growing and prosperous business as a stockman and farmer until 1916, when he sold his interests and moved to Forsyth.

Mr. Hollenbeck was appointed postmaster in 1916 as successor of L. W. Katzenstein. He has administered the office to the satisfaction of all concerned and at the same time has taken a public spirited part in the community and was an interested worker in behalf of all war movements. He cast his first presidential vote in Dodge County, Nebraska, and has always been a democrat.

At Forsyth, November 15, 1905, he married Miss May Alexander, daughter of Thomas Alexander. Her father was one of the early settlers of what is now Rosebud County, and Mrs. Hollenbeck is a native of Forsyth. To their marriage have been born five children, named Thomas, Janet, Gretchen, Prudence and John.

Thomas Alexander. In 1919 death claimed a real pioneer and a very prominent and useful citizen of Rosebud County and Forsyth. Thomas Alexander came to the Territory of Montana in the centennial year of 1876, and was practically the first to settle and initiate business enterprise in what is now the flourishing little city of Forsyth, whose best interests were always close to his heart.

He was born at Farmiston, Carleton County, New Brunswick, July 9, 1856. His father, David Alexander, came from Scotland in 1830, and lived a long and successful career as a farmer in New Brunswick. The mother of Thomas Alexander was Elizabeth Stickney, who was born in New York State, but whose parents were natives of England and when she was a child moved to New Brunswick, where she met and married David Alexander and survived him five years. She was the mother of six sons and a daughter, George, Richard, James, John, Thomas, William and Amelia, who married Solomon Ketchin. The first of this family to come to the United States was George, who located in Idaho and was soon afterward followed by Thomas. William also came to this country. The other children remained in Canada.

Thomas Alexander grew up in New Brunswick, attended district schools and graduated from the high school at Woodstock in 1872. The following year, at the age of seventeen, he came to the United States and at Boise, Idaho, followed prospecting and mining until his advent to Montana Territory in 1876. At old Fort Keogh, near Miles City, he worked as a clerk, and was also a cowboy in the employ of Mr. McVey. With the outbreak of the Nez Perce Indian war in 1877 he joined General Howard's command, and was in the campaign until Chief Joseph and his band were subdued.

After this brief experience as a soldier, and in the fall of 1877, Mr. Alexander located in the districts of which Forsyth is the prominent town. He remained continuously with that locality for the remaining forty odd years of his life. There was no town, and he practically had no neighbors, though a few other stock outfits were in that general region. Therefore his efforts as a rancher might be properly called the first enterprise of white man in the present Forsyth locality. His nearest market point was Miles City, and many years passed before this portion of Custer County was laid off as Rosebud County, with Forsyth the county seat. Mr. Alexander continued running stock on the range until 1883-84, when he opened a general store. His first building was his log cabin home near the bank of the river, and that was succeeded by another log cabin, and in that he and his family lived until it became the custom of the settlers to erect more modern residences. In 1896 he erected the generous frame house in which he enjoyed the pleasures of life until his death. His first store building was a small frame shack, situated on the corner where the Alexander Hotel now stands. For many years his business as a merchant was as a factor in the Home Trading Company.

Mr. Alexander used his capital and influence in a way to make him the most conspicuous builder in the early days of Forsyth. He put up many of the structures still standing along Main Street and in other parts of the town. He also joined other local business men in the establishment of the first bank at Forsyth, the Merchants Bank, which was a private institution, and he gave much of his time to its successful management. As a banker, merchant, owner and manager of lands and townsite property he had many affairs to occupy his time and attention.

With the creation of Rosebud County he was chosen one of the first county commissioners, his colleagues being Hunter Terrett and Thomas Hammond. The administration proved a turbulent one, as those who remember that far back can testify. He served on later county boards, notably the one which built the new court house. With the close of that term his official connection with Rosebud County ceased. As a democrat he was in the minority party of the county, and that fact created a jealousy which led to much of the turmoil which characterized the administration of the county board. For many years he participated in political campaigns, was well able to defend his position and give reason for his convictions, though he was in no sense a speech maker, but made his influence felt quietly and through individual contact with his fellow men. Altogether Thomas Alexander, in the opinion of his associates and friends was born under a lucky star and it guided him out of many embarrassing situations.

In religious matters he made no distinction in his donation to churches and in every way he was liberal as a citizen. To aid the railroad he moved his property back and permitted the company to occupy some of his land on an exchange basis he had arranged with the company. His homestead was entered between the bluff and the river, and some of it has been developed and is known as the Alexander Addition to the town. Fraternally he was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias and the Elks.

In 1882 Mr. Alexander married Melissa Wyant at Miles City. Her father, Benjamin Wyant, was one of the early settlers of this Montana region. She was born in Minnesota but was reared in Montana, and died at Forsyth a year after her marriage. Her only child is the wife of Postmaster Hollenbeck, of Forsyth. On January 24, 1884, at Jacksontown, New Brunswick, Mr. Alexander married Miss Mary Fitzpatrick, who survived him. Her parents were Anthony and Caroline (Hanna) Fitzpatrick. Her father came to America from Ireland at the age of sixteen, and spent the years of his married life at Jacksontown, New Brunswick. He was a farmer, and a man of quiet and earnest character. He died in 1898, at the age of seventy-seven, and Mrs. Alexander's mother passed away March 15, 1916, aged ninety years. Mrs. Alexander was the third in a family of five children, the others being Charles, who died at Waterville, Maine; George, a resident of Aroostook County, Maine; Ella, Mrs. James Breed, and Anna, Mrs. Chicoine, both residents of Lynn, Massachusetts.

Mrs. Alexander grew up a farmer's daughter, acquired a public school education and for thirty-five years was the devoted companion of her husband and witnessed his successes and reverses and shared in both. She became affiliated with the Rebekahs and Eastern Star, and these with her household duties and the interest she took in Mr. Alexander's business have made her residence at Forsyth a busy one. She and Mr. Alexander did their share in the World war, with loyal spirit and with material contribution of funds to the various causes, including the Red Cross, to which Mrs. Alexander was particularly helpful.

PAUL JONES. As an example of an independent, self reliant and constructive citizen who has made his own way in the world and has achieved no small degree of success as a Montana rancher and business man, the case of Paul Jones, of Forsyth, may be properly reviewed.

Mr. Jones, who has been in Montana for fifteen years, was born at Chicago, September 24, 1879, and is the only surviving child of Hiram C. and Adelaide (Cook) Jones. His father was a native of Vermont and his mother of Wisconsin. Hiram Jones died in 1882, when his son was three years of age. The widowed mother subsequently married and went to South America, and it is believed she was finally lost in the Gulf of Mexico.

In the meantime Paul Jones lived at the home of a half-sister, Mrs. Walter S. Horton, at Peoria, Illinois, spent some time in the home of a friend of the family and a few years of his boyhood were passed in Kansas. Eventually he returned to the home of his half-sister at Peoria, and lived there until he was old enough to make his own way. He acquired most of his education at Peoria, and after completing a high school course went to Chicago and was an employe of Bartlett, Frazier and Company and their successors in the grain business. For two years he was with the Corn Products Company in the Chicago offices. At that time this company was introducing to the market "Karo," the popular corn syrup.

Mr. Jones left Chicago and came to Montana in 1905 to launch out into something entirely different from previous experience and achieve a place as a constructive factor in a new country. He established himself in Rosebud County, where his first efforts were made in the cattle industry at the head of the East Fork of Armells Creek. He bought a squatter's improvements on unsurveyed land, and subsequently entered his own homestead in that locality, completing his proof by residence and work. For a dozen years he remained in that region raising range cattle and running them under one of three brands, lazy A-4 on the left shoulder, the antelope head on the left side, and lazy DW on the right side. His stock when finished for the market was sent to Chicago and Omaha.

Leaving that scene of his pioneer efforts he bought the old FUF cow camp near the mouth of Armells Creek, and from this land developed a hay ranch. Here he completed fourteen years of consecutive labor as a Montana rancher, and in the fall of 1919 closed out his holdings, shipped his cattle to Dakota for the winter feed, and in the spring of 1920 moved to Forsyth and entered the real estate business as a partner in the firm of Hill and Jones. With a thorough knowledge of Montana lands, particularly in Rosebud County, and with a thorough business training, Mr. Jones is well qualified for continued success in a new field.

On coming to manhood he allied himself with the republican party, casting his first presidential vote for William McKinley in 1900. The only public service he has rendered in official capacity has been as a member of school boards on Armells Creek. He has recently acquired membership in the Masonic Order. During America's participation in the World war the Jones family performed its part in carrying war burdens by the puchase of bonds and contributions to other causes. Mr. Jones responded with all his power to the call for increased production of grain and beef, and kept himself in readiness for call to sterner duty whenever the draft board reached his classification.

At Clarion, Pennsylvania, Mr. Jones married Miss Mary Wilson on October 10, 1906. She was born in that section of Pennsylvania, daughter of S. Winfield Wilson. The Wilsons are an old Pennsylvania family of Clarion County, and for many years were identified with the iron furnace industry and lumbering. Mrs. Jones had a finished education, having attended the National Park Seminary at Washington and Miss Ely's exclusive school for girls in New York. She was born the same year as her husband and they have a family of sons and daughters named Paul, Jr., Helen Wilson, Walter Gordon and Mary Virginia.

JOHN VAN, of Fallon, is one of the citizens of eastern Montana who have seen this region develop for three decades. His chief business has been ranching, both cattle and horses, and his conduct of business affairs and his relationship with the community mark him as one of the high grade men, substantial, public spirited and generally esteemed.

Mr. Van was born at St. Jacque, not far from Montreal, Quebec, Canada, in 1866, son of Joseph and Felice (Landre) Van. Joseph Van was a French Canadian. John Van was one of a family of nine sons and a daughter, three of the sons having come to Montana. John grew up on a farm in Quebec, attended a French school and had knowledge of no other language when he came to the United States.

He reached Montana in the fall of 1888. coming by way of Northern Pacific Railroad. The previous five years had been spent in Nevada, where he was employed in hauling wood for the railroad company, driving a sixteen horse team, a jerk-line outfit. He became an expert in handling his team, and while working in Nevada he also thriftily saved something from his earnings, and brought enough capital with him to Montana to buy his first bunch of cattle, about fifty head.

While he stopped for a time at Terry, he soon established himself as a rancher at Fallon. His present home contains the site where he settled as a squatter. Beginning with range cattle he bred up a high grade of White Faced stock through the years and was an individual shipper of beef cattle to the Chicago market. He has also bred Shire horses, finding his market for horses in Montana. Besides his own enterprise as a stockman Mr. Van gave much of his time in the early years to work as a cowboy on the range. Some of the large concerns that employed him in that capacity were the XIT, the 101 outfit, for which he ran the wagons, and the LH outfit owned by Jim Drummond.

Mr. Van took up his homestead in 1896. The quarter section lies against the Fallon townsite. His pioneer home is his present one, comprising five rooms, a house he built of logs, and since then sided and made very comfortable, and is in fact one of the better farm houses of the locality. Mr. Van owns besides this claim two sections of land east of Mildred, which he uses for grazing land. He retired from the cattle business several years ago, and his only stock at present is a small bunch of horses. He adopted the brand LC on the left shoulder for the horses and for the cattle ZD on the right ribs.

Mr. Van was a settler in Custer County when he came to Montana, and in recent years his home has been included in the territory of Prairie County. He took out his naturalization papers in Miles City, and since becoming a voter has been identified with the republican party, though not in practical politics. He was an ardent admirer of the late Theodore Roosevelt. He also took stock in the Montana State Bank of Fallon, and for two years served on its Board of Directors.

At Miles City, Montana, December 5, 1892, Mr. Van married Mrs. Amelia Lanseign. She was born in Lorignal, Canada, May 16, 1866, daughter of Issac and Marian (Vincent) Balanger. Her father was a native of Canada and a farmer. Mrs. Van is one of four children, and is the only one of the family in Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Van have one child, Myrtle Virginia. Mrs. Van by her first husband has three children. John W., of Glendive, volunteered for the World war, was in a Machine Gun Company in the 14th Infantry, but failed to get across because of the early armistice. Sophie Lanseign became the wife of Henry Nelson, of Glendive, and they have two children, Ella and Henry. Nettie, who is the wife of Frank Van, a brother of John, lives in St. Jacque, Canada, and has two children, named Gilbert and Willie.

HARTWIG LUND. While he is the leading merchant of the town of Fallon, Hartwig Lund has been selling goods only a few years, and has been longest known in that section of Montana as a farmer and rancher. He is a pioneer of Eastern Montana, having come to the territory nearly thirty-five years ago.

Mr. Lund was born in the country just east of Christiana, Norway, October 9, 1865, son of Ole and Mary (Osnes) Lund. His father was a farmer in the same locality as had been his ancestors for generations. Hartwig was the third son in a family of four boys and two girls, and is the only one in the United States.

In Norway he acquired the equivalent of a common school education, and grew up with the knowledge of a farmer boy. With that equipment, and with barely enough funds to get him across the ocean and nearly across the continent he arrived at Miles City, Montana, February 22, 1886. His first employment was at Fort Keough as a man of all work for Mr. McQueen, the merchant, at wages of $15 a month. Two months later, at the opening of spring, he found a job in a brickyard at $40 a month. When the plant shut down two months later he went to a ranch on Pumpkin Creek, and remained there during shearing time and hay making. Following that he helped build an irrigation ditch on Tongue River until late in the fall, when he was laid off and was idle until January 24, 1887. Like many of the early settlers Mr. Lund had a versatile gift sufficient to enable himself to engage in various employments, and his next work was as a bridge carpenter with the Northern Pacific Railway. This work was between Glendive and Billings, and for five and a half years he was with a crew working regularly and ready to respond to a summons at any hour of the night. He was paid $2.75 a day while with the bridge gang, and left that to take a position as sectionman on the road, he remained at Fallon as section foreman seven years, at wages of $50 a month.

While his salary was never large as a railroader Mr. Lund saved some capital, and used it to buy out a ranchman and cattle in Yellowstone Breaks, near Fallon. He began ranching in earnest in 1900 with a hundred and one head of Minnesota cattle (dogees), and continued the industry actively for nineteen years. Eventually he established himself on Cabin Creek, where his present ranch is and where he made his best success. This ranch embraces 600 acres, is watered by an artesian well, has a two-story frame house of eight rooms, with shed for stock and other equipment. He has combined grain farming, and in favorable seasons has made a great deal of profit from wheat and oats.

While in the Cabin Creek locality Mr. Lund helped start the educational work, his children attending school in district No. 47. He was a member of the School Board and has always favored good schools and a long term. Leaving the ranch in August, 1917, Mr. Lund engaged in merchandising at Fallon, buying a stock of goods from Charles Hansen, a general merchant. He now has the leading store over a large district of territory, housed in a two-story brick building 30x76 feet, with full basement, and equipped with steam heating and eletric light plants. Mr. Lund has been a stockholder in the Montana State Bank of Fallon since it was organized, and was one of six men to furnish the capital for drilling the artesian well in Fallon, a well that flows with a capacity of seventy gallons a minute.

Mr. Lund had been in America only a short time when he took out his citizenship papers at Miles City in the fall of 1886, and secured his final papers in 1892, casting his first presidential vote that year for Benjamin Harrison. He has been acting with the republican party ever since. Mr. Lund now enjoys a favorable situation as to his financial affairs and also has a splendid family of young people quite ready and well qualified to relieve him of his heavier responsibilities. He married at Miles City December 25, 1893, Miss Sophie Leskela. She was born north of Helsingors, Finland, June 25, 1875, came to the United States alone, reaching Montana in 1892, and while employed at Fallon met her future husband. Mrs. Lund died October 26, 1918. The oldest child is George Albert Lund, a garage man at Fallon. Olga Marie was liberally educated, has taught school, but is now her father's housekeeper. Elmer Edwin and Leo are both on their father's Cabin Creek ranch. John William is associated with his father in the store. The youngest, Lawrence Silas, is in the eighth grade of the public schools at Fallon.

John C. Bogue, president and manager of the Newton Hardware & Implement Company, which he helped to organize at Roundup, is a man who has always had a firm and abiding faith in the ultimate reward of homely honesty, direct diligence and unselfish loyalty to the task at hand, and his success in life proves that he was right. He was born at Pittsford, Vermont, May 14, 1862, a son of Marcus C. and Sarah (Giddings) Bogue. Marcus C. Bogue was born at Canton, New York, on July 8, 1827, and his wife, who was Sarah Giddings, was born in West Rutland, Vermont, on August 27, 1878. John C. Bogue was the youngest of the five children born to his parents, three of whom survive. While still a young man Marcus C. Bogue went to Pittsford, Vermont, and there engaged in a general merchandise business, which he continued until 1870, at which time he came west to Sioux City, Iowa, and until 1890 carried on a boot and shoe business. Selling that, he began handling real estate and making loans, and was so engaged until his death, which occurred December 11, 1907. His wife died February 4, 1908, both at Sioux City, Iowa. The Congregational Church had in him a faithful member, and he was equally zealous in living up to the teachings of the Masonic fraternity. In politics he was a republican, but his private affairs were too engrossing to permit of his entering public life, although he always exerted his right of suffrage.

After attending the public schools of Sioux City, Iowa, in which he secured an excellent knowledge of the fundamentals, John C. Bogue began to be self-supporting as a clerk in the employ of a railroad construction company, with which he remained until 1909, at which time he came to Montana and spent a year as Ismay, Custer County, leaving it for Roundup. Here he took steps to found his present company and it was organized in July, 1910. Since January, 1914, he has been its president and general manager, his associates in it being C. C. Hopkins, vice president, and C. J. Jeffries, secretary and treasurer. This company is one of the solid concerns of Musselshell County and a large trade is controlled by it. Like his father, Mr. Bogue has not cared for political preferment, and he follows in his father's footsteps in supporting the republican party. For a year Mr. Bogue was president of the Pioneer Club of Roundup.

On October 22, 1894, Mr. Bogue was united in marriage with Jennie Bridenbecker, born at Phelps, New York. They were married at Sioux City, Iowa, and they have two children, namely: George Henry and Doris M. Mr. Bogue is one of the superior type of self-reliant, clear-brained business men of this region, and under his capable management his company has grown until it occupies a commanding position among similar concerns in this part of Montana.

Leon B. Clark Merchandising always plays an important part in the commercial life of any community, and the man who distributes the greatest amount of the necessities of life among the population tributary to a given point is in every sense an important citizen. In the town of Mildred, Prairie County, Leon B. Clark is the chief exemplar of this business and is a pioneer of the locality.

Mr. Clark came to Montana from a little town in Southern Michigan where the Clarks have been prominent in business affairs for a great many years. He was born at Bronson, Branch County, March 21, 1878. His grandfather, Milo Clark, Sr., established a hardware business in Bronson in pioneer times, and later the Clark family erected the principal hotel of the village. Milo Clark was a native of New York, grew up near the ocean and in early life was a cod fisherman. For that work he acquired the money necessary to give himself a medical education, and he located in Southern Michigan when much of the country was new and swampy and traveled long distances by horseback to attend his patients. Later he engaged in merchandising at Bronson, conducting both a drug and hardware store. Gradually the main interest was shifted to hardware, and his son Milo M. came into the management of the store and thenceforth conducted it entirely for hardware and implements. Milo M. Clark, Jr. was born at Antwerp. Ohio, August 22, 1854, and was long associated with the business at Bronson Michigan. In 1910 he came out to Montana and is now one of the few retired citizens of Mildred. He is a member of the Congregational Church and a democrat in politics. He married Ida M. Bennett, daughter of Christopher Columbus Bennett, who was born in Pennsylvania and was an early settler in Michigan and a farmer and stock buyer and shipper. For fifty-six years he shipped stock to Buffalo, New York. Mrs. Milo M. Clark was born in Madison, Michigan, April 3, 1856. She is the mother of the following children: Leon Bennett, of Mildred; Harold, just ten years younger than Leon and now commercial artist for the Motor Age of Chicago; Arline, wife of Harold Souther, sales manager for the Libby, McNeil & Libby Company and a homesteader at Mildred.

Leon B. Clark was educated in the schools of Bronson and in the Michigan Agricultural College at Lansing, leaving school and marrying in his sophomore year. He had been brought up in the store at Bronson, and in 1908 he came out to Montana primarily to stake a claim. He reached the Mildred community in April, 1908, and within a month had homesteaded. His third effort towards getting a claim succeeded, and he entered a quarter section a half mile from Mildred. His was the second emigrant car unloaded at Mildred, and he established the first business place in town, a hotel, and in the following July branched out in merchandising. Along with his household goods he brought the furnishings for his hotel, the hotel having been built by the syndicate which handled the railroad lines. Mr. Clark managed this for about a year, and while feeding the public he was also doing the work necessary to acquire title to his land. The first building besides the hotel on the townsite was his store, 16x34, and his original stock was worth about $1,500. After abandoning the management of the hotel Mr. Clark devoted his time to farming and merchandising, and both phases of work have occupied him ever since.

On his claim he built a 12x14 box house, which sheltered himself, his wife and two sons for less than a year. He then began the erection of a permanent farm home of six rooms, which is still in use. His farming efforts have been directed toward corn and alfalfa, and his corn crops at times have produced the best of any in this country. His test of seed corn led him to select the Wisconsin 8 as the best adapted to this climate, and in 1915 this seed corn made a yield of forty bushels to the acre. In that year his exhibit of ten years of corn took cash prizes amounting to $141 and the Milwaukee cup, besides some minor premiums. The Grimm alfalfa has done well when properly cared for, and there is always a demand for all that can be grown. Mr. Clark's stock consists of both horses and cattle, and these have more than met his expectations on the range.

Mr. Clark helped organize the local school here in 1909 and has been on the board almost continuously. The original schoolhouse was built by private subscription, and much of the mechanical work was done by the people of the neighborhood. Later the district was bonded and a permanent house was erected.

When Mr. Clark came to Montana Mildred was included in Custer County. He was one of the men most active in creating Prairie County, and was one of the three men of his locality to take up the question, first with Ismay as the possible county seat and later for Terry. Practically the unanimous sentiment of the people of Mildred favored the Terry locality, and Mr. Clark was chairman of the committee which did the active work for this end of Prairie County. Both the Congregationalists and the Catholics built churches in Mildred, and Mr. Clark was a member of the Building Committee of the former denomination. He has been an active leader in republican politics, and was chairman of the Prairie County Republican Committee until he resigned on account of his distance from the county seat. He is a charter member of the Terry Lodge of Masons and helped organize Sandstone Lodge of the same order at Baker. Since April 3, 1909, he has represented the United States Weather Bureau in keeping records of local precipitations, and has also kept temperature readings and records since 1918.

In Branch County, Michigan, December 7, 1899, Mr. Clark married Orie M. Cockle, daughter of William and Susan (Porter) Cockle. Her parents were natives of England, and after their marriage established themselves on a Michigan farm. Mrs. Clark was born at Bronson March 27, 1875. She has two brothers, William and Charles, the latter a druggist at Bronson. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Clark: Leon Waldo, Robert Bennett and William M. The oldest, now associated with his father in business, was a member of the Students Army Training Corps in the Bozeman State College.

GEORGE H. KLEIN, D. D. S. One of the leading exponents of the dental profession in Valley County is Dr. George H. Klein of Glasgow, who has been in active practice at this point since 1905, although he has been a resident of Montana since 1899. He was born in Blue Earth County, Minnesota, August 31, 1871, a son of Conrad Klein.

Conrad Klein was born in Germany and was brought to the United States by his parents when he was twelve years old, in 1848, settlement being made by the family in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and there he was reared and educated in the common schools. With the outbreak of the war between the North and South Conrad Klein entered the Union Army, enlisting in 1861 at New Lisbon, Wisconsin, as a member of Company H, Tenth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and at the expiration of his three-year period re-enlisted and served until the close of the war, or 4 years and 3 months. He took part in the battles of Perryville, Stone River, Missionary Ridge, Chickamauga and the Atlanta campaign, and during all of the war, in spite of his dangerous assignments, was only wounded once. He was discharged in September, 1865. After the close of the war he joined the Grand Army of the Republic and was an enthusiastic member, seldom if ever missing one of the annual encampments.

Following his discharge from the army Conrad

Klein in May, 1866, embarked in a livery business at Mankato, Minnesota, and then, in 1882, became the proprietor of the Clifton House at Mankato and was engaged in that line of business when he died, January 12, 1910, age seventy-four years. He was born on the same day as Mark Twain and was proud of the fact.

Conrad Klein was married to Margaret Ann Cecil Collins and her mother was a direct descendant on the paternal side from General Montgomery of Revolutionary fame, both he and Colonel Harper being great-grandfathers of Mrs. Klein. Mrs. Klein was born at Farmington, Jefferson County, Wisconsin, in 1848, and was taken when sixteen years old to Minnesota. Mrs. Conrad Klein, nee Collins, had three brothers, namely Amos, Ben and Alvin, who were all Union soldiers, and the latter, Capt. Alvin Collins, of the Minnesota State Militia, was engaged against the Sioux when the Civil war broke and was unable to respond to the call of volunteers because the State of Minnesota had its hands full. Captain Collins was with the soldiers who caught the Sioux after the New Ulm Massacre and helped build the scaffold at Mankato on which thirty-eight Indians were condemned to be hanged. President Lincoln held up the execution, and between postponement and the day of hanging reprieved all but thirty-nine of them. One died before the date of the execution and thirty-eight were executed on December 26, 1862. Captain Collins remained with the Minnesota soldiery keeping the Indians in check until 1864, when he became a lieutenant in the First Regiment, Minnesota Heavy Artillery. He was discharged at the end of the war with honors. He also built the scaffold in 1880 and later in the '90s at the state penitentiary of Oregon used for years for the execution of felons. Mr. and Mrs. Klein had but two children born to them, Doctor Klein's sister being Miss Laura E. Klein of Mankato, Minnesota.

Doctor Klein took his dental work in the American College of Dentistry at Chicago, Illinois, and in the Dental Department of Northwestern University, completing his course in the Dental Department of the Central University of Kentucky at Louisville, Kentucky, from which he was graduated July 1, 1897. He had gained some practical experience as a dental surgeon under Dr. Frank Kessler of Kilbourn City, and after his graduation he established himself in practice in several places in Wisconsin, Indiana, and at Chicago, Illinois.

It was while on a trip as lieutenant colonel of the order of the Sons of Veterans to the National Encampment held at Helena, Montana, that Doctor Klein awakened to the great possibilities of the state. Upon his return home, while talking of his trip with his father and others, he expressed the determination to make Montana his future home as soon as he was through with his professional studies. His father approved of the sentiment, for he believed in young men going further west, and encouraged him in every way possible.

Coming to Montana in 1899, Doctor Klein was engaged in practice all over Eastern Montana, making Forsyth his headquarters. From there he would cover the field, part of the time going to the communities along the route of the Northern Pacific Railroad, including Glendive, Wibaux, Rosebud and on the Great Northern Railroad to Columbia Falls, Whitefish, Shelby, Chester and others. He also visited sheep camps cow camps and ranch houses, carrying a driver with him for his team. He was traveling with a team and outfit in this manner and visiting the region of Glasgow when he was held up on account of high water between this place and Forsyth, so he arranged to "camp" at Glasgow for the winter. His experience during that winter decided him, and in the following July he became a permanent resident of Glasgow. He then abandoned his team work and opened his office, being at that time the only dentist between Williston and Chinook, but since then many others of his calling have come into this section and with him belong to the State Dental Association, of which he is now a past vice president.

When he became a permanent resident of Glasgow Doctor Klein assumed the practical burdens of citizenship and participated in its official honors. being elected the second mayor of the city. During his administration the electric light plant was installed, a bond issue passed, and plans for waterworks prepared. The public library was built. It was while he was in office that he filed on 158 acres of land for cemetery and park purposes for the city from the Government, President Roosevelt's signature being attached to the patent. At the time some censored him, but he was within the law and time has vindicated him and this land is now a valuable asset of Glasgow.

Doctor Klein is a republican, and cast his first presidential vote for Benjamin Harrison in 1892. His fraternal work began with his joining the Knights of Pythias at Elron, Wisconsin, and was continued when he was made a Mason. He was made a Blue Lodge Mason at Forsyth, Montana, in January, 1902, by Hiram Lodge No. 52, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and he demitted to North Star Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Glasgow, August 5, 1906, of which he is a past master. Doctor Klein also belongs to Great Falls Council, to Chapter No. 17, Glasgow; Glasgow Commandery No. 13, Helena Consistory and Algeria Temple, Mystic Shrine. He belongs to Havre Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is past president of the Commercial Club of Glasgow and was one of the first to organize a club of this class at Glasgow.

On June 8, 1905, Doctor Klein was married at Mondovi, Wisconsin, to Miss Grace Ethel Bond, daughter of Jacob Bond and his wife Jennie (Barrows) Bond. Some of Mrs. Klein's ancestors on the paternal side were rewarded by the United States Government for deeds of bravery during the Revolutionary war. She was born in Wisconsin on July 28, 1880, and is one of four children born to her parents, Aretus F. Bond and wife, two younger ones being Macey and Mrs. Blanche Canar. Doctor and Mrs. Klein have a daughter, Margaret Blanche, who was born April 7, 1906.

During the late war, Doctor Klein was very active, being one of the "Four-Minute" men of Sheridan County; was one of the organizers of the local chapter of the Red Cross, which he served as chairman; was chairman of the local Savings Stamps committee, and took part in the various Liberty Loan drives and those for securing funds for other war purposes. He also served as chief of the American Protective League, an auxiliary to the Department of Justice of the United States, and possesses a badge issued as a memento of his service. It would be difficult to find a man more public spirited in every respect than Doctor Klein and he stands just as high in his profession as he does as a man and a citizen.

ARTHUR N. HOTCHKISS. It is not given to every man to live to see the resuts of strenuous labor fructify, but in a state like Montana, which shows visible development with almost every day, such a condition is not so remarkable. Owing to the resolute determination of its citizens the wonderful natural resources of this great state are utilized and the original defect of lack of abundant water supply remedied until now Montana ranks among the leading agricultural states of the Union. When settlers first migrated to it they found that its great open ranges were admirably suited to the production of cattle, and it has long been one of the greatest beef producing regions of the country. With the opening up of these ranges by the Government came a change in the methods of raising cattle, but the more far-sighted of the cattlemen provided for this and under different conditions continued to furnish the markets with beeves as they had before. One of the men who has long been associated with the cattle industry of the Powder River locality, although he is now retired and for the moment a resident of California so as to give his children the benefit of superior educational advantages, is Arthur N. Hotchkiss, whose abilities were brought out by the demands of pioneer life in Montana.

Born at West Haven, Connecticut, February 19, 1864, Arthur N. Hotchkiss is a son of the late Stephen G. Hotchkiss, and a brother of Samuel A. Hotchkiss, the Brandenburg, Montana, ranchman, whose biography is given elsewhere in this work. During his boyhood Arthur N. Hotchkiss attended the local schools of West Haven, but in 1881 he accompanied his parents to Montana, when settlement was made on Pumpkin Creek, some twenty miles from Miles City, and here he learned the essentials of ranching under pioneer conditions, attaining his majority on his father's ranch.

In the fall of 1885 Mr. Hotchkiss ventured to strike out for himself, and forming a partnership with the veteran soldier and ranchman E. M. Stevens, engaged in the cattle industry on the head of the Little Pumpkin. Subsequently he entered into a partnership with his brother-in-law, Captain Ambrose B. Marvel, which was maintained until 1897, they running cattle under the brand "4-bar-H." About 1897 Mr. Hotchkiss sold his interests and moved to Powder River, where he had homesteaded, and to which he added until he has now 2,000 acres in his fine ranch, now leased since his retirement. This he has devoted to the production of beef from range cattle. At the time he took possession of his homestead the land was in a virgin state and all of the development has been done by him. He erected the present log residence of eight rooms and bath, and in it he spent twenty years of strenuous activity. Having grazed both Shorthorn and White Face cattle, he makes no distinction between the two breeds as profit-makers.

A man of far sight and public spirit, Mr. Hotchkiss has sought to provide adequate educational advantages for the children of the neighborhood and helped to establish the community school at Moorehead, the school building being adjacent to his ranchhouse, and has officiated as a member of the school board, and was not inactive while on it, but one of its most aggressive figures. Brought up a democrat, he was not content to adhere to that party simply because his family had always voted its ticket, but looked closely into the principles enunciated by both parties and found that those of the republicans voiced his own convictions, and consequently gave them his unqualified support. Mr. Hotchkiss belongs to the Presbyterian Church, his wife is a Methodist, while his children are Baptists, and they all work together to bring about a moral uplift and a betterment of conditions. Miles City Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, holds his membership, but aside from this he does not affiliate with outside organizations, his happiness being found with his family.

On November 16, 1898, Mr. Hotchkiss was married in Custer County, Montana to Miss Mary E. Kelsey, a sister of Arthur R. and Frank T. Kelsey, both of whom are mentioned at length in this work. Mr. and Mrs. Hotchkiss became the parents of the following children: Mabel Lucile, who was graduated from the Hollywood High School, California, is now a senior in the University of Redlands, California; Francis Arthur, who was graduated from the Hollywood High School, is in the United States navy as radio electrician; Dorotheo Evelyn, who is a senior in the Hollywood High School; Paul Theodore, who is a student of the same school as Dorotheo; Samuel G., and Vera Ruth, who are students of the grammar school of Hollywood.

Mr. Hotchkiss has not confined his business interests to his ranch, but has invested in the Baker, Montana, Petroleum Company, and is now serving as its president. He is one of the wide-awake men of his period, aggressive and forceful, and has known how to make his efforts amount to much and yet at the same time keep in close touch with the finer things of life. Big of brain and kind of heart, he has made friends everywhere, and he stands as an epitome of all that is best in American citizenship of the real type.

WILLIAM S. ELKINS. Back to New York State must we turn in tracing the lineage and origin of William S. Elkins, one of the influential and highly esteemed citizens of Southeastern Montana. That section of the country which was the cradle of so much of our national history became the home of his ancestors in early times, and he seems to have inherited many of their sterling characteristics, since his life has been one of industry, integrity and public spirit, so that he has richly merited the high standing which he now enjoys among his contemporaries.

William S. Elkins was born in Tonawanda, New York, on February 5, 1853, and is a son of William S., Sr., and Helen (Safford) Elkins. William S. Elkins, Sr., was born in Vermont and was a bound boy from eight years of age. He educated himself and became a school teacher, following that vocation for many years before taking up the pursuit of agriculture. Eventually he moved to Batavia, Illinois, where he engaged in the manufacture of pumps, but finally located in Mendota, where his death occurred. He married Helen Safford, a daughter of Samuel Safford, of Perry, New York. To this union were born the following children: Henry C., who served in the Union army during the Civil war; Mary, the wife of Charles Van Campen, of Rochester, Minnesota; Sarah, now deceased, was the wife of Abner Kidd, of Mendota, Illinois; Ella is the wife of Abner Rose, of Greene County, Iowa; and William S., of this review. Mrs. Helen Elkins died in 1854 and sometime later Mr. Elkins was married to Bathsheba Burr, whose death occurred in Batavia, Illinois. She was the mother of children by a former marriage.

William S. Elkins, the son, lost his father when he was but ten years of age, and the family circumstances were such that he was not given the opportunity for a good school education. However, through the subsequent years he has made up for that deficiency by much reading and close observation of men and events, so that today he is a remarkably well informed man on general topics. From his native town he went to Chicago, Illinois, where he resided at the time of the great fire of 1871 and where he learned the trade of painting and decorating, at which he became an expert. From Chicago Mr. Elkins went to Rochester, Minnesota, where he followed his trade for twenty-five years. The following fifteen years were spent at Spearfish, South Dakota, where he conducted a painting and decorating business. In April, 1912, Mr. Elkins entered the section of Montana in which he now resides, and has been one of the most active and enterprising citizens. He drove into this country from the Black Hills locality following the advent of his sons, who settled here. He then owned four small ponies and a cheap wagon, and he bought a grubstake with the money he had received for his apple crop in Spearfish. The Government survey had not then been made here, but he entered upon the public domain and went to work to create a home. His first effort was the breaking of about three acres of sod for a garden spot, and on that patch they raised two wagon loads of melons, sweet corn and cucumbers, and more Irish potatoes than his family needed. He started in the stock business with a few horses and three cows, and by careful management and good luck these have increased to the modest herd which he now owns. Until recently horses were his chief reliance in animals, but he has lately turned his attention to sheep, in which he is meeting with splendid success. He keeps the Rambouliiet and the Shropshire breeds, heavy-wooled sheep and high-class mutton producers.

Mr. Elkins proved up his homestead, as did his sons, and each has also taken an additional tract, which makes their holdings, together with some small purchases, amount to 1,990 acres. The pioneer home, which sheltered the occupants of the land prior to the advent of the Elkins, is now a part of the family home. Other permanent improvements have added to the value of the ranch and the family are now very comfortably situated.

Mr. Elkins was married to Hattie E. Cook, a daughter of Martin W. and Mary (Benedict) Cook. Mr. Cook was a resident of Michigan, where he was interested in the timber business, but later moved to Minnesota, where he became a successful fruit grower. These parents had three children, those besides Mrs. Elkins being Ed, a banker at Rochester, Minnesota, and Bessie, of Rochester. To Mr. and Mrs. Elkins have been born the following children: Harry S., who is an attorney in the service of the Government at Washington, D. C., married Emily Bradley; Charles M., who is on the ranch with his father; Kenneth K., who is also on the home ranch, married Stella Ratliff and has three children, Lois, William S. and Nannie; and Earl C., who is also at home.

Politically Mr. Elkins has been a life-long supporter of the republican party, having cast his first presidential vote for Rutherford B. Hayes. He has never since missed a presidential election, though in 1916 he traveled over a hundred miles in order to cast his vote. He has been a member of the Masonic fraternity since attaining his majority, and for forty years has been a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, maintaining his membership in both organizations at Rochester, Minnesota. He is a man of sociable and kindly nature, which has made him popular with all who have been associated with him, and because of his commendable personal qualities he enjoys the confidence of all who have had dealings with him.

Major John A. Buntin. The Indian agency of the Cheyennes at Lame Deer, Montana, is presided over by Major John A. Buntin, who is the agent of the Tongue River agency. He has been identified with this work here in the same capacity since December 1, 1914, and as the successor of Major James R. Eddy came to this region from a long period of work in Oklahoma, being one of the old and efficient servants of the Government among the Indians.

Major Buntin began his service at Anadarko, Oklahoma, in 1893 as teacher of the Wichitas and Caddos and was connected with purely educational work for seventeen years, serving as superintendent of that school ultimately and being with it thirteen years. Upon leaving there he went to Lawton as superintendent of that Indian school, supervising the education of the Comanches for four years. In 1911 he was transferred to be superintendent of the Pottawatomies, Shawnees and Kickapoos at Shawnee, Oklahoma, and from that point was transferred to Montana to his present position.

Major Buntin went into Oklahoma early in its territorial life as an appointee in Indian school work. He went from Benton, Illinois, where he had been reared and had fitted himself for teaching and followed public school work for several years, his college studies having been prosecuted at Ewing (Illinois) College, where he completed the normal course. He was born near Rolla, Missouri, March 16, 1867, his father, Samuel Buntin, having settled in that region just after the close of the Civil war. His life was spent there and in Illinois as a farmer and stockman, and his final home was in Franklin County, Illinois, where he died at the age of sixty-three years, following injuries received in a train wreck. Samuel Buntin was a Kentuckian by birth, and being orphaned in infancy he secured only a limited educational training. In spite of this handicap he was a man of sound business judgment, acquired valuable farm lands, and participated in the politics of his community as a democrat. He was without church connections but was a man of the strictest integrity and honor. He married Nancy J. Coppage, a daughter of William Coppage, of Phelps County, Missouri, where Mrs. Buntin was born. She died in Franklin County, Illinois, in 1911, and was the mother of ten children: Mollie, the wife of James Crane, of Thompsonville, Illinois; Martha, who married Alex Summers, of Akin, Illinois; John A., of this notice; Charles W., of Lewiston, Montana; W. S., of Akin, Illinois; James, also a resident of that place; Charles W., of Lewiston, Montana; Frank, of Akin; Guy, a farmer in the vicinity of Akin; and Dr. Grover, a practicing physician of Benton, Illinois. Samuel Buntin's father was a native of Ireland, and he and his wife died early, leaving three sons and two daughters.

Major Buntin's administration covers a period of five years as agent of the Cheyennes, and it has contributed to the prosperity of these people. He has increased the agricultural area and food production, reduced cattle thefts by Indians to such an extent that it has almost ceased, and increased the annual income of the tribe from about $50,000 to $250,000 per annum. The erection of a flouring mill has contributed much toward the convenience of the reservation in the matter of providing flour and gives an impetus to the growing of wheat. Some 15,000 head of Indian-owned stock are on the reservation, and the Indians' grain and hay crops have reached the value of about $120,000, a vast increase from 1914, when it was about $10,000. The schools of the reservation are under the direction of the Major and comprise a boarding school and two day schools, and an increased school attendance is noticeable. One of the Indians, a full-blood, is employed as a class-room teacher.

Major Buntin was married at Wheeling, West Virginia, June 28, 1905, to Loa D. Davis, a daughter of Cyrus and Martha (Hart) Davis, of Wheeling. Mr. Davis, a native of Ohio, was formerly a foundry foreman, and now resides at Martins Ferry, Ohio.

Mrs. Buntin was born in that state, one of the five children of her parents, and for eight years had charge of a department in a large department store at Wheeling. She and her husband are the parents of three children: Martha, aged twelve years; Anna Loa, aged eight years; and Elizabeth, aged five years.

EDWARD MCGEHEE, who is engaged in ranching in the country tributary to Birney in Rosebud County, has been a factor in the development of this region for almost forty years. He came to old Custer County to reside in 1880, and with the passing of the years he has witnessed the growth of the stock industry from its infancy to the zenith of its power, saw the ranches and ranges devastated by the disastrous winter of 1886, when cattle lay dead in great piles on the range, and has also seen the encroachment of the settler and the curtailment of the range, which threatens the cattle industry with gradual reduction.

Mr. McGehee came to Montana to hunt game for the skins, and his outfit, consisting of three men, made its headquarters on the head waters of Bloom Creek. They killed deer, elk and antelope, and also killed a few buffalo for their hides, which they utilized in the Bloom Creek shack. The hunters marketed their pelts in Miles City, a deer skin bringing them a dollar and sixty-five cents, the skin of an elk about the same price, and an antelope hide was worth only fifty cents. The meat they tried to sell to the merchants, but the offer was so low that rather than sell it at the small sum offered the hunters hauled it about the frontier and gave it to the washerwomen and others of the poor and needy classes.

This hunting experience of Mr. McGehee proved unprofitable, and he began work for the Circle Bar ranch on Otter Creek, owned by Howes, Strevell & Miles, the latter being the father of George M. Miles of Miles City. Mr. McGehee was made the foreman of the ranch, and remained in that capacity until the spring of 1887, when he came to the Hangingwoman and bought of Lee Brothers of New York the improvements on their old ranch. He subsequently homesteaded there and has continued to make it his home through the intervening years.

In 1883-4 Mr. McGehee went to Texas with Captain Howes and brought back a bunch of cattle to the Otter Creek ranch, and he also brought fifty head over to his own ranch, which formed the nucleus of his cattle industry. They were native Texas cattle running under the brand "W-Bar" on the left side, and he turned them on the range and has ever since carried on his stock business under the same brand. Mr. McGehee has been a member of the Montana Stock Growers Association since it was organized, and has been a shipper almost every years since he entered the business.

Edward McGehee was born in Noxubee County, Mississippi, near the Town of Macon, September 20, 1843, and two years later, in 1845, his father, Francis Micaja McGehee, moved the family to Texas and settled in Bastrop County. Micaja McGehee was a native of Broad River, Georgia, and a son of Micaja McGehee, a wealthy planter of the slave-holding aristocracy of the South. His ancestors were Scotch-Irish and represented as Americans the oldest families of the South. One of Micaja McGehee's sons, John Gilmer, was a soldier in the Mexican war in General Taylor's army, and another son, William, was killed at the battle of Pea Ridge in the struggle between the North and South. The family gave their allegiance to the southland in that conflict.

Micaja McGehee, Jr., married Nancy Perkins, a member of an old Alabama family. She survived her husband many years and died in 1877, Mr. McGehee having passed away in 1858. In their family were nine children, but only six, three sons and three daughters, grew to years of maturity, and of this latter number Edward is the sole survivor. Those who lived to rear families were Thomas J., whose posterity are in Bellingham, Washington, Christiana, who married Buck Billingsley and died leaving a son, Wash Jones Billingsley, and Edward has never married.

It was in Bastrop County, Texas, that Edward McGehee grew to years of maturity and received his educational training. From there also he entered the war of the rebellion, enlisting in the fall of 1862 in Company I, Colonel Duff's regiment, Captain Cocke's company. Sickness prevented his service for several weeks during his first enlistment, but he served under Captain Cocke in Texas during the remainder of the war and fought in the very last engagement of the conflict. In this battle a number of Federals were taken prisoners, who reported the surrender of General Lee, but the Confederates refused to believe the story and retained their prisoners until news came through Mexico of the fall of the Confederacy and the end of the war. Everyone then started for home, Mr. McGehee with the rest, and he subsequently took the oath of allegiance and resumed the duties of civil life.

His first trip out of Texas was made over the old Chisholm trail in 1869, when he drove cattle through to Salina, Kansas, and returned to the Lone Star State. He again started up the trail the following year, but changed his course and drove east to Alexandria, Louisiana, and on down the Red River to the Atchafalaya and Mississippi rivers. He had more than six hundred cattle in his herd, and he turned them loose along the big rivers, but in the following spring the waters rose and drowned the entire herd with the exception of about eighty head. Following this disaster he returned to Texas and drove herds to Ellsworth, Kansas, in 1871 and 1872. In 1873 an unfortunate deal made through his brother resulted in such financial reverses that Edward McGehee lost his fortune and was thrown back into the saddle as a cowboy on the range. In 1875 he drove cattle to Great Bend, Kansas, for Charley and Billy Slaughter, and in the following year began work for the old time cattleman of Texas and Kansas, W. G. Grimes, taking charge of the Grimes herds near Dodge City, Kansas, and holding them there until fall, when he turned them loose and wintered a bunch of horses for Mr. Grimes on from twelve and a half to fifteen cent corn during the winter months. Following this incident Mr. McGehee went into Nebraska in 1878 with a herd of cattle from the Circle Dot ranch, and on Platte River he began work for Mark Code, a prominent cattle dealer and ranchman of that time, and in the spring of the following year hired to the Powers Company in that locality. Later he was employed by E. S. Newman, who furnished cattle for the Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies on White River, and Mr. McGehee assisted in that work. In the winter of 1879 he left the employ of Mr. Newman, and going to Deadwood, South Dakota, was appointed inspector of cattle by the Stock Growers Association of Dakota, continuing in that position one year, when he came to Montana to cast in his lot with the pioneers of this region.

Mr. McGehee was reared under political influences which caused him to espouse the democratic party when age gave him the right to vote, and he still continues to give allegiance to those principles, but at the same time he does not follow blindly in the path of the party leaders in local matters, supporting rather the men he deems best fitted for office. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is noble grand of Birney Lodge, and he is also a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks at Sheridan, Wyoming.

Edwin Boone Craighead. A distinguished scholar and educator, Doctor Craighead, a former president of the University of Montana, is now lending the singular gifts of his mind and the riches of his experience to the field of journalism. Doctor Craighead has established several papers in Montana, and makes his home at Billings, where he is editor of the Billings Star.

He was born in Callaway County, Missouri, March 3, 1861, son of I. O. and Frances J. (Payne) Craighead. His life from boyhood has been scholarly and his reputation as a college and university president rests on a substantial foundation. He finished his literary education in Central College of Missouri, graduating Master of Arts in 1883. He did postgraduate work in Vanderbilt University from 1884 to 1886, and from 1886 to 1888 was abroad as a student at Leipsic and Paris. The University of Missouri conferred upon him the degree of LL. D. in 1898, while the University of the South at Sewanee, Tennessee, gave him the degree D. C. L. in 1907.

On returning from Europe he became an instructor in Emory College in Virginia, and from 1890 to 1893 was professor of Greek in Wofford College, South Carolina. If there is one institution of learning of which South Carolinians are particularly proud it is the State Agricultural and Mechanical College, better known as Clemson College. The campus of this school is on ground donated by Mr. Clemson, a son-in-law of South Carolina's distinguished statesman John C. Calhoun, who gave the old Calhoun estate and $70,000 to South Carolina as the foundation of an agricultural college. Doctor Craighead was called to the presidency of that institution in 1893, and remained there four years, and as a result of his vigorous administration the founders and friends of the institution saw many of their most sanguine expectations realized or in process of fulfillment.

From Clemson Doctor Craighead was called to the presidency of his alma mater, Central College in Missouri, where he remained from 1897 to 1901. From 1901 to 1904 he was president of the Missouri State Normal School at Warrensburg and then went South to become president of Tulane University at New Orleans. Tulane is a university of old and honorable traditions, and during his eight years as president Doctor Craighead more than doubled its enrollment, increasing the student body from 1,300 to 2,600, and the annual income from $165,000 to approximately $400,000. More important than these superficial evidences of prosperity, he broadened the scope and raised the standards of Tulane to the best university traditions in the South.

Doctor Craighead resigned as president of Tulane in 1912 to answer the call of the State Board of Education of Montana to take up his duties as president of the State University at Missoula. Doctor Craighead filled that office until 1915. As all friends of the university know his administration was a progressive one, and it was his persistently progressive policy that eventually put him out of sympathy with the governing body. He formulated and presented for consideration to the State Board of Education a plan to consolidate at one place all the higher institutions of learning, including not only the State University but the Agricultural College at Bozeman, the School of Mines at Butte and the Normal College at Dillon. The plan was approved by the board and recommended to the Legislature. By a small majority a bill looking toward the consolidation was rejected in the Legislature. The matter was then referred under the initiative and referendum to the people of the State, and again was defeated by a small majority. In the meantime changes had occurred in the personnel of the State Board of Education and there ensued "the consolidation fight" still fresh in the minds of Montana people. It was under these circumstances that Doctor Craighead was removed from the presidency.

Shortly afterward he was offered the post of commissioner of education for North Dakota, an office created by the Legislature. The commissioner of education had general supervision over all the higher institutions of learning in the State. Doctor Craighead served in that office from 1915 to 1917. While there in cooperation with a United States commissioner of education and other experts he compiled an educational survey of North Dakota, the results of which were published by the Federal Government.

The few years he had spent in Montana had completely won Doctor Craighead to the people of this commonwealth, and on leaving North Dakota he returned to Montana. He had previously founded at Missoula the newspaper known as the "New North West" and has since become editor of the Billings Star and also the Mineral County Independent. Through these papers he exerts a profound influence over public opinion in Montana and is probably the most scholarly editor in the state.

Doctor Craighead was an original and life member appointed by Mr. Carnegie to membership on the first Board of Trustees of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. His official duties with that board brought him in personal touch with such eminent American scholars as President Wilson, former President Elliott of Harvard, President Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University and others. Doctor Craighead resigned after twelve years with the board.

He is a member of the American Board of the Hibbert Journal, published at Oxford, England. He is a Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and for a number of years was a member of the State Board of Geology of Missouri. A medal for distinguished service in the cause of education was conferred upon him by the Baron d'Estournelles de Constant, as representative of the French Government. Doctor Craighead in former years gave much of his time to lecture work on educational and other studies, and has appeared before student bodies in many of the leading American universities. In politics he is a Wilson democrat.

August 6, 1889, Doctor Craighead married Miss Kate A. Johnson, of Fayette, Missouri, daughter of Dr. B. F. Johnson. She was educated in the Howard Payne College at Fayette and in the Beethoven Conservatory at St. Louis. Doctor and Mrs. Craighead have three children, Edwin B., Jr., Barclay and Catherine. Edwin, who graduated from the Military Academy at Columbia, Tennessee, was eighteen months with the colors as a member of Company E, Fourteenth Infantry, being stationed on duty at Helena, Camp Lewis, Washington, and Camp Grant, Illinois. Since leaving the army he has been associated with his father and is advertising manager of the Billings Star. The son Barclay was educated in the University of Montana and is business manager of the New North West of Missoula. The daughter, Catherine, is a student in the University of Montana.

Lattie M. Osgood. Agriculture and stock raising have been honored vocations from the earliest ages, and as a usual thing men of honorable and humane impulses, as well as those of energy and thrift, have been patrons of husbandry. The free outdoor life of the farm and ranch has a decided tendency to foster and develop that independence of mind and self reliance which characterize true manhood, and no greater blessing can befall a boy than to be reared in close touch with Nature. From such environments have sprung the moral bone and sinew of the country, and the majority of our nation's really great men are indebted to its early influence for the distinction which they have attained.

Lattie M. Osgood was born in Runnells County, Texas, on March 31, 1881, and is the son of John C. and Mitt (Wheat) Osgood. John C. Osgood was a native of New Hampshire, where he was reared and educated. Sometime prior to the Civil war he went to Texas and engaged in farming, living at different times in Parker, Bostrop and Runnells counties. During the Civil war he enlisted in the Confederate army and lost an arm in battle. He died in 1907, at the age of seventy-five years, being survived by his widow, who now lives in Powder River County, Montana, where she has a homestead on East Fork. To these parents were born the following children: William, of Carter County, Montana; Robert C., a ranchman of Powder River; Majory, the wife of Boot Bly, of Cahoma, Texas; James, a ranchman on East Fork; Fannie, wife of Frank Castleberry, of Carter County, Montana; Frank, who is a ranchman on the Cottonwood in Carter County; John, of Boyes, Montana; Lattie M., the immediate subject of this sketch; Genie, the wife of Emmett Walker, of Little Powder River; Robert, of Carter County; and Maude, the wife of A. M. Blackford, of Carter County.

Lattie M. Osgood was reared on the Texas homestead and received what school education was obtainable in the somewhat indifferent rural schools of that location and period. He remained with his father until after he attained his majority, when he decided to locate in Montana, whither five of his older brothers had preceded him. He arrived here in 1904, locating on the East Fork of Little Powder River, where he was for some years a squatter, as the Government had not yet surveyed this section of the state. However, when the land was finally opened for settlement he entered a homestead about six miles above the mouth of the creek. During his first year here he was in the employ of the "TA" outfit, running cattle on the range on Little Powder River. Following this he engaged in the sheep business on his own account, leasing a flock of 1,500. He was without capital, but his terms for handling, which were the same as are still in vogue, gave him an advantage in case no misfortune overtook him. He was successful and ran the sheep on lease for four years. Mr. Osgood was in partnership with a brother later on, and they started out with 2,000 head, which they ranged all over the East Fork region and on Willow Creek. The partnership lasted until 1911, when they dissolved business relations, leaving Mr. Osgood with 1,500 sheep of his own, the nucleus of the business which he has since conducted and in which he has achieved marked success. He has handled the Rambouillet and Cotswold strains, noted for their fine quality of wool and high-grade mutton. From year to year he has sheared a fine clip from his flock and the price of his product has never failed to give him a nice profit on the business. The prices received for his wool has ranged from sixteen cents to sixty-nine and three-fourths cents a pound. Mr. Osgood has sunk two fine artesian wells on his ranch, which provide an inexhaustible supply of fine water for the stock.

He was married to Lillie Henderson, a sister of Mrs. Charles W. Watts, of Graham, Montana, who is represented elsewhere in this work. Mrs. Osgood was born in Runnells County, Texas, in 1896, and she has borne to her husband a daughter, Mary, now four years old.

In every phase of life with which he has been identified Mr. Osgood has played well his part, always striving to do as an honest conscience dictates, and he has at all times enjoyed the sincere regard and esteem of all who know him.

Chris Ramme. Few men of the pioneer period of Montana now living date their advent to this commonwealth at as early a period as Chris Ramme, now a retired stockman of Carter County and one of the conspicuous figures of its county seat. A record of his life activities for the forty-three years he has been in this region would recount many thrilling incidents and many achievements of personal combat with fate, and it would also include some of the adversities which overtake ambitious and industrious countrymen of his nationality. But now in the evening of life, when more than four score years of age, he is enjoying physical vigor, is surrounded with friends and has a competence such as will provide for him and his family in the years remaining to them.

Chris Ramme came into this region of the far Northwest in 1877, landing at old Milestown on the 26th of July of that year. When questioned as to how he came here he was accustomed to reply that he rode in on a Buffalo. He boarded this boat at Fort Buford at the mouth of the Yellowstone, having traveled by river up to Fort Benton from Bismarck, the then terminus of the Northern Pacific Railroad. His traveling companion was a Frenchman named Simeno, and his object in coming was to find a better location, an opening in which to carve out his destiny. This he soon discovered in the territory of Montana, and notwithstanding the rough character of the citizenship as seen at old Milestown he decided to settle among them. Upon announcing his decision to his companion in travel the latter declared: "You surely are not going to bring your family out here among these horse-thieves, road agents and gamblers?" "Yes," said Mr. Ramme, and he proceeded to make his arrangements to that end.

His first employment was as a butcher for the contractor furnishing meat to the troops at Fort Keough, and he remained there almost four years. The capital he secured while thus employed he invested in cattle and ran them on the range about the Fort. In 1880 he moved his cattle to Pumpkin Creek, fourteen miles out, built him a ranch there, but about a year and a half later he sold his interests there and engaged in the restaurant business at Miles City, but this he disposed of before the end of the year and purchased a band of sheep. During the first winter he ran them on Powder River, and then moved them to the east side of Custer County, now the neighborhood of Ekalaka. In 1885 he built two ranch houses, one for himself and one for his son, and he continued in the sheep business there until 1906, when he disposed of his flock and retired from the industry. His career of twenty-two years as a sheep man covered periods of profitable years and periods when losses predominated, and twice the hard winters cost him one-half his flock, yet the industry can be said to have brought him satisfaction. Cattle and horses also formed a part of his ranching enterprise, and these also contributed much toward the filling of the domestic treasury.

In those early days there were no stockmen located in this portion of Carter County who occupied a prominent position save the old "Hash Knife" outfit, and consequently the range as far as Mr. Ramme could see was open to him. Among his early neighbors were Robert Wear and Captain Harmon, also the noted frontiersman and plainsman David H. Russell. On the south his nearest neighbors were from sixteen to twenty-five miles away, and there was nothing between them but grass. Mr. Ramme subsequently entered his land where he built his pioneer home, and there he plowed the first sod and was among the first to plant a crop in this region. His homestead was increased by additional homesteads to three quarter sections, which area forms the present Ramme ranch.

It is a coincidence worthy of note that Chris Ramme was born in 1837, came to the United States from his native German home in 1857, and established his home in Montana in 1877, showing a period of twenty years between each event. His native place is Prussia, his birth occurring four miles west of Halberstadt, December 20, 1837. His education was secured in the schools common to the country, and when he was fifteen years old his parents sent him to a veterinary college, but he remained there only three months, deciding he did not like the profession. He learned instead the butcher's trade, served two and a half years learning the business, and even now he needs no machinery to make any kind of pickled meat or sausage by hand, so thoroughly did he learn the trade in every department.

Mr. Ramme accompanied to the United States two German-Americans who had been visiting their old home in the Fatherland, sailing from Bremer-Haven on the ship "Hansa" and reaching the United States coast at Boston after thirty-one days on the ocean. He left the boat, however, at New York, and passed through Castle Garden. Although his destination was Sheboygan, Wisconsin, he stopped in Philadelphia and spent seven months in that city working at his trade. Continuing his westward journey, he finally located in the Lake Superior copper region, obtained work in the Minnesota mine near Ontonagon, and labored there with pick and shovel until 1861, a period of three years. He then moved to Menominee, Michigan, and engaged in merchandising and also operated a meat market. He continued there until 1877, when he decided to prospect in the far west and came to Montana for that purpose.

Mr. Ramme's father was Henry Ramme, who was born in Fekanstadt, Prussia, also the birthplace of his son, and he lived to the age of eighty-seven years. Throughout his industrial life he was engaged in the sheep and wool industry, owning a small farm, but he carried on the wool and sheep industry for a landlord on the shares. During four years he was a member of the king's body guard. Henry Ramme married Augusta Gorden, who bore him five sons and two daughters, namely: Frederick, who died in Germany; Christian, who also spent his life in his native land; Ernst, who passed away in Germany; Henry; Johanna; Augusta; and Chris. Both the daughters married and reared families.

Chris Ramme was the youngest of the seven children. He was married at Taycheedah, Wisconsin, in 1863, to Miss Regina Mueller, who was born on the River Moselle in Germany and was brought to the United States in infancy. Her father was Peter Mueller. Mr. and Mrs. Ramme became the parents of three children: Louis T., of Ekalaka; Mrs. Frank Emerson, a resident of Carter County; Ed, a musician and a world traveler who has not been heard from in many years.

Mr. Ramme secured his citizenship papers in Houghton, Michigan, in 1866, and began voting as a republican. He continued in this political course until the progressive movement was launched on the political life of the country, when he joined its ranks and in more recent years has voted independently. The only public service which he has rendered has been as an alderman in Miles City.

HARTFORD D. ARKWRIGHT came to Montana Territory in 1882 and has filled in the subsequent years with a varied program of activities and usefulness. In early life he was a railway mail clerk, later did a notable work as an educator in the Indian schools, and finally applied himself to ranching. For a number of years past he has owned one of the valuable irrigated farms in Custer County at Tusler.

He was born near Buffalo in Erie County, New York, June 10, 1861. His grandfather lost his life while crossing the St. Lawrence River and little is known about his history or his ancestors. The father of Hartford D. Arkwright was Michael D. Arkwright, a native of St. Lawrence County, New York, and a farmer there until 1863, when he took his family to Wisconsin and settled in Chippewa County. He developed a homestead in the Chippewa Valley and finished his quiet life there. He was a democrat in politics. Michael Arkwright married Eliza M. Mann, who was born in Genesee County, New York. They were married in Erie County, November 1, 1844. Both of them died in 1882, the father on May 20th and the mother on April 19th. Of their children the oldest was Christyan, who remained in New York when the rest of the family came West, and after a few years disappeared from family notice; Hannah became the wife of John Gray and spent her life in Wisconsin; Lafayette is still living in Chippewa County; Susan is the wife of John G. Fowler, of Minneapolis; Emma became the wife of Levi Pritchard, of Sedro Wooly, Washington; and Hartford D., is the youngest.

As a boy on his father's farm in Wisconsin, Hartford D. Arkwright acquired a district school education, learned something of the routine of farming, and also acquired business experience as clerk in a store and postoffice. Later he secured his appointment as a railway mail clerk, before that department was under Civil Service, and was given a run between Bismarck and Miles City. At that time the terminus of the Northern Pacific was at Forsyth, but the mail run ended at Miles City. It was the performance of the duties of railway mail clerk that brought Mr. Arkwright to Montana in 1882. He remained in the Government service for five years and then entered another department of Government work as superintendent of the Indian schools at the Crow Agency. The half decade of his work there was really a notable contribution to Indian school education in Montana. The Crows were still classified as blanket Indians. The only attempt to educate them had been made by the Jesuits some years previously. On the reservation the only school equipment consisted of a large dormitory for both boys and girls. At that time Mr. Arkwright was married and Mrs. Arkwright, an experienced teacher, was closely associated with him and bore some important responsibilities in carrying out their educational program. The Indian boys were made acquainted with industrial matters like farming and mechanical work, while the girls were taught housekeeping, sewing, baking and dress making under Mrs. Arkwright. An interesting index of the quality of their work was that the children made a grade a year, about the equivalent of the work expected of white children, and some of their pupils were qualified to enter Carlisle, the largest Indian school of the country. Under the supervision of the agent of the tribe the Indian men were instructed how to farm while they were drawing rations from the Government, and this development has continued until the Crow Reservation is dotted with Indian farms and ranches with irrigation plants, and furnishes some conspicuously successful examples of stock farmers. During those five years Mr. Arkwright proved himself so valuable that the department at Washington called him to a much more important school, as superintendent of the Tomah Indian School in Wisconsin. He remained there two years and then resigned altogether from the Government service and returned to Montana to give his time and personal supervision to some sheep ranching interests which he had acquired in the Musselshell Valley. In association with Dr. Jacob Mills he bought the Milner and two other ranches, embracing altogether 17,000 acres. During the next five years they increased their flocks to 20,000 sheep, the Merino and Rambouillet strains, producing the fine-medium wool. Mr. Arkwright on selling his interest to his partner left that region and in 1910 came to Custer County and engaged in farming and stock raising at Tusler. He bought a portion of the Crow-Rock Sheep Company's ranch, and his initial enterprise was directed toward building up a feeding plant for sheep. Inability to procure a sufficint supply of alfalfa prevented the immediate achievement of his purpose, and his farm is now devoted to range cattle, sugar beets, Poland China hogs and Barred Rock chickens. He has 512 acres, all under the Tongue River Canal, and all capable of cultivation.

His success as a farmer has brought Mr. Arkwright the honor of the secretaryship and treasurership and now the presidency of the Counter County Fair and Stock Bureau, and he has served in that capacity since 1917. He is also a stockholder and is one of the organizers of the State Bank of Moore, Montana, and of the Miles City National Bank. He is a member of the Society of Pioneers of Eastern Montana. While in Billings in early life he studied law in the office of Judge Harwood, was admitted to the bar and served by election as city attorney of Billings when that town had a population of about 5,000.

He began voting as a republican, casting his first presidential vote for Harrison in 1892, three years after Montana was admitted to the Union. Since then he has frequently been a delegate to state conventions and has become acquainted with the party leaders in Montana, including Senators Carter and Lee Mantle and Governor Richards. He was enrolling and engrossing clerk of the Lower House of the Montana Legislature while Lee Mantle was speaker, and engrossed the membership of the House and presented an artistic copy to the State Historical Society. He had previously served in a similar capacity with the Montana Senate.

Mr. Arkwright and family are Methodists, and both he and his wife joined that church when about fifteen years of age. He is a trustee of the church at Miles City and a member of the official board of the Young Men's Christian Association.

December 29, 1886, he married Miss Clara Belle Howard. She had previously been a teacher in the schools of Billings and afterward, as above noted, employed her experience successfully in the Indian schools. She was born in Iowa, one of six children, and the Howard family is of English origin and were early settlers in Massachusetts. From one branch of the family was produced the great Civil war soldier General O. O. Howard. Mrs. Arkwright left Keosauqua, Iowa, by invitation to take a position in the Billings schools. Mr. and Mrs. Arkwright have three children: Hazel is the wife of C. R. Cuss, a banker at Gary, Indiana, and they have two children, Catherine and Elizabeth. The son Stanley Howard Arkwright, now a factor on the Crow-Rock Ranch, is a graduate of the Gem City Business College at Quincy, Illinois, and enlisted in July, 1917, in the Second Montana, going overseas as a member of the Sunset or Forty-first Division. He was in France for several months but was never assigned to front line duty. He received his honorable discharge in March, 1919. The other son, Harwood Warren, who spent two years in the agricultural course at the Bozeman State College, enlisted as a volunteer in the Marines in October, 1918, and was on duty at the Mare Island Navy Yard in California until discharged. Mr. Arkwright is a member of Ashlar Lodge No. 29, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of Billings.

CLEMENS H. FORTMAN has the honor of serving his second term as postmaster of Montana's capital city, and for many years he was also numbered among Helena's leading business men.

Mr. Fortman was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, a son of John Fortman, whose birth occurred at Osnabruck, Holland, in 1832, and whose death occurred at Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1910. He was but a young, unmarried man when he left his native country for the United States, and he spent the remainder of his life in Cincinnati, serving for many years as a member of the city's police force and finally retired as a pensioner. He was a member of the Roman Catholic Church, and gave his political support to the democratic party. He married a lady from his own native land of Holland, who was born in that country in 1838, and she died at Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1914. The following seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Fortman: Elizabeth, who became the wife of J. W. Fritsch, a real estate and insurance broker in Cincinnati; Henry, who resides in the Cincinnati suburb of Norwood and is a stationary engineer; Clemens H. was the third born of the children; Frances died at the age of thirty years, unmarried; Charles, whose home is in Cincinnati, is an employe of Russell Morgan Company, printers and engravers; Louise is the wife of J. W. Luckey, a printer at Cincinnati; Flora, whose home is also in Cincinnati, is an employe of the Russell Morgan Company.

Clemens H. Fortman received a parochial and high school training in Cincinnati, and was eighteen years of age when he left the school room to take up the active duties of life. During the first six years he was in the employ of Parker, Utter & Company in their spice mills in Cincinnati, leaving there to engage in the grocery business for himself. But in 1884 he disposed of his business there to begin life anew in the West, arriving in Helena on the 9th of September, 1884. He began work for the Great Northern Railroad Company when it first entered the city. He was given charge of the warehouse and in that capacity unloaded the first freight brought into Helena by train, and he continued on with this company for a period of two years. Then followed one year with the Northern Pacific Express Company, during nine years he had charge of the collections and the general supervision of the business for Sanford & Evans, hay and grain merchants, and then engaged in the hay, grain and farm implement business for himself, and succeeded in building up one of the largest industries of its kind in the city at that time. Owing to his appointment as postmaster of Helena on the 1st of July, 1914, Mr. Fortman sold his business, and has since given his entire time and attention to the fulfillment of his official duties, having been reappointed to the office on the 13th of September, 1918, for a second term of four years. The democratic party receives the active support and co-operation of Mr. Fortman and his religious affiliations are with the Roman Catholic Church. He is a member of Helena Council, Knights of Columbus, of Helena Lodge No. 193, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is also a member of the Helena Commercial Club and the Montana Club of Helena.

During the period of his residence in the Northwest Mr. Fortman has become the owner of considerable real estate in and around Helena, including one of the finest homes in the city, located at 423 Clark Street, which is set in the midst of attractive grounds of 100 feet frontage. He is also the owner of a warehouse on the tracks of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and has other valuable real estate in the city.

In 1884, before leaving Cincinnati, Ohio, Mr. Fortman was married there to Miss Margaret Fallon, a native daughter of Cincinnati and a high school graduate there. One child, Blanche Marie, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Fortman. She is now the wife of Floyd Davenport, and resides at Amarillo, Texas. Mr. Davenport is an oil operator and rancher at that place.

FRED HITZFELDT. Many of the wealthy ranchmen of Montana came in to the state with cattle, and remained here as cowboys, receiving only $40 per month for their services, but during the time they were so employed they gained a practical knowledge of their business, and being on the spot were able to avail themselves of the opportunity to acquire land at very low figures. That the successful ones possessed something more is proven by the fact that where they prospered companions who worked under the same conditions were failures, and this something is ability. Without it experience, knowledge and land were of little use in the business of cattle production. One of the men who has demonstrated during the many years he has been a resident of Montana that he possessed that very necessary requisite is Fred Hitzfeldt, a ranchman of the Foster Creek locality of Custer County, and owner of 14,000 acres of valuable land.

Fred Hitzfeldt was born at Galveston, Texas, October 20, 1860, the youngest of the thirteen children of his parents. His father died three months before his birth, and he is the only survivor of the family. Only one other member of it married, and he died without issue. The elder Mr. Hitzfeldt was a ship carpenter and a native of Germany, and his wife was born in the same country. During the late war Fred Hitzfeldt demonstrated conclusively that his heart was with the adopted country of his parents, and he felt that had they been spared to live until that crucial period they, too, would have supported the country that offered them refuge from the persecutions suffered in the land of their birth.

Never having had a father's support, Fred Hitzfeldt was early compelled to earn his own living, and had but little opportunity to attend school. Practically all of the education he has was obtained from the instruction of a boy companion, but his experiences have given him a practical training that has proven amply sufficient for his requirements, and many a college graduate could well be proud if he had been able to accomplish what Mr. Hitzfeldt has done. His first work of any consequence in a financial way was done for Allen, Pool & Pierce, historic cattle men of Southeastern Texas, for whom he punched cattle. Leaving their employ, he engaged with the Comanche Pool outfit in Indian Territory for a drive to Montana. The cattle were owned by Hunter & Evans, shipped from Dodge City, Kansas, to Rock Creek, Wyoming, and from there driven to their destination on the Big Missouri River, 140 miles north of Miles City. Mr. Hitzfeldt dates his arrival in this region from August, 1885, and he remained with this outfit until the fall of 1886. For a few months during the winter season he was idle, and then went with the Hereford Cattle Company as a cowboy, subsequently becoming wagon boss, and remaining with this concern until it closed up its business.

Mr. Hitzfeldt was always a man to look forward and he saw that the open range was doomed, and therefore early set about preparing for the change which was bound to come. He and Judge Loud, who was manager for the Hereford Cattle Company, formed a partnership and began to acquire land. They picked up scrip land, a few homesteads and some railroad land, acquiring in this way several thousand acres of land, and for twelve years continued partners, raising cattle of the Hereford and Durham strains and shipping to the Chicago market. When this association was dissolved Mr. Hitzfeldt bought his partner's interest and established his headquarters on Foster Creek, where he now owns 14,000 acres, and is devoting it to raising the same strains of cattle. He still ships to Chicago. The original "S-L" brand used by the Hereford Cattle Company, and purchased by the firm of Loud & Hitzfeldt, is still used by Mr. Hitzfeldt. When he came to Montana he owned a "split-eared" pony, a saddle and bridle, and some bedding. The little money in his possession was but the savings from his wages as a cowboy. All that he now possesses has been earned by him since 1885, and his prosperity is certainly deserved. His residence is the one which replaced his original log house of one room that is still used as sleeping quarters on his ranch. The second house was moved log by log from Pumpkin Creek.

Mr. Hitzfeldt married late in life, as he did not meet anyone to whom he felt sufficiently attracted to propose marriage until 1904, when he had the good fortune to become acquainted with Miss Georgiana Shy, a daughter of George P. Shy, a ranchman on Pumpkin Creek, near Volberg. On February 23, 1905, this young lady became his wife. Her father came to Montana from Nevada, Missouri, in 1902, bringing with him his family. Her mother bore the maiden name of Mollie Homan, and she and Mr. Shy had the following children: Mrs. Hitzfeldt, who was born at Nevada, Missouri, Isaac, Dudley, Sam, and Mattie, who is the wife of Elmer Stimson.

Mr. Hitzfeldt is a Blue Lodge Mason and a member of the order of Elks. For the past twenty years he has belonged to the Montana Stock Growers' Association, and been active in its operations. During his earlier days he was a democrat of strong convictions, but when William Jennings Bryan became the candidate in 1896 he left his party on account of Mr. Bryan's bimetalism doctrines and voted for William McKinley, continuing with the republican party until the division in its ranks in 1912, when he returned to his old faith, and has given Woodrow Wilson his support in both his presidential campaigns. Although he has always performed his duty as a good citizen in exerting his right of suffrage. Mr. Hitzfeldt has never been willing to permit the use of his name on the local ticket, and therefore has had no experience as an office holder. His record as an upright, honorable man and loyal citizen is unblemished, and he stands very high in the esteem of his neighbors.

CHARLES F. DECKER. The mature years of Charles F. Decker have been spent in the far west, and he is a product of it and the outgrowth of its expanding history, his character having been formed by the necessities of its pioneer days, when in order to succeed a man had to be resourceful as well as industrious and thrifty. He now owns a magnificent ranch in the Stacey region, and he has not only won material success, but there are few men in this locality who have a stronger hold on the hearts and confidence of the people than he. Mr. Decker was born in Washington County, Ohio, March 2, 1857, a son of Samuel R. Decker. The birth of Samuel R. Decker took place near Marietta, Ohio, in 1836, and he died at Fort Collins, Colorado, when he was seventy years of age. While he owned farm property his efforts were confined to contracting and building. He was a good citizen, who did not aspire to public office, but cast his vote for the candidates of the democratic party. Samuel R. Decker was married to Catherine Cady, a daughter of Charles Cady, whose life was given to farming in Washington County, Ohio. Mrs. Decker died during middle life, in Iowa, having borne her husband the following children: Charles F., whose name heads this review; and Jerome, who lives at Fort Collins, Colorado. Samuel R. Decker was married secondly to Jennie Jenkins, and they had the following children: Orange Ross, who is a ranchman of Stacey, Powder River County; Ethel; Nora, who is married and lives in California; Lydia, who is married, and lives in Colorado; and Laura, who lives at Fort Collins, Colorado, where the homestead is located.

Charles F. Decker was eight years old when his parents moved to Iowa, and he was reared in that state upon a farm, securing a country school education in Audubon County. When he was twenty years of age he went west into the Black Hills country, thus beginning his connection with the already growing West. For the subsequent couple of years he was employed as a cowboy in South Dakota and Wyoming in connection with the "3-V" outfit, and came into Montana with a herd of cattle belonging to C. B. Straus, which were subsequently taken over by the Hereford Cattle Company, who bought Mr. Straus' interests. Mr. Decker was also interested in mining in the Deadwood region of the Black Hills, and he was also in Spearfish Valley. He shot buffalo for hides in the Box Elder country, disposing of the hides for $2.75 each, thus tiding himself and a partner over a hard winter at a time when in that locality there was little or no work for them to do.

When Mr. Decker came to Montana it was still a territory and his only capital was his willingness to work and his physical strength to do so. Until 1897 he rode the range for others, but in that year with his savings invested in a small bunch of Texas cattle, and from that modest beginning his operations have increased until he has become an important factor in the ranch life of this region. He entered land of the public domain five miles south of Stacey, upon which he built a shack and held his cattle. His log house was 16 by 20 inside, with a dirt roof and floor and was daubed with mud, but it was comfortable both summer and winter, and in it Mr. Decker spent twenty-four of the best years of his life. Of course he added to his house room, and made other necessary and permanent improvements, but the old pioneer "cottage" was nearer and dearer to Mr. Decker than all which has come later. His homestead entry is the nucleus of his ranch, which comprises 2,700 acres, where he confines his farming to raising grain for his cattle. The survey of this region came long after Mr. Decker's advent into it. His early part in politics was confined with casting his vote for the candidates of the democratic party, but during more recent times he has performed actual official service as a county commissioner. With the creation by the Legislature of Powder River County from Custer County he was named in the bill creating the county as one of the commissioners, his colleagues being Henry Peays and J. H. Morris. The commissioners at their first meeting located the county seat at Broadus and elected a chairman of the board. At the second meeting justices of the peace, road supervisors and a public administrator were appointed and a few bills were allowed. Mr. Decker began voting with the democratic party and has maintained his relations with it, but his action has always been modest and unassuming, and only when solicited to do public service has he considered it.

On December 19, 1899, Charles F. Decker was married at Ashland, Montana, to Miss Mary Hamilton, a daughter of James Hamilton, who was born in Kilkenny, Ireland, and his wife bore the maiden name of Julia Ebbett. She is buried at Stacey. Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton had the following children: James, who was the eldest who attained to mature years, lives at Lincoln, Nebraska; John T., who lives at Miles City, Montana; and Mrs. Decker, who was born in Lee County, Iowa, May 31, 1858. Mr. and Mrs. Decker reared in their home Esther Bidwell, who was married to Ben Toennis, has a daughter, Mary, and they are engaged in ranching near Stacey. Mr. Decker gives his support to the Christian Church, but Mrs. Decker was reared in the Catholic faith. Openhanded and sympathetic, Mr. Decker is the friend of all who know him, and yet his judgment and knowledge of men are of such a quality that he seldom misplaces a confidence in the better nature of those who seek his help. Devoted to this section and with a viewpoint which enables him to look into the future and plan accordingly, it would have been difficult to have selected a man better fitted to arrange the initial affairs of Powder River County. When future generations look back upon the pioneer period of this part of Montana they will appreciate at its real value the work accomplished by men of the calibre of Charles F. Decker, and rejoice that public affairs were placed in hands so competent and clean, and that they and their children after them are given the results of the sound judgment, the unflinching honesty and sturdy independence of the pioneers of Powder River County.

GEORGE F. MCKENZIE. The name of George F. McKenzie is one of the most widely known of the Powder River valley, where its bearer settled in 1889. He had been in the state (or rather the territory) of Montana since 1883, having settled in Gallatin County, May 26 of that year, and had come into the territory by rail to Huntley and prospected for a suitable location for live stock raising up into Gallatin County. Mr. McKenzie settled in the Bridger Creek valley, near Bozeman, and there opened a new ranch and stocked it with cattle, but soon discovered that he was in a wrong location for extensive stock raising and accordingly changed his tactics and began farming. His efforts in this direction were the pioneer ones there and were so successful that other settlers took the cue, and the valley soon became an agricultural region. In 1889 Mr. McKenzie disposed of his property and came to Custer County, entering a homestead and desert claims on Powder River, and this locality has since been the scene of his operations and of his rise to prosperity and prominence.

George F. McKenzie was born in the province of New Brunswick, Canada, near St. John, March 3, 1855. His father, David McKenzie, was also born there and spent his life as a stockman and farmer. He was of Scotch blood and son of a Scotchman, was one of seven children, and was educated in the public schools. He was an ambitious man, accumulated property beyond the average of his neighbors, and was held in high esteem, but his only office was as magistrate of his parish, a position which he acquired by election on the liberal ticket. David McKenzie married Mercy Connor, born on the St. Johns River, New Brunswick, a daughter of a pioneer of that locality, and passed away in 1917, when nearly ninety years of age, her husband having died at the age of eighty-seven. Their issue comprised the following children: Malcolm, of Welsford, New Brunswick; Dr. Zebulon, who died at Galveston, Texas; David W., a stockman and farmer of New Brunswick; John, who died at Temple, Texas, while working as an engineer; Moses O., who occupies the family homestead in New Brunswick; George F., of this review; Eliza, who died at Independence, Iowa, as Mrs. William M. Hays; Mercy, who married Captain George Morrissey, of Birmingham, England; Kate C., who died unmarried; and Alice, who also passed away before marriage.

On Powder River George F. McKenzie began as a sheep raiser and wool man and followed this line for twenty years. His were the sheep common to the country here, drifting toward the "fine medium," and his success was marked. Owing to the disastrous winter of 1886, which lost him much of his cattle in Gallatin County, and the misfortunes of sickness in his family, he had come to the Powder River country practically "broke." He arranged with a party to furnish him sheep and started in with 1,000 head. This locality was at that time particularly hostile to sheep, but the fact that his "outfit" was small and his treatment of the opposition was considerate as to its rights the hostility was allayed and other sheep men sprung up here and there and the region became as much a sheep country as a cow country. During the score of years he was in the wool business he prospered, and in 1909 closed out with some 20,000 head. He marketed his wool at Miles City, or consigned it there, and his sheep were marketed at Chicago, he accompanying them by trainload to that market. Disposing of his sheep because of the curtailment of the range, he entered the cattle and horse business, and is yet listed as a cattle man, carrying what stock he can with safety and curtailing to meet changing and more crowded range conditions. His brand is the "Crescent enclosing MK," and his ranch is recorded as "Crescent Ranch," his horse brand being the "Crescent" alone. He sold wool as cheap as 8 cents a pound at one time and as high as 23 cents; sold cattle as low as 4 cents a pound, while his best price was 15 cents a pound; and his horses have found a market as low as $15 a head for threes, and have brought him as much as $200 per head.

When he came to Powderville, Mr. McKenzie built himself a pole cabin with dirt roof. A better log cabin succeeded this and he finally built a frame house, which has been developed into a ten-room residence, convenient, and modern as to light and other modern equipment. His barns are in keeping with his residence in proportions. The family home was made at Powderville until 1910, when in order to secure better educational facilities for the children, removal was made to Miles City. Mr. McKenzie has gathered together lands here to the extent of about 3,000 acres as a ranch, Powder River forming its west boundary.

George F. McKenzie was married first at Woodstock, New Brunswick, Canada, June 16, 1880, to Miss Phoebe Hoyt, daughter of William and Mary (DeWitt) Hoyt, and she died in March, 1887, the mother of these children: Kenneth, a stock man near Boyes, who has two children by his first marriage, Gladys and Maud, and married secondly Miss McCory; Harry, the second child of George F. McKenzie, is a ranchman on Crow Creek, married Louie Bonner and has three sons, Donald, Kenneth and Duncan. George F. McKenzie married for his present wife Miss Ida Hart, daughter of Isaac and Jane (Miller) Hart. Mr. Hart came from Minnesota, where Mrs. McKenzie was born, and while he pioneered in Montana, he spent much of his time around Mandan, Dakota. Mrs. McKenzie came into Montana on a visit, met Mr. McKenzie, and they were married in June, 1893. Their children are: Ella, Agnes, Leila and Alice. Ella is a volunteer nurse in the Red Cross and still in service at Great Falls; and Agnes has been a teacher, and all save the youngest are graduates of the high school at Miles City.

In politics Mr. McKenzie holds allegiance to the republican party, but is inclined locally to vote somewhat independently. His only fraternal connection is as a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Public-spirited and patriotic, he backed strongly all war moves for funds to promote and carry on to successful conclusion this country's part in the World war.

John S. Howe. For all the remarkable development in Montana in recent years in the extension of crop growing and pure agriculture, sheep and wool still constitute a large and important share of the state's business resources. John S. Howe of Miles City is one of the big producers of wool, and has been in the industry since 1900. While not one of the oldest sheep men in the state, his activities have brought him well deserved prominence.

Mr. Howe is a native of Illinois, born in Douglas County, February 6, 1857. His father, William Howe, came to Illinois from Kentucky, having been born in Bourbon County in 1829. He was a farmer's son, acquired a common school education, and spent his life as a farmer. After the Civil war he became a republican in politics and held several local offices. He died at the age of sixty-four. His wife was Harriet A. Lester, a daughter of Sigler Lester, also of Kentucky and more remotely of Virginia ancestry. Mrs. William Howe died recently when past eighty years of age. She was the mother of eight children: James, of Barnston, Nebraska; John S.; Perry N., of Tuscola, Illinois; Etta, wife of James W. Drennen, of Osceola, Iowa; Charles, of Champaign, Illinois; Effie, wife of James Reed, of Whitewater, Wisconsin; Leona, wife of William Joseph of Tuscola, Illinois; and Nora, wife of Charles Robinson, of Ohio.

John S. Howe grew up on his father's Illinois farm, had a high school education, and also attended the Northern Indiana Normal School. He left school to go farming in his native county, and in 1880 went to what was then the western frontier at Dodge City, Kansas. After some experience as a cowboy and range rider he took up a ranch and started a herd of cattle and for five years operated in Western Kansas and Eastern Colorado. He then went down into Indian Territory, and in the vicinity of Guthrie took some part in real estate speculation and was also a buyer of wheat for the mills at Winfield, Kansas. His business duties required the regular interchange of business between Oklahoma and Kansas for several years. He participated in the pioneer phases of western or southwestern life for thirteen years and then went back to Illinois and was a factor in the agricultural and business life of that state until he determined to enter the sheep industry in Montana.

Mr. Howe came to Montana in 1899, and the following year started sheep ranching north of the Yellowstone River. For a number of years he utilized the public domain and so far as numbers and extent of operations was concerned he reached the zenith of his sheep raising career in the country north of the Yellowstone. Later he moved his headquarters to the mouth of the Mizpah Creek. He started his operations twenty years ago with 4,000 half-blooded sheep and eventually developed a flock of 25,000. He has handled sheep every year since 1900, and has been through all the ups and downs of the industry. Several times wool prices were below the cost of production. He failed to be discouraged by these backsets, and his reward came during the World war when wool went to about 65 cents a pound. With the reduction of the public range he necessarily decreased his flock, and has made more of the feature of intensive sheep ranching and farming. Ever since he came to Montana he has been a member of the Wool Growers' Association, and has been a thorough student of sheep and wool in every phase and a wide reader of all recognized periodicals on that subject.

In the fall of 1907 Mr. Howe established his headquarters at the mouth of Mizpah Creek. He then bought the Aaron Laney sheep ranch of 7,500 acres of deeded land and has since added about 5,000 acres, lying on the west side of Powder River and astride Mizpah Creek. His ranch is now under development as an irrigation project, the purpose being to provide his stock with winter feed. Recently he has also introduced to his ranch a line of good native cattle bred up to registered Shorthorns and Herefords. The finished product he markets in Chicago. Mr. Howe is also a stockholder in the Commercial State Bank of Miles City.

He has been interested in politics chiefly as a voter. His political convictions led him into the republican party at an early date. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America.

On March 8, 1886, while he was a figure in the livestock industry of Kansas and Oklahoma, Mr. Howe married Estella Longshore, who was born in Iowa in 1868. Her mother is still living, a resident of Burlington, Kansas. Her father was a captain in the Union army during the Civil war, was a harness maker and merchant and died in Iowa. Mrs. Howe is the youngest of three daughters. One married sister lives at Atlantic, Iowa, and the oldest is Mrs. Woodruff, of Coffey County, Kansas.

Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Howe, Earl, the oldest, was educated in the University of Illinois, is a successful rancher on Powder River, and by his marriage to Hattie Logan has a daughter, Bettie. Laura Howe, the second child, is the wife of Elmer Holt, vice president of the Commercial State Bank of Miles City and is the mother of Laura, Bertie and Benjamin. Flora is a graduate of the Northwestern University of Chicago and was a Young Woman's Christian Association worker in the army and was still in France in the summer of 1919. Clifford, the youngest child, is a member of the class of 1920 at the University of Illinois, and was accepted for training in the Camp Taylor Artillery School but did not enter because of the signing of the armistice.

HERMAN STOEBE. To Herman Stoebe is given the distinction of being one of the oldest settlers on Moon Creek in Custer County and the pioneer sheep raiser in this locality. It was in 1883 that he first arrived in Montana, and in that early day he embarked in the sheep industry. He was then one of the few extensive sheep raisers here, and the well known George Horkan was his herder in that early day. Mr. Stoebe continued journeying back and forth between Montana and New York City until 1892, when he came out to the great Northwest to reside permanently and take complete charge of his sheep industry, which he had maintained through all these intervening years. He finally became associated in the business with his son, Sam, and they carried on the enterprise together for ten years, when they separated, the father continuing the business until 1918, when he disposed of his flocks and retired from the industry.

Mr. Stoebe started his herd with 800 sheep which he brought from Iowa, and in the zenith of the industry he and his son wintered more than 10,500 head. The cheapest price for which he sold his wool was 12 cents a pound, and the highest price paid him was 22½ cents. At the low price there was little or no profit in the business, but as the work was done largely by the family he was able to continue until prices assumed a profitable basis. During three years he herded his own sheep, this having been in the years of the early '90s, and the sheep industry continued to be his chief enterprise until he abandoned it altogether.

When Mr. Stoebe came into this Moon Creek region he was the first man to settle here, and nothing interfered with his supremacy of this vast district save a few cattle herds, and he rapidly expanded his interests, but as time wore on the settlers and cattle men multiplied, the range grew narrower and finally it was threatened with extinction save what was owned and fenced by the sheep owner. The Stoebe ranch embraces some 2,000 acres on Moon Creek, now devoted to cattle and farming, and the familiar brands are the quarter circle F triangle, the WXS and the triangle HL. The ranch is stocked with the White Face cattle, and produces about three cars of meat annually.

Mr. Stoebe is a Montana settler from New York City, where he spent thirty-five years of his early life, arriving in that metropolis April 19, 1857, when twenty-one years of age. He had studied music under private teachers and had become a proficient clarinet and violin player. He was born in Saxony, Germany, near Leipsic, February 2, 1836, the son of a farmer, and one of seven sons of Samuel and Rosina (Schlippe) Stoebe. He was one of twins, the youngest children in the family, and he was the only one of this numerous family to come to the United States. An incident occurred just before he reached American shores which enabled him to acquire the capital with which he began his career in New York. Having played aboard the ship enroute to the United States he was asked by the officer in charge of Castle Garden to play in the orchestra being improvised for the occasion, and at the completion of the concert a collection was taken from among the many thousands of people present, and all kinds of coins, foreign and domestic, were dropped into the box to be divided among the players. The coins were converted into United States money and proved a rich reward for each player.

After taking up his abode in New York City Mr. Stoebe entered the musical circles of the city, then embracing comparatively few professionals, and he came to know them all by name. But now there are more than 6,000 members of the Musical Protective Union, an organization proposed by Mr. Stoebe, and he is the sole survivor of the five who organized the union. He was treasurer of the Cinderrella-Aschenbrodel, a social organization which established a club house, and in his office of treasurer of this society Mr. Stoebe handled many thousands of dollars of its funds without bond.

But after thirty-five years spent in the world of music he tired of the city, and he also saw that his day as a leader in the profession was drawing to a close, that other men were coming in to take his place, and thus, after having played with all the celebrated conductors in New York save only one and after having won for himself a name and place in the front ranks of the profession, Mr. Stoebe abandoned music for sheep and came to the Northwest to become a ranchman. To the few new friends he made in Montana, he, however, continued his music, declining invitations to play before audiences over the state, preferring to tend his sheep rather than charm the ear and inspire the soul with the art divine.

While in New York City Mr. Stoebe enlisted in the Seventh Regiment National Guard, and marched down Fifth Avenue with his regiment April 19, 1861, as part of the great northern army. He was a member of the regimental band from 1861 to 1862, and was sent with his command to Baltimore, where he later met the lady who afterward became his wife. Although entitled to a pension along with other soldiers who fought for freedom and their country, and despite the fact that the papers were all made out awaiting his signature, Mr. Stoebe declined to sign them, saying "He was ashamed to take the pension." He began taking part in elections following the close of the war, casting his first presidential vote for Horatio Seymour against General Grant, but in 1872 he voted for Grant as against Horace Greeley. While engaged in the wool industry he supported the principles of the republican party on account of its protective tariff, but throughout his life his political work has been merely as a voter.

Herman Stoebe married in Baltimore, Maryland, February 12, 1867, Miss Margaret Vollandt, who was born and reared in that city. Her father, Christian Vollandt, came to the United States at the age of seven years with his father, John Vollandt, who had fought under Napoleon in the last French war with Russia, and he brought his family to the United States to evade military service for his sons. Christian Vollandt was a musician, a band leader, and he took part in the military service of the Confederacy under General Magruder at Yorktown, Virginia. His death occurred in 1864, when he was but thirty-seven years of age. He had married Emily Hill, a daughter of Alexander Hill. He was a member of an old Maryland family, fought under Washington, and was one of the party which crossed the Delaware and captured the Hessians. The mother of Mrs. Stoebe died in 1866, and she was the only child of their marriage. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Stoebe, as follows: Emily, the wife of David Jacobus, of Mont Clair, New Jersey, and their two children are Irving and Margaret; Anna, the wife of William Foster Rowe, of Mount Vernon, New York; William, who is identified with the home ranch, married Edith Tremelling, who died May 27, 1918, leaving a daughter, Ethel; Samuel, a ranchman on Moon Creek, married Florence Woolsey, and they have two children, Robert and Elizabeth Mary; and Mabel, the wife of Ernest H. Cooke, of Mount Clair, New Jersey.

After fifty years of married life, years lovingly devoted to family and friends, Mr. and Mrs. Stoebe celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 1917, and the occasion was a prominent event in the community. The celebration was a surprise to them by their neighbors, who gathered with boxes filled for the feast and with presents for the "bride and groom." A wedding cake was sent from New York by Mrs. Jacobus, and the event was one of the brightest spots in the married life of this venerable couple. Mrs. Stoebe served on the battlefields of the south as a nurse while the war between the states was being waged. When a young girl she volunteered for the service from Baltimore in response to a call for nurses, and she lent humanity her aid in gathering up the wounded of both armies and ministering to them as their needs demanded. On more than one occasion she was instrumental in saving the life of a soldier who had already been cast into the trench for dead, a mere waving of the hand indicating to her that life was still there, or on other occasions she gave special attention to some conspicuous sufferer who lived to bless the hand that saved him.

Freeman Philbrick. This name introduces one of the chief stockmen of the Rosebud community in Rosebud County and one whose settlement here dates from the month of April, 1884. He was then a young man of twenty-two years, fresh from New England and in search of a location and eventually a home. He first disembarked from the train at Miles City but subsequently continued his journey to Rosebud and joined an old acquaintance, A. D. Howard, with whom he secured his first employment. It was ranch work that fell to his lot, running horses and sheep, and his chief interest in the time spent there was the remuneration of from $35 to $40 per month which came to him.

Leaving Mr. Howard, Mr. Philbrick bought a relinquishment on the Rosebud in July 1886, for which he paid $350. The pioneer improvements consisted of a log cabin of one room and a pole stable, and six acres of land were under the plow. Although he moved in his few effects and maintained his home there, he himself hired as a sheep herder to Peter Wylie for eight months on what is now the Cheyenne Reservation on Tongue River. The wage was the same there and he saved it all. In February, 1887, Mr. Philbrick was married, and in March of the same year established his permanent home on his claim. Beginning in earnest at his home, he gave his attention first to the construction of an irrigation ditch, plowing and scraping it out with his team, and this eventually acquired the proportions of a local system of irrigation when it was completed in 1888. It did him good service until the water failed because of a drouth during almost all of those years, but has been drawn upon annually since and has helped materially in growing and nurturing his crops, his ranches producing annually approximately 1,000 tons of alfalfa hay.

In 1888 Mr. Philbrick entered the stock business and started with 363 head of sheep, after which he worked as a herder himself for several years. In less than twenty years this bunch increased to 20,000 head of sheep, and in the early days they ranged all over Rosebud County. With the influx of settlers the range began to be curtailed and his sheep industry decreased to 10,000 sheep and lambs. As an antidote for the encroachment of settlers and the elimination of his range Mr. Philbrick began buying land, and 13,000 acres were added to his domains at 75 cents an acre. He has continued in the market for range lands and at prices up to $5 an acre. His properties are the Red Hills ranch on Armel Creek, the Butte ranch, the Diamond ranch and the R. O. Bean ranch, lying along the Rosebud, his ranch lands totaling an acreage of about 30,000. His headquarters ranch contains his buildings, but much of his property is enclosed with woven wire fences, a fact which does away with much help in herding and saves the straying of his sheep, as well as forming protection from coyote losses. Mr. Philbrick has sold wool as low as 12½ cents a pound and his best price was that affected by the war, 63 cents a pound. He runs various strains of Merino, a longer life sheep than others, which require less room on the range, herd in larger bands, and after they are a year old are the hardier sheep.

Mr. Philbrick engaged in the cattle business some dozen years ago as a beef producer of range cattle under the brand "EV Quarter Circle,"—"EV." He has raised many horses as a feature of his enterprise but with no profit as a commercial undertaking. Mr. Philbrick was appointed one of the first Board of County Commissioners when Rosebud County was organized, and served with W. W. McDonald and Hunt Terrett. This board made the settlement between Rosebud and Custer counties, but Mr. Philbrick served only a part of the term and then resigned. He is a republican, voting first in Maine, and cast his first presidential vote in 1892 in Montana.

Mr. Philbrick was born January 10, 1862, at St. Albans, Maine. He secured little schooling and grew up in the northern part of his native state in the woods from a child of twelve years. He did lumbering and some farming as he approached manhood and brought only that experience with him to Montana. His father was Freeman Philbrick, a contractor and builder in early life but a farmer later, and died in Aroostook County, Maine, at the age of sixty-five years. He was a Union soldier during the Civil war, serving in the Twentieth Maine Infantry as a private, and was honorably discharged because of disability, having participated in a number of hard-fought engagements, notably that of Antietam. Freeman Philbrick, the elder, married Mary F. Merrill, a daughter of James Merrill and a member of an old family of Maine of English and Welsh stock. Mrs. Philbrick died at the age of eighty years, the mother of nine children, those surviving being: Mrs. Annie Blaisdell, of Aroostook County, Maine; Fred, also a resident of that county; Freeman, of this notice; Newell, a ranchman on the Rosebud; Elias, of Maine; and Edna, the wife of R. W. Blakesley, of Rosebud County.

James Philbrick, the grandfather of Freeman Philbrick, was born in New Hampshire, where he was married to his wife, Mary, and subsequently moved into Somerset County, Maine. He was first a farmer and then a physician and practiced all over that region of the state, and it is believed that he took part in the Aroostook war in Maine. He was a whig first and then a republican. His children were: Newell, who died in Maine, at the age of sixty-five years; Freeman; James, who was a soldier and died in Maine; Mrs. Sarah Morrill, of Pittsfield, Maine; Mrs. Mary Larabee and Mrs. Susan Shaw, who settled in Dakota; and two other daughters, names not remembered. The remote ancestor of Freeman Philbrick was James Philbrick, his great-grandfather, who lived at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, and ranked high as an educator of his time and state. He brought the family from England, his native country, and established it on American soil.

Freeman Philbrick of this review was married February 16, 1888, to Mary Howard, a daughter of A. McLarry Howard, who settled on the Rosebud a year before Mr. Philbrick and is still a resident there at the remarkable age of ninety-three years. His first wife, and the mother of Mrs. Philbrick, was a Miss Rollins, who bore him three children: Isabel, who became the wife of Captain Neat and resides at Portland, Oregon; Mary, who is Mrs. Philbrick; and her twin sister, Alice, who died at the age of seventeen years. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Philbrick are: Mary Frances, the wife of Harry Cornwell, of Forsyth, Montana, who has two children, Howard Freeman and John; Eugenia Gladys, who married Charles Dowlin, a ranchman on Armel Creek and a county commisisoner of Rosebud County; and Malcolm K., unmarried, who is in business with his grandfather, A. McC. Howard, as manager of the latter's stock enterprise.

Mr. Philbrick was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Forsyth, of which he subsequently became president, a position in which he served seven years. During the latter part of 1918 he was elected president of the Rosebud State Bank, and he is also vice president of the Yellowstone Packing Company of Billings, and a member of the Montana Stock Growers Association and the National Wool Growers Association.

Henry O. Boyes. A prominent ranchman of Powder River, adjacent to the postoffice at Powderville, Henry O. Boyes has been identified with the region about here ever since coming to Montana, March 10, 1886, when he left the train at Miles City and established himself among the people of Custer County. Mr. Boyes came out of old England, having been born in Northamptonshire, near Weddon, December 23, 1864. His father was Richard Robbins Boyes, who was reared and passed his life in Northamptonshire save for the ten years he spent in Australia as a miner, where he became a civil engineer in railroad work, subsequently freighted with a "bull train," hauling logs and freight, and still later engaged in lime burning at Geelong, Victoria. After a decade away he went back to England with ample capital to engage in farming and stock raising, and followed those vocations during the rest of his life. His forefathers for generations were Northamptonshire people, and all were tillers of the soil and rural people. Richard Robbins Boyes married Elizabeth Stanton, and both passed away after rearing their family. Their issue comprised: Lottie, Stanton, Henry O., Bert, Arthur, Edith and Emma. Only Henry O. and Bert came to the United States, and the latter returned to England, where he passed away.

Henry O. Boyes was reared on a farm and secured as much education as English boys of the farm could acquire. He was twenty years old when he arranged with Captain Elmhurst to come to the United States and take a place upon his ranch, and sailed from Liverpool aboard the Queen, landing at New York City as a cabin passenger. After spending two days in New York City and another two days at Chicago he came on to his destination at Miles City, went to work as a hand on the old Elmhurst ranch, better known as the Dowson ranch, and for twelve years was a prominent factor on the property. His acquaintance with stock and the handling of horses made him useful for the breaking of wild horses, and this work was his chief duty while on the Dowson ranch. His wage at first was $40 monthly, which was increased to $45 and finally to $50 a month, but his profligacy rendered him helpless as to capital when he closed his work with the ranch. Leaving the Elmhurst, he worked two years for J. M. Holt, also widely known as an extensive pioneer ranchman, and when he left him began ranching for himself with horses. He broke horses at $5 a head as a business, and there was enough to do to supply him with cash if he had saved it. He established himself on Ash Creek, where he "squatted," and there "batched" and ranged his horses about over the hills and in the valley. There was profit in raising horses then. Many of his, sold at Miles City, went to South Africa for service in the British armies, at prices which stimulated the industry. Leaving Ash Creek he came over to the Powderville community and established himself on his homestead at the mouth of Little Hawkey Creek. He entered a half section here and added cattle to his enterprise and has been running both since. He adopted as his universal brand the "7-U," and in the zenith of his success ran 200 horses on the range. His scheme for cattle is to breed for quantity, and he handles "she stuff," disposing of his steer calves and holding his heifers. He has shipped stock both for himself and his employer, once to England and again to New York.

Mr. Boyes came to this state when the country was stocked with wild horses, and the catching and breaking of these was a part of his work. The wild horse bordered on the thoroughbred, of the Oregon stock, and when captured and broken was marketable, some of them going to England and bringing $300 and $400 a head. It was common to find them in bands four and five years old that had never been inside of a corral, and the breaking of that kind of a horse made exciting work for the rider and furnished fun for those who looked on. In all his experience as a rider Mr. Boyes escaped serious injury, although he was pitched from the "hurricane deck" of many a horse and lodged upon the earth with considerable force.

Mr. Boyes was married at Miles City, July 3, 1904, to Miss Annie Davidson, a native of Malton, Yorkshire, England, and a daughter of William Davidson, a farmer of that shire. Mr. Davidson married Hannah Tindall, and they became the parents of these children: Mrs. Boyes, born February 11, 1882; Thomas, a ranchman of Crow Creek, Powder River County; Mary, of Northumberland, England, the present Davidson family home; and George, also of that shire. Mrs. Boyes was educated beyond the common schools of her native land and taught school in Northumberland two years. She came to the United States under the auspices of the Girls' Friendly Society to Miles City, and lived in the home of L. W. Stacey for more than three years, when she and Mr. Boyes were married. She then came to the ranch her husband was establishing, and the two have been promoting the stock industry together ever since. She took up a desert claim, a part of the Boyes ranch, the extent of which ranch is almost 2,500 acres. Their farming has been confined to feed raising in the main, and their pioneer home was a small log house of one room, 14 by 16 feet, which burned with their later home in August, 1918, together with their home equipment. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Boyes are: Edith Mary, Kathleen Hannah and Dorothy Louise.

Mr. Boyes became naturalized several years after coming to the United States, and when he lined up politically he did so as a republican. The women were given the elective franchise in 1916, and Mrs. Boyes cast her maiden vote in 1918.

Neil Boyle has been an interested participant in the life and affairs of Custer County over thirty years, and came to Montana when a boy of six years. Since early manhood his interests have been chiefly identified with ranching, and there is probably none better known for constructive and successful effort, business integrity and all around good citizenship.

He was born in Monroe County, Michigan, January 7, 1877. His father, the late Patrick Boyle, was born in County Donegal, Ireland, and as a boy went to sea and about thirty-seven years of his life were spent in seafaring. Most of this service was on boats engaged in the Atlantic trade. When he left the sea he went far inland and settled in southeastern Michigan, where he lived eleven years as a farmer. During that period his son Neil was born. In 1883 Patrick Boyle brought his family out to Montana and settled where the Big Porcupine empties into the Yellowstone. He came by rail over the Northern Pacific. For three years the Boyle home was near Forsyth. Patrick Boyle then went out to Western Montana and finally entered the Soldiers Home, where he died in 1915, at the age of eighty-eight. He married in County Donegal, Ireland, Mary Ward, a native of that county. She is still living in Custer County. The Boyle family came to America about 1872. The children of Patrick Boyle and wife were: Kate, now Mrs. W. P. O'Brien, of Hamilton, Montana; Miss Elizabeth, who lives near Miles City; Mary and Patrick, who died unmarried in Custer County; Neil and John, the only one of the children born in Montana, a rancher along the Powder River near his brother Neil.

Neil Boyle spent his early childhood on a Michigan farm and attended country schools there and also attended school in Montana. Almost as soon as he was able to ride he began assisting in the work of the ranch and range. He was a cowboy employed by several cattle outfits, and rode the range for others for ten years. During that time he acquired a few cattle of his own, and on taking up the cattle industry independently he located where he lives today, twenty-six miles east of Miles City. He entered a portion of the public domain, beginning with a quarter section, and that was the nucleus of his present six-section ranch. His first home was a bachelor's shack of logs containing a single room, with dirt roof and dirt floor. That building still has a distinctive place among the numerous ranch buildings, serving as a chicken house. Mr. Boyle started ranching with about ten head of cattle, his brand being "N-bar-3." At the height of his operations he had about 500 head on the range tributary to his home. He has been a large shipper out of the county to the Chicago markets. Owing to the break up of the old range to permanent settlement he has practically left the cattle business and for a number of years has been breeding horses. He has handled draft horses, and the business has been profitable because of the demand for these animals made by various governments for war purposes.

When Mr. Boyle first became acquainted with the region where he lives today it was purely a range country. He can name only two other settlers who were then his neighbors, Fred Smith and P. E. Sheeter. Smith is now deceased and Sheeter has moved further west. Much of the range was then occupied by the Concord Cattle Company and the Illinois and Wisconsin Live Stock Company. They were finally compelled to abandon the field by the encroachment of actual settlers, and their domain is now occupied by scores of farmers and small ranchers. Mr. Boyle states that his locality has always been a healthy one for stock, no disease ever becoming epidemic among cattle. The community has been equally free from the operations of bad men and thieves.

Mr. Boyle is a republican and formerly was active as a delegate in conventions. In Chester County, December 26, 1914, he married Miss Velma M. Morgan. Her father, William Seth Morgan, was born at Bloomington, Indiana, eighty-two years ago, and has lived in various middle western states and is now a resident of Thurston County, Nebraska. He married Anna E. Bryan, who is living with her children in Custer County. The Morgan children are: Mrs. Matilda Mozetter of Denver, Colorado; James H., of Winnebago, Nebraska; Seth Harrison, of Smith Center, Kansas; Mrs. Alma Grieve, of Rawlins, Wyoming; Sylvester E., of Winnebago, Nebraska; Ulysses S., of Smith Center, Kansas; Clarence C., of Miles City; Mrs. Boyle, who was born at Sloan, Iowa, March 5, 1883; John E., of Winnebago, Nebraska; and Bessie A., wife of William McIntosh, of Rawlins, Wyoming. Mr. and Mrs. Boyle have two children, Neillaine and Velma Madaline.

Mr. Boyle is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World and the Elks at Miles City. He has well merited the high reputation he has as a neighbor in his community, and his career merits the confidence he enjoys with the busines public generally. He has been a hard worker, and his home life and domestic affairs for many years has been presided over by a wife whose personal traits are as wholesome as his own.

Walter Forde. One of the most enterprising ranchmen in Carter County, who has believed from the outset of his career that the "wisdom of yesterday is sometimes the folly of today," and that the methods of our grandfathers in farming and stock raising were all right in their day, yet in the twentieth century we are compelled to adopt new methods and, to some degree, work along new lines, is the well-known man whose name forms the caption to this review. He has been a close observer of modern methods and is a student at all times of whatever pertains to his line of work; therefore he has met with encouraging success all along the line and, judging from his past record, he will maintain his position among the leading and representative farmers and business men of his community.

Walter Forde was born at Sioux Falls, South Dakota, on May 5, 1882, and is the son of John J. and Nellie Forde, who became the parents of three children, namely: Howard A., of Carter County, Montana; Frank, a ranchman of that same locality; and Walter, of this sketch. John J. Forde was born in New York State, of Irish parents, and he was partly reared in Ireland, whither his parents returned while he was a youth. Upon attaining maturity he returned to the United States, was married in Pennsylvania, and became an early settler of South Dakota, going to Sioux Falls in an early day and entering land from the Government. After spending some years as a farmer there he came farther west and for a time was employed by the "VVV" outfit in Wyoming. In the fall of 1901 he was accidentally killed while on his way to the ranch. His widow is now successfuly conducting a ranch on the little Missouri River in Montana.

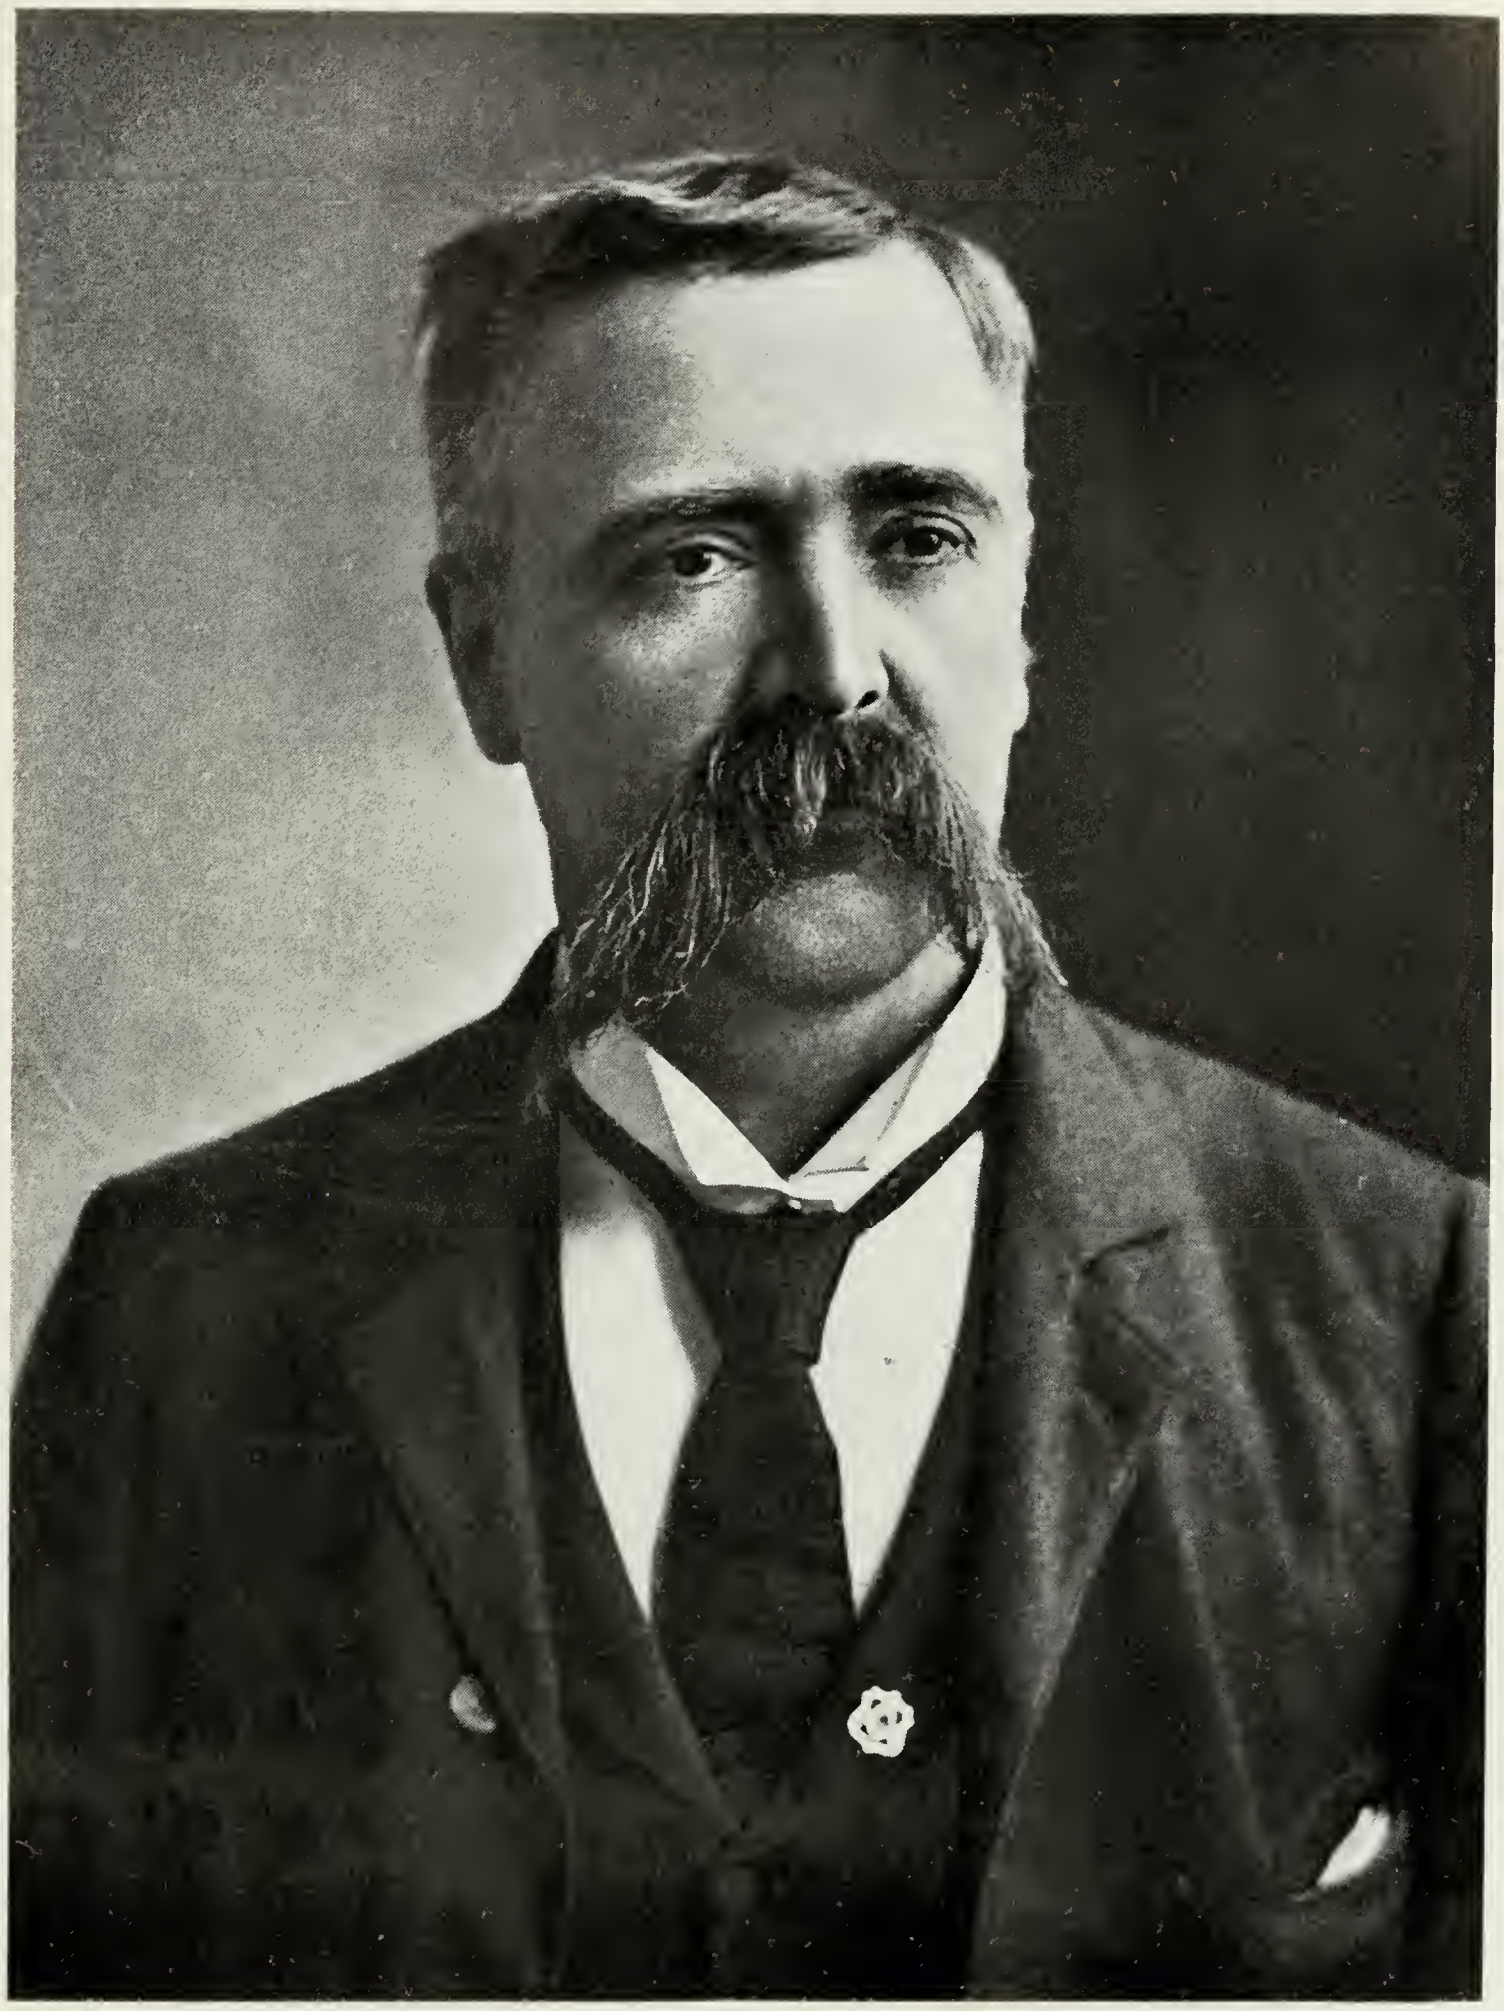
Walter Forde was reared in Sioux Falls until the age of seventeen years, and received his education in the public schools of that city. His first employment away from home was on the cattle ranges at Smithville, South Dakota, where he spent three years in the employ of the "V-Cross" outfit. He then came to Belle Fourche as his headquarters, but entered a claim nearby in Wyoming. This he later abandoned, however, and went to the Black Hills, where for a time he was employed in the gold mills. He spent three winters in this work, but spent summers in "punching cows" for the "VVV" outfit. His next venture was as a ranchman on the Little Missouri River in Montana, where he formed a partnership. The firm bought a bunch of cattle on credit and began grazing them below Albion. The venture was a financial success, and after he had the cattle paid for Mr. Forde sold his interest to his partner and engaged in the horse business in the same locality. He bred and raised range and saddle horses for three years, at the end of which time he sold his stock and took up the sheep business. Buying 700 head of sheep on credit, he took up a homestead and a desert claim on the Little Missouri River, proved them up and they formed the nucleus of his present fine ranch of 1,800 acres. This additional land has been paid for entirely out of the profits from the sheep busines, as has the expense of erecting houses, farm buildings, reservoirs, fences and many other improvements which make the ranch one of the best in that section of the state, every possible accommodation being provided for the stock and modern ideas being put into effect wherever possible in the design and construction of the buildings, as well as in the methods of handling the stock. Mr. Forde tried out the tilling of the soil, but was not satisfied that farming could be successfully prosecuted here, and has therefore not given serious attention to it. He started in the sheep business with a cross of the Rambouillet and Cotswold breeds, which he handled for a number of years, but during recent years has changed to the Romney Marsh, with which he is better satisfied, his sole aim being for wool and mutton. In August, 1919, Mr. Forde embarked in a side line by entering the bakery and restaurant business in Belle Fourche, South Dakota but later disposed of the enterprise.

On December 31, 1907, Mr. Forde was married to Lou Erse King, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Irving G. King, early settlers of Alzada. They were the parents of two children, Mrs. Forde and a brother, Earl Clause King, a sheep ranchman in Crook County, Wyoming. Mrs. Forde was born at Alzada, Montana, on October 5, 1884, and was reared and educated there. To Mr. and Mrs. Forde has been born a daughter, Louie Marie.

Politically Mr. Forde gives his support to the democratic party. He is a man of kindly and generous impulses, who gives his support to every movement for the betterment or advancement of the community. Because of his busines ability, his success and his fine personal character, he enjoys the unstinted respect and esteem of the entire community in which he is interested.

Henry T. Smith, one of the oldest residents of West Point, is a veteran educator, and all who know of him and his work have only words of praise for the good he has accomplished.

Mr. Smith was born in Lincolnshire, England, August 18, 1851. In 1852 his parents, Thomas and Mary (Thacker) Smith, immigrated to the United States, and after spending a year in New York moved on to Wisconsin, where the parents spent the rest of their lives on a farm in Adams County. Thomas Smith early acquired American citizenship. When the Civil war broke out he entered the volunteer army as a member of the Sixteenth Wisconsin



Henry T. Smith

Infantry, was subsequently assigned to duty as a teamster in the Commissary Department, and was at first in General Grant's army and then under General Sherman. At the battle of Pittsburg Landing he was captured, paroled and sent home. On rejoining the army he went with Sherman's command, and followed that great leader from Atlanta to the sea and up through the Carolinas, concluding with the Grand Review at Washington. He was never wounded. After the war he resumed his place on the farm and as head of his family, and died in 1868, at the age of sixty-five. His widow survived him nearly half a century, until December, 1917. She was ninety-five years of age at the time of her death, and her mother had lived to the age of ninety-six. The children of Thomas Smith and wife were: Henry T., the Wolf Point teacher; George, a fruit farmer near Spokane, Washington; John W., at the old Smith home in Wisconsin; Harriet, wife of Henry Bonner, of Stewartville, Minnesota; and Emma, wife of Walter Gray, of Adams County, Wisconsin.

Henry T. Smith acquired his education in a high school at Mantorville, Minnesota, in teachers institutes and has always been a student. As a youth he was offered the teaching of a school near his old home in Wisconsin. He found the work attractive, and this first experience led him into a field of great usefulness and proved to be his life work. It has been almost fifty years since he taught his first school, and his aggregate of work in the schoolroom would be more than 400 months of his life. In 1873, as a young man of twenty-two, he removed to Stewartville, Minnesota, and was both a rural teacher and farmer in that community. Then, in 1884, he became connected with the Goodwell Mission School at Sisseton as an industrial teacher, and served for 9½ years. Following that for eight years he was a farmer at Corona, South Dakota, and came from there to Montana in 1903 to take charge of the Indian Training School at Wolf Point as industrial teacher.

He took up his local work under the Presbyterian Woman's Board of Home Missions, and has the general management of all the outside work of the school. He came here under the supervision of Mrs. C. D. King, and has co-operated with her in this work of education since. Mrs. King came in 1893 and is one of the early white settlers here and one of the oldest superintendents engaged in home mission school work in the United States.

To his pupils in the Wolf Point School Mr. Smith is a grandfather in educational matters. His own home has been childless, and he has directed the paternal impulse toward those committed to his care and training and is now welcoming the third generation of Sioux boys into the camp of American industrial and civic life.

Besides his school work he has taken an active part in the Presbyterian Church, was one of the organizers of the Wolf Point Congregation, is an elder of the church and superintendent of its Sunday school. He was also one of the organizers of the First State Bank of Wolf Point and is vice president and director of that institution. Mr. Smith is a republican voter, and is a charter member of Loyalty Lodge No. 121, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

At Stewartville, Minnesota, April 7, 1879, he married Miss Ella M. Bonner. She was born at Mount Pleasant, Pennsylvania, February 14, 1854, daughter of David L. Bonner, who went from Pennsylvania to Minnesota and became a farmer. Mrs. Smith, like her husband, has given her life to school work, and has been matron of the Wolf Point Indian Training School since she came here.

Ulysses C. Patton, who has long been identified with the agricultural interests of Carter County, has been a resident of Montana since 1903. He was born at Goodland, Newton County, Indiana, on January 25, 1864, a son of Thomas R. and Ellen (Petro) Patton. Thomas R. Patton was born in White County, Indiana, and after his service in the Union army continued to reside in Indiana until 1876, when he took his family to Kansas and lived in Labette County for a few years. He then located in Bates County, Missouri, where he died. He and his wife had three sons and four daughters, of whom Ulysses C. Patton was the fifth in order of birth.

Ulysses C. Patton attended the country schools of the several communities in which he lived, and remained at home until he was nineteen years of age, at which time he became self-supporting, first working in Cass County, Missouri, as a farm hand. As soon as he had accumulated a little money he rented a farm, buying his team and farm equipment on time. His widowed mother was his housekeeper, and he succeeded to such an extent that he was able to discharge his obligations within a short period and go into partnership with a brother in the purchase of a farm, upon which he lived for nine years. Realizing that he was not making enough progress, he decided to try and secure a portion of the open range so as to be able to raise stock in Montana, and in the spring of 1903 he made the trip by rail to Miles City, a distance of 1,230 miles from his home, and from there came to the vicinity of Ekalaka by stage. Having found the location for which he was looking in the vicinity of Ekalaka, Mr. Patton bought a team and moved his family and effects to the open range, four miles east of the old Milliron headquarters on Spring Creek. He came into this new country with but little capital, and engaged in the stock industry with fifty head of a good quality of range stock of the Hereford and Shorthorn strains, and ran them for six years at a profit. Then he found that his range was being eaten out so closely by sheep that he sold his cattle and substituted sheep instead, and ran them for some time with equal profit, notwithstanding the fact that he passed through some bad winters, which annually clipped several hundred head from his flocks. The settlement of the country and its division among new comers caused him to abandon the sheep industry, and he resumed his career as a cattleman, and since then he has been raising beef cattle, wintering his animals well and fattening on grass. He then ships them ready for the block to market. His brand, adopted when he entered the cattle business, is the "lazy SP" on the left hip. His more recent brand is the "4H" on the right rib.

Mr. Patton entered his homestead where he is now located, his "claim shack" becoming his first permanent Montana home. This country residence is a log one of seven rooms, and in it his children have been reared, and one of them was born in it. He has added to his homestead other lands until he now owns 2,000 acres of deeded land, and this together with the land he leases brings ten sections under his control.

In order to provide proper educational advantages for his children Mr. Patton joined with the manager of the Milliron ranch in the matter of building a schoolhouse between his ranch and that of the Milliron property. These gentlemen hired their own teacher, and the children went through the eighth grade work in it. The school district was then about thirty miles square and three directors controlled all of that territory. Since then other districts have been carved out of it, and other schoolhouses built, and the education of the children carried on according to law, although some difficulties have been experienced. In 1919 the little Spring Creek schoolhouse is not occupied, as Mr. Patton's child is the only one of school age in that district.

On November 1, 1893, Mr. Patton was married in Cass County, Missouri, to Miss Edith J. Pitcher, a daughter of Charles Pitcher. Mrs. Patton was born in Illinois, but was reared in Cass County, Missouri, and was educated there and at Kansas City, Missouri. She is one of four children born to her parents. After the death of Mr. Pitcher, Mrs. Pitcher, whose maiden name was Petsey Hogue, became Mrs. George Snyder, and she is still living in Cass County, Missouri.

Mr. and Mrs Patton became the parents of the following children: Harold, who is on the Patton ranch, and is manager of it; Thomas, who is also on the Patton ranch; and Sherman Clay, who is a student in the Baker City schools. Harold was in the University Training School of Minneapolis, Minnesota, just prior to the signing of the armistice, and therefore was not given an opportunity to enter the army for service during the late war. The Pattons, father and son, are republicans. Having developed with the state, Mr. Patton is typical of the great spirit of the West, and is proud of the part he has been permitted to take in its progress. He has succeeded in bringing up his sons on his ranch and with commendable foresight has made the work profitable enough to them to awaken their interest and cause them to adopt an agricultural life, so that he is giving the state several additional ranchmen who understand their business and who will not have to pass through an experimental period before they are of account to their community and industry. America has need of every intelligent, experienced and ambitious producer it can secure, and there is no calling in which there is more need for them than that of agriculture, especially at this time when the world is depending upon this country to keep from starving. If there were more men of the stamp of the Pattons there would be fewer economic and industrial problems for the Government to solve.

Harvey S. Trusler, who is ranching and farming near Ashland on Otter Creek, a tributary of Tongue River, has been identified with this locality since the year 1886. He came to this section of the West as a young and single man, and, being without capital save that represented by his ability in the way of hard and painstaking labor, he went to work for wages. The employment to be found was that to be secured on ranches, as this was purely a stock country and cowpunching and range and round-up work constituted his duties. Among his employers were Brandenburg & Van Gaskin, Sidney Padget, W. W. Terrett and Johnny Zook, all within this locality.

Out of his wages of $40 per month and board Mr. Trusler saved a part monthly, and when he married he started for himself as a ranchman. He purchased the remnant of the "box bar" herd of cattle and took up his ranch on Fifteen Mile, where he built himself a home, the first home of his own in the state, entered a homestead and proved it up, and ranched there for sixteen years. His pioneer domicile was a log house of four rooms, and it sheltered him and his family while he remained on that creek. He added to his homestead other land and developed a ranch of 800 acres, a part of his ranching interests still. In the spring of 1911 Mr. Trusler changed locations to Otter Creek, purchasing the Johnny Stafford ranch, which is growing alfalfa under a partial system of irrigation.

Mr. Trusler began his career of ranching with cattle, and while he is producing beef for the market he is introducing the pure blood Hereford, his aim being to build up a polled herd of the Hereford strain. The head of his herd is "King Jewel the Fourth," sired by "King Jewel" of the Muncie (Indiana) Herefords. Bulls from the famous "Richard Fairfax" family are among his range cattle and are sired by a brother of the famous $50,000 bull of that family. Mr. Trusler's Otter Creek ranch embraces 1,820 acres, with the creek meandering through it, is fitted with two sets of improvements, and his cattle range over a portion of the forest reserve under the old "box bar" brand.

Harvey S. Trusler came to Montana from Wyoming, where he went in 1884 and secured employment on the range during his stay there. He had spent several years in the Indian Territory prior to going to Wyoming, working for the "Cross H" outfit, whose ranch was on the Salt Fork above Pond Creek, Oklahoma. He went into that region from Fremont County, Iowa, where he grew up at the home of his parents, who had settled there when he was a child, and his final schooling was obtained there in the public schools. He left the parental roof when under age and became responsible for his own support and for his career when he was eighteen years of age.

The father of Mr. Trusler was William Thomas Trusler, who gave his life to his farm in Illinois, and died in Mercer County, that state. He was a native of Ohio and married Hannah Stevens, an Ohio lady who survived him many years and died in Fremont County, Iowa, in 1880, at the age of sixty-three years. She brought her children to the West from her Illinois home in 1876 and reared them in Fremont County. She was the mother of the following: Rebecca, who married Henry Tully and died in Oklahoma; William T., who was a soldier during the Civil war and is now a farmer near Sand Creek, Oklahoma; Mrs. Martha Gibson, who died at Lenox, Iowa; James M., a resident of Oklahoma; John W., who was last known of in the old Indian Territory; Ray, who married James Davis and is now a widow residing in California; Lena, a resident of Culbertson, Nebraska, and wife of Frank Henderson; Vie Ella, the wife of John Anderson, of Holdridge, Nebraska; and Harvey S., of Montana.

Harvey S. Trusler was born in Mercer County, Illinois, September 7, 1863, and was married in Custer County, Montana, February 15, 1895, his wife being Miss Louie Kimes, a daughter of Mrs. Roll Johnson. Mrs. Trusler's father was George Kimes who brought his family into Montana by steamboat up the Yellowstone River in 1881 from Bloomington, Illinois, the family landing at Buffalo Rapids, below Miles City. Mr. Kimes had been a school teacher near Bloomington, and came to Montana in search of better health, locating at Miles City, where he died in 1883, at the age of about twenty-five years. He married Abigail Long, who is now Mrs Roll Johnson, of Stacey, and there were two children born to them: Mrs. Trusler, who was born near Bloomington, Illinois, May 7, 1877; and Mrs. Luther Dunning, born there June 19, 1879. To Mr. and Mrs. Trusler there have been born five children, as follows: Ray, who served in the quartermaster's corps of the army as a volunteer and was stationed at Fort Keogh during the war; and Louie May, Leoti Myrtle, Luther Dale and Woodrow Wilson, at home, the last-named of whom calls himself "Bill." The Trusler politics is democratic, and fraternal affiliation is with the Masons, in the Master's degree at Miles City. Mrs.

Trusler is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Joseph R. McKay, who became a resident of the country around Miles City nearly thirty-five years ago, has figured so prominently as a rancher, stock man and public official that his name is one of the most easily identified in the citizenship of that period.

Mr. McKay was born in the Province of Quebec, Canada, January 26, 1847. His father, Alexander McKay, was a native of Scotland, came to America when a young man, lived in Ontario and engaged in the lumber business, and later moved to the Province of Quebec. He finally returned to Ontario and spent his last years as a lumberman and stockman. He enjoyed the confidence of the Canadian Government, being appointed to represent it on its river improvements and in other capacities. He was a conservative in politics and was postmaster at Morewood for many years. In Ontario he married Miss Elizabeth Robinson. Her father, William Robinson, was a native of Scotland but lived in the north of Ireland when Mrs. McKay was born. From there he brought his family to Canada and spent his life as a farmer. He had three sons and two daughters by his wife, Annie. Alexander McKay and wife are both deceased. Their children were: William, who died in Canada; John R.; Hiram, who is in the Dominion Government service at Ottawa; Dr. James, of Potsdam, New York; and Annie, who married Sergeant Brock and died leaving four children in Canada.

When Joseph R. McKay was a child his parents moved to Ontario and in that province, near Ottawa, he was reared, obtaining his education in rural schools. At the age of fifteen he began clerking and at seventeen was an independent merchant at Morewood. He continued merchandising at Morewood for ten years and then identified himself with the lumber business with Hamilton Brothers at Hoxbury.

Mr. McKay found the free trade policy of Canada an insuperable obstacle to success in the lumber industry, and chiefly for that reason he sought a home in the United States. He reached Custer County in October, 1885, and first established himself twenty miles up the Tongue River. After prospecting around Miles City he bought Northern Pacific Railroad lands and developed a new farm and home in that region. His first Montana home on Tongue River was a combination log and frame house of three rooms, accommodations which served him for a number of years. He also changed his business relations from what they had been in Canada to ranching and stock raising. He started in with 290 head of horses and 200 head of cattle, buying stallions of various standard bred horses and Shetland ponies and starting the cattle business with Shorthorns and Devons. He produced cattle for beef and continued a shipper to market until recent years. His horses were sold chiefly in the East and Canada and he became widely known both as a dealer and breeder. Mr. McKay's ranch embraced 960 acres of deeded land, but the range for his stock spread over a much wider region on the west side of Tongue River. About 1908 he sold his ranch and stock, and then bought his present farm, situated seven miles up the Tongue River from Miles City. This farm comprises 180 acres. Its first owner was John Ross, who sold to John Carter, and it is best known as the Carter place. This locality was at the time the playground of the Cheyenne Indians until they were bought off by the settlers. There is a legend that the McKay farm is the site of the home of a prominent Englishman once well known in the pioneer times of Montana. In recent years Mr. McKay has devoted much of his land to alfalfa and grain. He is a leader in agricultural affairs, is vice president of the Custer County Farm Bureau and has been keenly interested in the Custer County Fair Association, serving as one of its directors.

Mr. McKay married his first wife in Custer County. By that union he had two sons, Scott and Joseph R., Jr., both now engaged in the stock business in Southern Texas, at Mission. For his second wife Mr. McKay married Lucy Perry, who came to Montana from Mount Clemens, Michigan. They have a son, Perry McKay, born in 1911.

Mr. McKay is affiliated with the Lodge and Royal Arch Masons and with the Elks, and as soon as he could become a citizen of the United States he allied himself with the republican party. His first presidential vote was cast for Benjamin Harrison in 1888. He was a regular in the party until 1912, when he acted with the progressives and voted for Roosevelt. He was elected county commissioner in 1889, serving a part of one term and then resigned to become a candidate for the lower house of the Legislature. On that early board of commissioners he was associated with W. S. Snell and W. N. Haynes. One important service rendered by this board was the material reduction of the county debt. Elected to the Legislature, he was member of the second Legislature of the new state and served under Speaker Matthews. He was appointed chairman of one committee and took an active part in obtaining the location of the State Industrial School at Miles City. In 1894 Mr. McKay was elected a member of the State Senate. While in the House he had been in the fight for a United States senator from his party against the Daly and Clark factions. In the Senate the same issue came up again, and he was one of four who stood out for principle and voted for the republican caucus nominee, Mr. Marshall. Mr. McKay was subpoenaed by the United States Senate as a witness in the investigation of Clark's election. Mr. McKay went back to the Senate for a second term, serving four years in that body. In 1898 he was elected county treasurer of Custer County, filling that position for two years. After that came a period in which he was free from public cares. He was finally urged to become a candidate for county commissioner again, and was elected in 1916, and is now in his second term. On the first board he was with Charles Daly and Robert Yokley, while on the next board P. S. Richardson took Mr. Daly's place and Mr. Hasty took the place vacated by Mr. Yokley. At present the board is chiefly concerned with the public roads question and is arranging for some permanent road construction by the issuance of bonds.

Allen Mitchell Ball. One of the most widely known among the extensive ranchmen of Custer County is Allen Mitchell Ball, whose land lies on Tongue River and Sweeney Creek. He was born in Madison, Wisconsin, June 14, 1880, and he received his higher educational training at Wesleyan University, Delaware, Ohio. A few weeks after leaving college his father, Charles Edward Ball, died, passing away at the early age of thirty-one years. He was born at Ironton, Ohio, and was for a time a drug merchant and was later in the iron and foundry business at Madison, Wisconsin. He married Ida Mitchell, who was born in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, and a son and daughter were born to their marriage. Mrs. Ball and her daughter, Miss Ruth N. Ball, reside in San Diego, California. On the paternal side the ancestry is traced back to Mary Ball, the mother of George Washington.

Mitchell Ball, as he is more commonly known, went to Wyoming in 1885, when but only five years old, and he grew to manhood in the region of the head waters of the Cheyenne River. He was reared in the home of his uncle, A. B. Clark, and was educated by his mother on the ranch until he entered college. In 1902 he came to Montana and became associated in ranching with his uncle, A. B. Clark, widely known over this region as a ranchman and who at one time was the owner of the ranch now owned by Clay Robinson of Kansas City, who acquired the estate through Mr. Ball. Mr. Clark was the originator of the range horse scale business in Miles City, and became perhaps the most widely known horse dealer of the more recent additions to the state.

Mr. Ball was his uncle's ranch foreman when sheep raising was also carried on there, and when he left Mr. Clark he bought what is now known as the Ball ranch, comprising at that time 4,200 acres. Hunter Terrett had previously engaged in ranching there, and after a time Mr. Ball added the A. D. Howard ranch to his original purchase, thus making a total acreage of 20,000 acres, and when railroad lands were also included the property became a ranch of almost 40,000 acres. But as settlers came in and lands for agricultural pursuits were sought Mr. Ball sold about half of the ranch and the remainder he fenced. In time he brought about 600 acres under cultivation, built a system of irrigation, and now has one of the big irrigation projects along the river. He is engaged extensively in the growing of alfalfa and grain. His stock are Shorthorns and White Faces, which he raises for the feeders, and for a time he also bred pedigreed Percheron horses. The extensive improvements on the place stand out conspicuously along the river, looming clearly and prominently among the other properties of the community. He originated the Liscom alfalfa, a variegated plant of the same strain as the Grimm, known to be the hardiest alfalfa plant yet found.

Mr. Ball descends from a republican family in matter of politics, and while he always supports the national nominees of the party, he has never cared for the emoluments or honors of public office for himself, nor has he ever cared to attend party conventions. He is a Mason, a member of the blue lodge at East St. Louis, while his chapter and Knight Templar Commandery membership are in Miles City, and at Chicago he is a member of the Scottish Rite and Shrine. At East St. Louis he also has membership in the Elks fraternity. He is a member of the college fraternity Beta Theta Pi.

On the 6th of January, 1909, in East St. Louis, Illinois, he married Miss Nellie Flannigen, who was educated at Columbia, Missouri. She is a daughter of Alexander Flannigen, a well known attorney of East St. Louis, and the mother of Mrs. Ball was of French extraction. A daughter, Nellie Elizabeth, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Ball on the 9th of November, 1911.

John W. Janssen. Although a resident of Montana for but nine years, the prominent merchant and ranchman of Coalwood, John W. Janssen, has had connections both permanent and productive of results. He came into this state October 10, 1910, crossing the state line at Marmath, North Dakota, as a passenger in his freight car, chartered from Calhoun County, Iowa. Since that time he has been a progressive figure in the promulgation and carrying through of movements which have been beneficial to the interests of his adopted community, and has placed himself in a position of prestige as ranchman, merchant and public-spirited citizen.

Mr. Janssen was born January 12, 1863, in Woodford County, Illinois, a son of Dierk H. Janssen, who came to the United States as a young man of twenty-eight years from East Friesland, near Hanover in the Rhine country. He was married in Woodford County, Illinois, to Engelbertha Uphoff, a native of the same locality in Friesland. He settled down to farming, acquiring a good property and dying in 1889, at the age of fifty-eight years, well supplied with this world's goods. He acquired the English language fluently and adopted the customs of his adopted land, and in his community was accounted a man of integrity and usefulness. His widow, who still survives him, lives at Pekin, Illinois, and is seventy-five years of age. Their children were as follows: John W., of this notice; Herman H., of Girard, Kansas; Katie, the wife of Frank Graber, of Peoria, Illinois; Mattie, now Mrs. Dittmer, of Pekin, Illinois; Henry, of Geneseo, Kansas; Martha, the wife of Paul Peters, of Laraine, Kansas; Bertha, who married Frank Tucker, of Minonk, Illinois; Will, of Benson, Illinois; and George, on the old family homestead near Minonk, Illinois.

To the country schools of Woodford County John W. Janssen is indebted for his education, and eight years of his early manhood were passed in Gage and Johnson counties, Nebraska, and three years at Quincy, Illinois, in addition to which he was for some years employed in carpenter work and farming at Minonk. Later he went to Rockwell City, Iowa, where he followed the trade of carpenter, and also farmed for four years, and then, in 1910, in response to advertising by the Milwaukee Railroad Company, came to Montana, the place where he now resides being his destination. He had previously filed on a half section upon which the office and store at Coalwood are now situated and which he established after his arrival. There was nothing here but grass at that time to begin with, and he came rather to farm and raise stock than to take up merchandising, but has done all three of these, having continued his stock until 1919, when he disposed of it and at present is devoting his energies principally to his store.

Mr. Janssen's connection with this community as a citizen has brought into it the postoffice of Coalwood, the name being taken from the abundance of both coal and wood right at hand. This locality has produced many thousands of feet of pine lumber, and the improvements of the region hereabout have been made of the native lumber. The postoffice was opened here in 1912, and in 1915 the stock of goods constituting the Janssen store was placed on the shelves. His beginning, however, dates from an earlier day, when he put in merely a stock of inks and tobaccos. The establishing of the schools here, the first rural school of district No. 1, subdivision No. 76, was urged by Mr. Janssen, and he helped build the pioneer log house still used as a place of education, while his eldest son is a member of the board of school directors. In his position on public matters Mr. Janssen is a Wilson democrat, but his only public position has been that of postmaster, which he holds at the present time. Both he and Mrs. Janssen have been active in the movement for the establishment of a Congregational Church in the community, the pioneer pastor of which is the Rev. John Duncan, "the walking preacher."

In Woodford County, Illinois, February 28, 1888,

Mr. Janssen was united in marriage with Miss Anna E. Baker (formerly Becker), who was born in Hessen, the Village of Waurau, May 8, 1867, and was brought to the United States by her mother in 1869. Mrs. Becker settled in La Salle County, Illinois, and not far from La Salle Mrs. Janssen grew to young womanhood. Her father was Simon Becker and her mother's maiden name was Margaret Trinmner. Their children were: Katie, now Mrs. Fred Falk, of Calhoun County, Iowa; Lizzie, who married George Miller, of Cedar Falls, Iowa; Henry, of La Salle County, Illinois; Carrie, who married Herman Miller, of Cedar Falls, Iowa; Conrad, who died in La Salle County, Illinois; Mary, the wife of Louis Kessler, of that county; Simon, who is a farmer in La Salle County; Balser, also a farmer there; Mrs. Janssen; and Theodore, a farmer of Calhoun County, Iowa.

Mr. and Mrs. Janssen have had the following children: Fred S., associated with his father in his various interests at Coalwood, married Lois Graham, and has two children, Billy and Dorothy Jean; Carrie, the wife of Percy Bird of Coalwood, has two daughters, Gladys and Lucile; Sam B., of the Coalwood community, who spent ten months in the United States navy during the World war, on the U. S. S. Nanshan, patrolling the Pacific coast; Will McKinley, also a sailor, who served one year and ten months on the U. S. S. Illinois and the U. S. S. Saranac in the dangerous business of mine laying, his honorable discharge being granted him in March, 1919, while his brother left the service the preceding January; and Dewey, the youngest, who is a farmer in the Coalwood community.

Ami Zimmerman. Since the days of his childhood and youth Ami Zimmerman has lived within the borders of Montana, has been a figure in its stock-raising industry, and has watched with interest its gradual development from a frontier region to the land of the stockman and farmer.

He was born in Shelby County, Iowa, November 12, 1876, and came to Montana with his parents in 1886. The family became identified with Iowa at an early day in its history. The paternal grandfather of Ami Zimmerman was for many years a farmer in that state. He was born in Pennsylvania, and died at Mechanicsville, Iowa. In his family were two sons, John J. and Henry, and four daughters.

John J. Zimmerman, father of Ami Zimmerman, was born in Pennsylvania, but left that state when a youth and removed to Iowa. In Shelby County he became a veterinary surgeon and also engaged in the livery business. He continued the practice of his profession until he came to Montana, and in this state he located on the Little Missouri River, five miles below Alzada, where he proved up a homestead and some desert land and engaged in the stock business. His stock brand was the "Z-Z" and the "XIX," and he was numbered among the cattle shippers of that region. He also served the people of that community as a notary public, and his political support was given to the republican party. In 1862 he enlisted in an Iowa cavalry company for service in the Civil war, and continued his service until the close of the war, receiving in the meantime a taste of a rebel bullet and imprisonment for six months in Andersonville Prison, but was exchanged in time to rejoin his command and finish the war in active service. He is now living in the Soldiers Home at Marshalltown, Iowa, to which state he returned in 1916.

In Shelby County, Iowa, Mr. John J. Zimmerman was married to Leah Stover, who is also still living, and they became the parents of six children, four sons and two daughters, Elmer, Mrs. Ida Johnston, Ola, Ami, Mrs. Charles I. Wood and Gomer.

In the Town of Harlon in Shelby County, Iowa, Ami Zimmerman spent the first ten years of his life, receiving in that time his school training, and he remained with his parents on the home ranch in Montana until past his majority. In about the year 1898 he embarked in the cattle business for himself, and in 1900 added sheep to his herd, finally abandoning the cattle industry to become almost exclusively a sheep raiser. He started in the sheep business with 1,000 head, bought partially on time and at $3.50 a head for ewes. His band continued to prosper and multiply until 1910-11, when he and his partner lost 4,700 head during the severe winter, this number entailing about half the flock. But the firm of Zimmerman & Selway continued the business despite this terrible loss, and eighteen months later Mr. Zimmerman purchased his partner's interest, added a few more sheep to the flock, but in the winter of 1912-13 he suffered another severe reverse in the loss of 3,600 head, the loss again costing him about half his flock. But in spite of this discouraging circumstance he continued on in the business and has again felt himself master of the situation in the sheep industry. His first clip of wool brought but 9 cents a pound, and since that time he has sold his wool all the way up the scale in price to 72½ cents a pound, the sheep industry on the whole proving more satisfactory to him than the cattle business.

Mr. Zimmerman began his ranching enterprise on the head of Indian Creek, a tributary of the Belle Fourche River, but in 1904 he moved to Willow Creek, where he homesteaded and proved up other lands of the public domain. His ranch is splendidly improved with his home and extensive sheep barns, and is fenced. Its boundaries comprise 1,497 acres. Mr. Zimmerman's part in the political life of his community has been that of a voter, and he gives his allegiance to the republican party. His fraternal relations are with the Knights of Pythias.

He was married at Belle Fourche, South Dakota, December 25, 1900, to Miss Lydia A. Barr, a daughter of John and Diana Barr, who came to South Dakota from Missouri, where Mrs. Zimmerman was born. She is the only daughter in their family of four children. Mr. and Mrs. Barr are now living in Belle Fourche. Mr. and Mrs. Zimmerman have one child, a daughter, Edith May, who is completing her education at Long Beach, California, where the Zimmerman winter home has been recently established.

Irving G. King. People of the present generation should be proud of the old pioneers and first settlers and accord them the greatest esteem, for they blazed the way for succeeding generations and made possible our present prosperity and happy homes; but we of today are apt to forget the great sacrifices they made, the privations they had to face and the years of toil and discomfort they had to endure in order that the wilderness might give way to fertile farms, prosperous ranches and populous communities. Among these early settlers of the eastern part of Montana must be numbered Irving G. King, now living in retirement in his comfortable home at Alzada. He came here a third of a century ago, and has lived to see the great changes which have taken place and in which he has had an active part.

Irving G. King was born near Yellville, Arkansas, on March 9, 1858, and is the son of Andrew J. and Mary (Magness) King. Andrew J. King was born in Alabama, and when a lad of eighteen years he accompanied his father, Joel King, on his removal to Arkansas. The latter took up a tract of Government land in Marion County, being among the first settlers in that locality, and he and his son Andrew J. lived the remainder of their lives and died there. They were humble folk, owning a small tract of land, but they were of respectable stock and were held in esteem by their neighbors. Joel King and his wife, whose maiden name was Nancy Cheatham, now lie in the Crooked Creek Cemetery west of Yellville. They were the parents of five children, three sons being soldiers of the Civil war, one of them serving in the Union army. To Andrew J. and Mary King were born the following children: Nicy, now Mrs. Dodd, of Alzada, Montana; Nancy, who became the wife of John Jones, of Western Grove, Arkansas; Minerva married Nels Fowler of Western Grove; Fountain C. died at Belle Fourche, South Dakota; Martha became the wife of George Marshall and died near Alzada; Irving G. is the immediate subject of this sketch; and Andrew J., the youngest, lives at Great Falls, Montana.

Irving G. King, familiarly and widely known as "Bud" King, did not have the opportunities for a thorough education, but his scanty school training was liberally supplemented all through his after years by much reading and habits of close observation, so that today he is a well informed man on general topics. His boyhood and early manhood days were not characterized by any events of more than ordinary importance, the turning point in his career being when he decided to cut loose from old home ties and start for the new country of the Northwest, where great opportunities were presenting themselves to those who had the courage and patience to tackle and conquer conditions as they were in those days. To make a long story short, it was the month of July, 1884, that he drove into Southeastern Montana, a part of an Arkansas caravan of settlers, at the rear of which he drove two yoke of bulls. In Arkansas cattle were commonly used for work teams, and they were used as a common mode of travel by emigrants. He had been induced to migrate from his native state for two principal reasons, the condition of his health and the appeal of an old friend who had preceded him to Montana that this was the ideal place for the stock business. They passed through Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska and Dakota, passing through what were known as the bad lands of the latter territory and rushing the quicksands of the Cheyenne River, following Rapid Creek to Rapid City, thence following the trail north through Sturgis, old Crook City to Spearfish and there took the old Miles City trail, which led them into their future location on the Little Missouri at Stoneville. This was then a part of Custer County, and remained so until Fallon County was created, and still later Carter County was carved out of Fallon. Thus Mr. King has had the unique experience of living in three counties without having changed his residence. In addition to the two bull teams he also brought with him thirty-nine head of young heifers as a nucleus for his stock business. He erected a shack for a home on the unsurveyed public domain and began life among the buttes and coyotes. His first effort in the stock business was a disappointment, and in 1886 he disposed of his cattle with the intention of leaving the territory the next spring. However, by that time he had purchased the feed barn at Stoneville, which proved to be a profitable enterprise, and he was thus able to meet expenses, and he decided to remain. That fall he also bought a hotel and conducted it as a road ranch or public stopping place until Mrs. King's health failed, when he abandoned that business. Mrs. King died in March, 1887, leaving him three small children to care for. Nevertheless, in the fall of that year he resumed the road ranch, did the cooking and other kitchen work and was both father and mother to his children. There was a period of several years between the second abandonment of the road ranch until he took it up again, but this time his present wife was in charge, and for several years they conducted the Stranger's Home on the banks of the Little Missouri. This ranch was destroyed, with all its contents, by fire in 1911, and Mr. King did not continue the business longer. Perhaps no hostelry in all this section of country was more widely known than this old ranch, and certainly no place along the old trail extended a more hearty welcome or was more popular as a stopping place than this. Following this disaster Mr. King entered more actively into the stock business, obtained more land and became an active factor in the production of beef and mutton.

He had entered his homestead several years before he filed on it. It lies on either side of the Little Missouri River, just above the site of old Stoneville, and his modest residence stands overlooking the banks of the stream. He proved up a desert claim besides his homestead and bought other titles to lands from time to time until he owned 1,100 acres of land in Montana and 300 acres in Wyoming, close by. He followed the cattle for many years under the brand "K-Bar" on the left ribs, and shipped the most of his stock from Belle Fourche to the Omaha and Chicago markets. In 1910 Mr. King decided to substitute sheep for cattle, and bought the nucleus of his stock on the heels of the sale of his cattle. His experience with sheep was varied, some years being satisfactory, other very discouraging. But reverses did not deter him, and he continued with his sheep, paid his losses out of their earnings, rebuilt his depleted flocks and in February, 1917, sold his sheep interests for $16,000. He still retained a few cattle, but owing to the condition of his health he soon disposed of them and retired from active business.

Mr. King was married three times and each wife was from among his boyhood friends. His first wife was Elvira Harris, a daughter of Benjamin Harris, and to this union was born a son, Fortes N., of Alzada, state land commissioner and surveyor of this locality. The latter married Alice May Walker, and they have four children, Violet, Edward C., Fortes E. and Dean Eugene. For his second wife Mr. King was married to Susan Davis, who died leaving two children, Lou Ersce, Mrs. Walter Forde, of Belle Fourche, and Earl Clause, of Crook County, Wyoming, who married Laura Hale and has a son, Robert Beech.

For his third wife Mr. King married Mary Farris, of Chelsea, Oklahoma. Mrs. King was born in Marion County, Arkansas, on February 4, 1858, and is a daughter of Jerry and California (Dobbs) Farris. Mr. Farris entered the Confederate army from Arkansas, of which state he was an early settler. He had married in Marion County and spent his life there as a farmer. He was born in Tennessee in 1818, and was killed while a soldier near the close of the Civil war. He was the father of the following children: Joanna Catherine, who died single; Calaway, who died young; William McD., of Wardville, Oklahoma; Louisa, who married James Palmour, of Chelsea, Oklahoma; Mary, Mrs. King; and Sarah, the wife of Gus Pannell, of Chelsea, Oklahoma. Mrs. King was given but limited opportunity for attending school, but her natural aptitude for acquiring knowledge made up for all deficiencies in school attendance. She learned to farm and took naturally to all its phases as it applied to conditions in Arkansas. When she married Mr. King she took her place beside him as an actual helpmeet and proved an invaluable aid to him in acquiring the competence which he is now enjoying. About that time she began an independent career in the stock business. For several years she had been active partner with her husband and son in the sheep business, and when she withdrew from that she continued the business alone. She has been successful and owns fine herds of cattle and flocks of sheep. She has gained a reputation throughout this section of country for her sound business judgment and ability. She and "Uncle Bud" are affectionately known far and wide throughout this section of the state, for their lives have been characterized by good deeds and kindly words, their genial and kindly natures shedding sunshine wherever they go. All admire them for their sterling honesty, their courage, hospitality and public spirit, and they are eminently deserving of a permanent place in a history of their section.

STEPHEN A. HOLT. In the daily laborious struggle for an honorable competence and a solid career on the part of a business or professional man there is little to attract the casual reader in search of a sensational chapter; but to a mind thoroughly awake to the reality and meaning of human existence there are noble and imperishable lessons in the career of an individual who without other means than a clear head, strong arm and true heart, directed and controlled by correct principles and unerring judgment, conquers adversity and finally wins not only pecuniary independence but, what is far greater and higher, the deserved respect and confidence of those with whom his active years have been spent.

Stephen A. Holt, a successful pharmacist and public-spirited citizen of Ekalaka, Carter County, was born in Knox County, Nebraska, on September 18, 1874, the son of Benjamin and Betsy Ellen (Hobbs) Holt. Benjamin Holt was born in Norway, Maine, and was a son of Uriah Holt, also a native of Maine, whose family, long identified with the colonial history of New England, was of English origin. Benjamin Holt was a member of a Maine regiment during the Civil war and served four years as a private. He was with the Army of the Potomac and fought Lee along the Potomac and around Richmond. He was injured by falling from a mule in an ammunition train, sustaining injuries from which he suffered throughout the remainder of his life. In 1878 he moved to Creighton, Nebraska, entering land in Knox County, and there passed the remainder of his life, dying in 1901, when seventy-nine years of age. By his union with Betsy Ellen Hobbs, who passed away May 5, 1905, there were born the following children: Mrs. George W. Thomas, of Creighton, Nebraska; Mrs. James Rothwell, of Portland, Oregon; Frank A., of Seattle, Washington; Mrs. L. L. Arnold, of Bellingham, Washington; Osgood, of Bellingham; William, of Knox County, Nebraska; Lavina, deceased; and Stephen A., the immediate subject of this sketch.

Stephen A. Holt passed his early years on the parental homestead and attended school until twelve years of age, when he began to earn his own way, and it is worthy of note that his professional education was obtained entirely through his own unassisted efforts. He became a homesteader in Montana in 1909, entering his claim in old Custer County, now Carter County, about fourteen miles southeast of Ekalaka. He followed the usual routine of proving up on his land, erected a typical log cabin, and lived there five years, improving his ranch and making some headway up to the time he sold his livestock and effects, keeping the homestead. When a resident of that community he was instrumental in having a school established there and was elected a member of the school board, but as he was at that time employed in Ekalaka he could not serve and declined the position. He was also the choice of his locality for county commissioner, but failed of nomination. His first experience in Ekalaka was as a clerk in the Olsen Drug Store, and in 1914 he opened a drug store on his own account, which he has since conducted, and he has commanded his full share of the public patronage. In addition to his practical experience in a drug store Mr. Holt was a student in the College of Pharmacy at Iowa City, Iowa, graduating in 1901, with the highest honors of his class. He carries a large and well selected stock of such accessory lines as are usually carried in a drug store, and is thoroughly up-to-date in his business methods. He was in the drug business in Nebraska for eight years, owning stores at Grass and Bristow that state.

Mr. Holt was married in Boyd County, Nebraska, on April 15, 1903, to Anna L. O'Neill, who was born in Merrill, Wisconsin, on January 18, 1879, the daughter of Charles and Mary A. (Clair) O'Neill. Mr. O'Neill was a prominent attorney in Wisconsin, though a native of Canada. He settled in Nebraska many years ago. Mrs. Holt died on October 27, 1918, during the epidemic of the "flu." To Mr. and Mrs. Holt were born the following children: Milford, Stephen A., Jr., Herbert, Helen and Robert.

Politically Mr. Holt is a stanch republican, though he was in sympathy with the progressive movement of one element of the party in 1912. He was elected to represent Carter County in the Legislature in November, 1918, being the first man so honored from this county. He was nominated against some opposition and defeated his democratic opponent by the largest plurality on the ticket. As a member of the Sixteenth Legislature he was assigned to the committees on agriculture, townships and counties and public utilities. His earlier public service was of a local character, he having served as mayor of Ekalaka before entering the Legislature, resigning his second term. Fraternally Mr. Holt is a past master of Ekalaka Lodge No. 120, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Ekalaka, and is a past grand of the local lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He was a member of the Red Cross during the recent war and took a very active part in auxiliary war work. He has taken a keen interest in everything that promised to advance the material or civic interests of the town and assisted in the organization of the First National Bank of Ekalaka, of which he became vice president. He was also secretary of the local Federal Loan Association and a member of the local school board. Because of his constant and untiring efforts for the welfare of the community and his high personal character he is eminently deserving of the confidence and esteem which are given him by all who know him.

June 16, 1920, Mr. Holt was married to Miss Catherine Chilton, for several years primary teacher in the Ekalaka schools. The family now resides at Broadus, Montana, where Mr. Holt moved his drug stock in July, 1920. At this place he is conducting a thoroughly up-to-date pharmacy, the only drug store in Powder River County. In the new county he is becoming identified with civic affairs being unsolicitedly appointed county coroner at a recent session of the Board of County Commissioners.

Col. A. A. White is a man of achievement, a constructive genius who has been the confidante and adviser of such great empire builders as the late James J. Hill. Colonel White has long regarded Montana as his home, and he enjoys the fame of history accorded in the phrase "father of Kalispell." He laid out the townsite of Kalispell for James J. Hill of the Great Northern Railroad.

Colonel White began his career June 18, 1844, when he was born in Addison County, Vermont, at the Village of Whiting, named in honor of his ancestors. He is a descendant of the Peregrine White family of Mayflower fame. Several generations of the Whites have lived in Massachusetts. Colonel White's grandparents moved from Boston, riding horseback all the way, a journey of several hundred miles through a rough and sparsely settled country, to Otter Creek, Vermont, and their settlement on Otter Creek subsequently became known as Whiting. The White family is remarkable for longevity. Grandfather White died at the age of ninety-nine and his wife at a hundred and one. Their family consisted of Lyman P. White, father of Colonel White, six older brothers, and two older sisters, all of whom reached extreme old age. Lyman P. White died at Brainerd, Minnesota, at the age of ninety-three and never was ill a single day in his life, his mind remaining perfectly clear until thirty minutes of his death. He married Phoebe Keeler, of Vermont, who died at St. Louis, Missouri, at the age of fifty-two.

A. A. White was educated in the public schools of Vermont, also at Fond du Lac and Oshkosh, Wisconsin, and at the age of eighteen graduated from Lawrence University at Appleton, Wisconsin. On the day of his graduation he and twenty-one other university boys enlisted in Company E, of the 40th Wisconsin Infantry for service in the Civil war. He became sergeant of his company, and after a period of training at Madison went south with the troops and for some time was employed as a picket guard around the approaches to Memphis. While in this service the rebel General Forrest with a regiment of cavalrymen dashed into the city over the Hernando road at 3 o'clock one morning, forced his way through the picket lines and made a dash for the Gayosa Hotel, his objective being the capture of Maj. Gen. C. C. Washburn of Minnesota and two other major generals who were stopping at that hotel. Some enterprising Union pickets had succeeded in outrunning the Confederate cavalryman, and by their early alarm General Washburn escaped, but he and his companions had to run clad only in their night clothes a distance of half a mile to the protection of the garrison. General Washburn believed that General Forrest was 200 miles away fighting Maj. Gen. A. J. Smith. Colonel White's colonel of the regiment was W. Augustus Ray, a prominent Wisconsin banker, while the lieutenant colonel was at that time a Methodist minister at Appleton, but is now an Episcopal bishop in Chicago.

After the war Colonel White took up civil engineering as his profession. He was also an expert accountant and bookkeeper and for four years was employed in the auditor's office of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company. Railway magnates recognizing in him unusual ability and trustworthiness sent him out to Kansas to build railroad lines. He went there in September, 1868, and had charge of the construction forces during the building of several railway lines, and for four years supervised the operation of 2,000 men and 500 teams. It was a profitable venture for him, and he returned to Chicago with a modest fortune of $15,000.

At Fort Scott, Kansas, Colonel White married Marian L. Knight. Her father was John Knight, a merchant of Rutland, Vermont, while her mother was a descendant of the Daniel Webster family. Mr. and Mrs. White had two children, Almond A, Jr., and Cecil E. The son Almond, Jr., died at the age of fourteen at Moorehead, Minnesota, while attending Dickey College. Miss Cecil was educated in Minnesota, spending one year in Dickey College, two years in St. Mary's Hall at Faribault, Minnesota, two years in Mrs. Sylvanius Reed's School at New York City and another two years in Mount Vernon Seminary at Washington, where she graduated with high honors. Miss Cecil has crossed the ocean sixteen times visiting European countries. In 1916 she became the wife of the Italian Consul to Spain and is now a resident of Barcelona, Spain. She has a fluent command of French, Italian, German and Spanish as well as English.

Through all these years and for half a century altogether Colonel White has been a townsite promoter. He has laid out sixty townsites in Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana, Washington and Oregon. He was the man above all others who exercised the chief influence in the development and sale of the magnificent sites around the glacier National Park, and he bought a large amount of land on Flathead Lake.

In November, 1890, he came to Montana and spent fourteen days at Demersville. He was at that time on a mission for James J. Hill, president of the Great Northern Railroad. Mr. Hill had instructed him to locate a townsite in the most eligible and scenic point of Flathead Valley. As a civil engineer he spent ten days making a thorough inspection of the country, and at the conclusion of his investigations bought 1,600 acres for Mr. Hill and including the present site of Kalispell. He then organized the Kalispell Townsite Company and served as its vice president and managing director for 24 years. About 10 years ago Colonel White also bought land in Santa Ana Valley in Lynn County, Oregon, containing valuable townsites, water power and timber.

Colonel White is a stanch republican and he and his wife are members of the Episcopal Church. He was baptized and confirmed in that church 40 years ago and has served as a vestry man more than 30 years and as a senior warden 16 years. He has never been a candidate for office, though frequently tendered county and state political honors. He is affiliated with Acker Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of St. Paul.

Colonel White is an eminently positive character, as are all men of constructive genius. He has gone ahead and done things or got things done, and has seldon concerned himself with the criticisms either favorable or the reverse. Some have said that no man between St. Paul and the Pacific Coast has ever been criticized so freely as Colonel White, but while he freely recognizes that there are sins of omission at his door, there is on the other hand a large program of real work and achievement to his credit.

John F. Young, whose farming activities are equally important with his mercantile ones, is one of the well-known men of Big Horn County. He was born in Gentry County, Missouri, August 29, 1880, but in childhood his parents moved to Dawes County, Nebraska, and there he was reared and attended the country schools. His first work was done as a cowboy with J. B. Kendricks, now United States senator from Wyoming, on his "OW" ranch. Mr. Young continued to be a range rider until 1903, and was in the service of the Hysham Cattle Company when he left that class of work. Having learned the business and saved some money Mr. Young then went into it as Stevenson and Young on the Rosebud, near Kirby, running his stock under the brand "FK," and spent four years in that locality. He then moved to Lodgegrass and at that time opened mercantile establishment, carrying on both lines of business ever since. His homestead filing has been made here and he operates it and his leased land.

Mary A. Swaney. C. W. Swaney

Mr. Young came to man's estate under the influence of republican doctrines, and cast his first presidential ballot in Montana for the republican candidate. In 1918 Mr. Young was elected a member of the board of commissioners of Big Horn County to succeed Dan Sullivan, and his present associates on the board are A. H. Bowman and D. A. Kamp. These gentlemen have had an important influence in developing this region and have given it an enviable reputation for good roads and other public improvements. The furnishing of seed grain to farmers has been another very important feature of the board's administration, for when the farmers are not able to get this seed for themselves on account of excessive droughts, it is necessary for the authorities to let them have it or the food production will fall off.

John F. Young is a son of James M. Young and his wife Sarah E. (Hawkins) Young, natives of Arkansas who moved to Missouri after their marriage, but later going to Nebraska and locating near Chadron. They were farmers and stockraisers all of their lives. They had six children of whom John F. was the fifth in order of birth. The survivors are: Mrs. Charles White of Chadron, Nebraska; and John F.

On September 14, 1903, John F. Young was married at Sheridan, Wyoming, to Miss Minnie B. McKinley, a native of Illinois. The family came to Montana in 1896, and established their home near Kirby, and there Mr. Young met his wife. Mrs. Young is the youngest of a family of three sons and five daughters, all of whom are surviving. Mr. and Mrs. Young have three children: Leonard, and Fern E. and Dorothy, who are students in the Central Institute for the Deaf at St. Louis, Missouri. Mr. Young belongs to Sheridan Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, which is his only fraternity. During the late war Mr. Young was active both personally and as a commissioner in the various drives and assisted very materially in bringing up the quota of this district.

While the material improvements and the raising of the requisite amount of money for them through bond issues, are very necessary and important, a still greater service is being rendered by the board in preservation of the history of Big Horn County, one of the most interesting sections of the state. Official action was taken in the selection of a committee to compile the data available from the few pioneers yet living, who had a part in the making of the history of the early days of this region, so that the manuscripts could form a part of the archives of the county in which so many big events of the state took place. While this step is an unusual one, its importance can hardly be overestimated, and those who led the movement for such public recognition of the worth of local history will merit the approval of generations to come.

Carl Bowman, one of the best-known names in this part of Montana is that of Bowman, and men bearing it have played a very important part in the constructive work of this section, and the representatives of the family are continuing to be numbered among the most desirable of the citizens of the Big Horn Valley. One of these men who has always retained to a notable distinction and gives promise of much greater progress in the future is Carl Bowman, postmaster of Hardin.

Carl Bowman was born at Lawrence, Nebraska, on April 15, 1886, a son of Alfred H. Bowman, one of the foremost citizens of Big Horn County, an extended sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work. Carl Bowman grew to manhood's estate at Lawrence, and there attended both the graded and high schools, and then took a course in the agricultural department of the Nebraska State University at Lincoln, Nebraska, and was graduated therefrom in 1907. In that same year he came to Montana and has been identified with the community of Hardin ever since.

Mr. Bowman began his career in and about Hardin as a homesteader north of the present site of the city. Having acquired a title to his property he was then able to improve it, and continued to live on it and engage very profitably in general farming until he received the appointment as postmaster of Hardin, and left his farm to locate permanently in Hardin. As his appointment would indicate Mr. Bowman is a democrat, as is his father before him. Mr. Bowman cast his first presidential ballot for William Jennings Bryan, for whom his father had cast his vote in 1896 at the Democratic National Convention, thus assisting in making him a national character, and has never forgotten the effect produced on him by the historic speech made by the Orator of the Platte advocating his stand on the Silver question. There were several strong candidates for the postoffice, and Mr. Bowman encountered considerable opposition, but since he has been in office his splendid conduct of the affairs and the masterly manner in which he has handled the many and increasing problems, have won for him the approval of the people of Hardin, including those who formerly opposed him.

Carl Bowman was married in Big Horn County, on May 19, 1909, to Miss Mary C. Calahan, a daughter of Albert E. Calahan, who came to Montana from St. Joseph, Missouri, proved up a homestead in Big Horn Valley, and was a contractor and builder on a number of the buildings at Hardin. He is honored as one of the original settlers of the valley, and for some years has been an esteemed resident of Hardin. His wife bore the maiden name of Kirby. Mrs. Bowman was born in Chicago, Illinois, on May 29, 1888, and is the youngest of three children, the others being: Mabel, who is the wife of A. D. Hastings of Billings, Montana; and Harry, who is a ranchman of the Big Horn Valley. Mr. and Mrs. Bowman have one son, Alfred Homer. Fraternally Mr. Bowman belongs to the Blue Lodge Masons, and he is also an Odd Fellow. Both he and Mrs. Bowman are members of the Eastern Star of Hardin. They are very popular socially, and have many warm personal friends all over Big Horn Valley.

A. W. Swaney, chairman of the county commissioners of Flathead County, is with one exception the oldest white settler of this region, and a man who has always shown commendable public spirit in all his actions. He was born in Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, in June, 1860, the eldest of seven children born to his parents, Hugh and Priscilla (Fularton) Swaney, natives of Ohio and Ireland respectively.

In his boyhood A. W. Swaney attended the schools of the second ward of his native city. When he was nineteen years old he decided to strike out for himself and came to the Territory of Montana by railroad as far as Blackfoot, Idaho, then traveling the remainder of the distance to Missoula by stage, as there were then no railroads in this region. At that time Missoula was a typical frontier town peopled by traders, miners, pioneers and Indians, and used as a distributing point for the Bitter Root, Missoula, Flathead and Kortenay valleys. For a time after reaching Montana Mr. Swaney was engaged in clerking for one of the pioneer merchants, but soon saw that he could make more money by entering the mercantile field himself, so came to Flathead County with a stock of goods he and a young man bought, freighting the stock in covered wagons. They established themselves at a place now called Ashley, the second post office in the county, which was 2½ miles southwest of the present site of Kalispell, and carried on the business for two years, hiring half-breeds to do their freighting for them and paying them $2.50 per 100. Later the business was transferred to what was known as Ashley Creek Crossing, adjoining the present City of Kalispell, where a little settlement was built up consisting of three stores, a blacksmith shop and four saloons. Prices were very high, as much as $8 being paid for a small sack of flour. Mr. Swaney did a big business with trappers, trading his merchandise for hides and furs, but sold in 1888 and until 1893 devoted his energies to farming, having bought the land surrounding his former store site.

In 1893 the County of Flathead was organized and Mr. Swaney was appointed the clerk of the district court of the new county, and he was elected to the same office in 1894, holding it until the outbreak of the Spanish-American war, when he resigned to go to the front with Company H, First Montana National Guards.

Mr. Swaney was the only public official in the State of Montana who resigned in order to go to the defense of his country. The regiment sailed from San Francisco for the Philippines, and the history of the part this regiment played in the subsequent campaign is fully covered in the adjutant-general's report on file at Helena, Montana, and in the War Department at Washington, District of Columbia. Some of the principal engagements in which Mr. Swaney's command participated were the first battle of Laloma Church, with the subsequent activities extending over four months. Every day of this period the American forces were under fire, and were in the campaign against Aguinaldo and other movements, aggregating fifteen in all. The regiment which was under the command of Colonel Kessler with others formed the Second Division of the Eighth Army Corps. As is well known the American forces were successful in putting down the insurrection, and the Montana troops were recalled to the United States on July 3, 1899. However, for some time they did provost duty at Cavite and on the Island of Luzon, just across the bay from Manila. They set sail from Manila for the United States on a transport and came to San Francisco by way of Nagasaki, Yokohama and other Japanese ports and reached San Francisco in October of that year, where they were discharged.

After their return from the Philippines the men of Company H were organized and known as H Company of the Second Montana Infantry, with A. W. Swaney as captain. Two years later Captain Swaney was promoted to the rank of major, commanding the Second Battalion, which position he held for two years, and then finding that the duties of the public office he was then holding required all of his time he resigned from the guards, but has never lost his interest in military matters, and is a strong advocate of preparedness and universal training. He believes that every school boy should be taught to be a soldier as a part of his education, not for the purpose of waging war, but to prevent unwarranted aggressive action on the part of any other country.

In 1902 Mr. Swaney was appointed registrar of the United States land office at Kalispell, and held it until May, 1913. In 1914 he was elected county commissioner and has remained on the board ever since, now being its chairman. During the early days of Kalispell he was a justice of the peace and has always been interested in maintaining law and order.

Mr. Swaney was married to Mary A. Cowan, a daughter of John M. and Alice (Jost) Foy, pioneers of Flathead County, who came here from Utah. A sketch of the Foy family is given elsewhere in this work. Mr. and Mrs. Swaney became the parents of the following children: Charles H., Mary E. and Alexander G. There are two children by Mrs. Swaney's former marriage, Leon L. and Alice B. Leon L. is a druggist and married Miss Lilly Fox, who bore him one daughter, Mary E. Alice B. married Louis Sauerbier, a clothier of Eureka, Montana, and they have two sons, Walton and Charles. Charles H. married Miss Edith Young and is now engaged in ranching nine miles northwest of White Fish, Montana, but formerly traveled extensively with musical companies, he being a drummer and his wife a vocalist. Mary E. died when nine years old. Alexander G. is now at home after a stirring military experience. He served in the great war and was in France for fourteen months as a member of Companies B and D, One Hundred and Sixty-third Infantry. The company sailed from Hoboken, New Jersey on December 15, 1917, and landed at Liverpool, England, on December 24, from whence they went to Winchester, England. On December 28 they left Winchester and landed at Havre, France, the next day, and two days later entrained for La Courtine, near the Swiss border, an old French artillery barracks. This was the period of trouble with the Russian troops, a few days prior to the shelling of them by the French troops. Owing to lack of proper transportation facilities the soldiers suffered severely for lack of heavy clothing and food. The First Battalion entrained for Langres, France, where they relieved the First Battalion of the Ninth Infantry and remained at that point until March 30, 1918, when they went to Montrichard to engage in replacement work. They embarked for home on February 3, 1919, from Brest, France, on a British steamer named Regina, and made the trip to the New York harbor in nine days, landing on Lincoln's birthday, and receiving a royal welcome in New York, from whence they were sent to Camp Merritt, New Jersey, and then to Camp Dix, New Jersey, being mustered out and discharged on February 24, after which Mr. Swaney returned to Kalispell. This command has the distinction of being the first embarked on the transport which was formerly the Vaterland, owned by the Hamberg-American Steamboat Line. Flathead County held a mass meeting immediately after the United States declared war against Germany, and as a result of it a telegram was sent to Washington approving the step, which is now a part of the Congressional Record, and it is the first county to take such action in the entire country.

In addition to the honors won by Alexander G. Swaney in the military operations abroad he has a creditable record on the Mexican border, and while there he was appointed lieutenant on June 24, 1916, on April 12, 1917, was promoted first lieutenant, and on November 5, 1918, received his commission as captain, having the distinction of being one of the youngest officers of that rank among the United States troops. Personally his duties included the training of men for the front and the taking of them to the front to replace the casualties. Flathead County is the only county in the state which sent two companies of National Guardsmen to France.

A. W. Swaney is a Mason, being a member of the three bodies of the York Rite. Broad in his political views, he prefers to cast his vote for the man he deems best fitted for the office in question, although in years past he has supported the republican and progressive tickets. Genial and sympathetic, Mr. Swaney is one who makes friends everywhere. Loyal to the core, a man who has given his country military service and aided in awakening a proper appreciation of the necessity of providing against any contingency, he is listened to when he voices his sentiments. He cheerfully sent his youngest born into the greatest war the world has known, just as did another Great American, and had he been called to make the sacrifice exacted from the latter, without doubt would have faced the world as gallantly and uncomplainingly. The years sit lightly upon the shoulders of this pioneer of Flathead, for they hold naught but pleasant memories for him. He has never been found lacking in any of the essentials of real American manhood, nor could any occasion arise when he would not be found in the front ranks of those who by precept and example foster and encourage the support of the Government and the protection of its people.

C. A. STILLINGER, was for five years a regular soldier in the United States army. It chanced that when he was mustered out he was in Montana, and he left the army to begin an uninterrupted career as a Montana business man, and has been a resident of the state for over thirty-five years.

Mr. Stillinger who is a prosperous merchant and owner of valuable mining interests at Iron Mountain and in Mineral County, was born in Boone County, Kentucky, November 3, 1859. His ancestry came originally from Holland and were Colonial settlers in Pennsylvania, the state in which his father Charles Stillinger was born in 1827. Charles Stillinger was reared and married in Pennsylvania, spent his active life as a farmer, and at an early day removed to Boone County, Kentucky. As a Kentuckian he espoused the cause of the South at the time of the Civil war and was all through that struggle on the Confederate side. When he left the farm and retired he removed to Cincinnati, where he died in 1882. His wife also died in that city. He was a democrat in politics and a member of the Lutheran Church. He and his wife had five children, the three oldest, daughters, being now deceased. Mary, who died at Cincinnati in October 1919, was the wife of John W. Weideright, a cigar manufacturer also deceased; Charlotte married Charles Kramer, a carriage trimmer, and both died at Cincinnati; Louise became the wife of W. J. McNeil, a barber, and both died in Cincinnati; the fourth in the family is C. A. Stillinger and his younger brother George is a railway superintendent at Dolton, Illinois.

C. A. Stillinger acquired his early advantages in the rural schools of Boone County, Kentucky, graduating in 1877 from the high school at Constant. After working on the home farm he became dissatisfied, ran away and enlisted in the United States army. He was in the service the regular period of five years. When he was mustered out he held the grade of first sergeant. He was mustered out in 1885 at Fort Assinniboine, Montana. Soon afterward he went to Flathead Reservation, and was one of the early residents in that valley. For a time he clerked at wages of $35 a month for Duncan MacDonald. He was with MacDonald until 1892, and then bought out the Duncan MacDonald post traders store and the Charles Allard stage line, operating between Ravalli and Kalispell. An adjunct of the stage business was a steamboat line on Flathead Lake. Mr. Stillinger has the historic distinction of having put in operation the first steamboat on that body of water.

He sold out his mercantile and transportation interests in the Flathead country in 1901, and then removed to Superior buying A. P. Johnson's merchandise business. In 1902 he moved his store to Iron Mountain and continues it as one of the leading general mercantile firms in Mineral County. The business is housed in a large store building owned by Mr. Stillinger. Its location is opposite the Northern Pacific depot. Mr. Stillinger resides in the second story of the building and he also owns other dwelling property in Iron Mountain, and a forty acre ranch at Bonner Ferry, Idaho.

Mr. Stillinger is the oldest member of the Knights of Pythias order in Montana and is a past chancellor of Laurel Lodge No. 11, at Missoula. He is also a past noble grand of Welcome Lodge No. 107, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and a member of the Encampment at Missoula. He is affiliated with Jacko Tribe Improved Order of Red Men at Superior. Mr. Stillinger at different times has been interested in mining and is president of several prosperous mining companies. In 1888 at Illia, Washington, he married Miss Lillie B. Wade, a daughter of Alonzo and Dorothy Wade, both now deceased. Her father was a pioneer rancher on the Snake River in Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Stillinger had five children: Kate, wife of A. G. Baker, a railway mail clerk living at Missoula; Beatrice, wife of Matt Quinn, a mining engineer at Salt Lake City; Charlotte, wife of Richard Rahte, a railroad agent for the Northern Pacific at Elliston, Montana; Charles B., a clerk in the forestry service at Missoula; and Alonzo, who died at the age of twelve years.

HARVEY R. SHEPHARD is one of the alert young business men of Three Forks where he is engaged in merchandising, his establishment being the leading one of its kind in Gallatin County. He was born at Howard, South Dakota, a son of E. M. Shephard. The Shephard family came originally from England and members of it were pioneers of Minnesota, where the paternal grandfather lived until his removal to Howard, South Dakota, and there his death occurred in 1895, when he was seventy-five years old. Harvey R. Shephard's maternal grandfather, Conrad Hambracht, a native of Germany where he was born in 1829, survives and makes his home at Le Roy, Minnesota, having been retired from active life for some years.

E. M. Shephard was born at Wycoff, Minnesota, in 1855, and there he was reared and educated. After his marriage he moved to Howard, South Dakota, and secured a ranch, but returned to Minnesota and lived at Le Roy until his retirement in 1915, at which time he went to Santa Anna, California, where he is now living. A republican, he was elected on his party ticket to the office of county commissioner while living at Minnesota. E. M. Shephard was married at Le Roy, Minnesota, to Julia Hembrecht, born in Germany in 1856, and they became the parents of the following children: Minnie, who married Carl B. Hall, a ranchman of Le Roy, Minnesota; Elroy Edgar who is cashier of the First State Bank of Spring Valley, Minnesota; Harvey R., whose name heads this review; Howard Jess, who is brakeman for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, lives at Three Forks; and Elizabeth, who lives with her parents.

Harvey R. Shephard attended the public schools of Le Roy, Minnesota, and was graduated from the high school in 1905, following which he was a student for two years at the Canfield Business College at Owatonna, Minnesota. In order to gain a practical knowledge of the mercantile business, Mr. Shephard worked in a department store at Spring Valley, Minnesota, for two years, and for the subsequent nine months he was with a similar establishment at Milford, Iowa. On March 8, 1911, Mr. Shephard came to Three Forks and formed a partnership with Frank Keller in a general merchandising business, which association was maintained until 1914, when Mr. Shepherd bought Mr. Keller's interest, and since then has been the proprietor of the establishment. At the time of the change in ownership Mr. Shephard moved in to his new and larger store located at No. 103 Main Street, where he has since remained. He has built up a very desirable connection and carries a large and varied stock which he offers at prices as low as is consistent with the quality of the goods and the service rendered. In addition to his business, Mr. Shephard owns a modern residence at No. 110 Second Avenue, East. He is a republican, but has not come before the public for office. The Methodist Episcopal Church holds his membership and benefits from his generous contributions. Fraternally he belongs to Three Forks Lodge No. 88, Independent Order Odd Fellows, of which he is past grand. An enterprising business man and interested in the progress of Three Forks, he has naturally been active in the Chamber of Commerce.

In 1913, Mr. Shephard was married at Spring Valley to Miss Geneva Jorris, a daughter of P. R. and Delia Jorris. Mr. Jorris is a furniture merchant and he and Mrs. Jorris reside at Spring Valley. Mrs. Shephard was engaged in teaching school at Canton, Minnesota, prior to her marriage, and is a lady of more than ordinary intellectual development. Mr. and Mrs. Shephard have two children, namely: Jorris, who was born in 1915; and Della, who was born in 1918. It is such men as Mr. Shephard who develop a community. Having decided upon a location they are not afraid to invest their money and time in its business enterprises and realty, and having cast their lot with its fortunes, bend every energy to improve it in every way.

Martin Martin, head of the Employment Department of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, is a man whose knowledge of human nature and business problems fit him to administer fairly and wisely the affairs of the department placed in his charge. He possesses those qualities which produce admirable and effective organization, and not being easily deceived in men or their motives, discharges his responsibilities in a manner which meets with the approval of his superiors, and wins the confidence of his men. Mr. Martin was born on Prince Edward Island, Canada, August 20, 1863, a son of Martin Martin, who was born on the Isle of Lewis, Scotland, in 1802, and died on his old homestead on Prince Edward Island in 1896, having established himself there in 1829. By trade he was a cabinet maker, but he was also a farmer. In politics he was a liberal. Reared in the faith of the Presbyterian Church, he early became a member of it, and always contributed very generously toward its support. He married Alexina McLeod, born on the Isle of Lewis, Scotland, who died on Prince Edward Island, in 1908. Their children were as follows: Malcolm, who is a farmer residing at Anaconda; John, who was a physician and surgeon, died at Boston, Massachusetts, in 1917; Charles, who died on the old homestead on Prince Edward Island in 1879; Samuel, who is operating this old homestead; Miles, twin brother of Samuel, who is a physician and surgeon, practiced until recently at Boston, Massachusetts, but is now at Honolulu; Martin, whose name heads this review; Joseph, who is chief of the fire department in a town in British Columbia, Canada; Mary, who is unmarried, lives on the homestead on Prince Edward Island; and Margaret, who married Murdock McEachern, a farmer, operating near Calgary, Canada.

Martin Martin attended the schools of Prince Edward Island, and was graduated from the normal school there in 1878, following which he taught school on the island for two and one-half years. He then came to the United States, spending two years in North Dakota, where he cut cordwood, worked in brick yards, and did whatever came to his hand. In 1884 he became one of the pioneers of Anaconda, working at building the flumes and contracting for the Anaconda Copper Mining Company for a year, and then for two years was in the smelters. For the subsequent eight years he conducted a cigar store, and from 1891 to 1894, inclusive, he was deputy sheriff, and then for four years served as county clerk and recorder of Deer Lodge, following which he was elected county commissioner and served for seven years. In 1905 Mr. Martin returned to the Anaconda Copper Mining Company as clerk in the general offices in connection with the employment department, and has been promoted through various stages to his present position. His various experiences and occupancy of offices which brought him into contact with men, have given him a balance of judgment, and enable him to judge as to the fitness of the man for the job and the job for the man. His offices are in the general office building at the Washoe Reduction Works, two miles east of Anaconda. Mr. Martin is a democrat and active in his party. Like his father, he is a member of the Presbyterian Church. In 1918 Mr. Martin sold his residence, and now resides at 505 Hickory Street.

In 1887 Mr. Martin was married to Miss Mary Cooper at Corvallis, Montana. She is a daughter of Mrs. Isis Cooper of Corvallis. Mr. and Mrs. Martin became the parents of the following children: Gladys, who married Frank Tucker of Tucker Bros., clothiers of Anaconda; Orville, who died at the age of sixteen years; Blythe, who married Dr. W. H. Stephan, a physician and surgeon of Dillon, Montana, a biography of whom appears elsewhere in this work; Walden, who operates an acetylin gas shop at Butte, Montana; and Casel and Saxon, both of whom are at home.

Carl August Linn, a resident of Montana for the past ten years, has achieved a distinctive place among the lawyers of the state, and for eight years has been engaged in a busy private and public practice at White Sulphur Springs.

Mr. Linn was born on a farm in Ottertail County, Minnesota October 1, 1884. His parents, Simon A. and Amelia (Anderson) Linn were married in Norway, his father having been born in Sweden in 1841 and his mother in Norway in 1849. In 1870 they came to this country, first locating in Goodhue County, Minnesota, where the father farmed for about two years. He then drove an ox team to Ottertail County, homesteaded, and made a farm from the grass roots. He lived on his farm until 1898, and then located in Fergus Falls, Minnesota, and from there in 1907 moved to McLean County, North Dakota, where he spent his last days and died in 1908. His wife died in 1903. Simon Linn was a republican, with independent proclivities. He was buried at Fergus Falls, Minnesota. The eight children of the parents, all born in Minnesota, are as follows: Albert, who married Maud Wood and lives at Bixby, North Dakota; Anna, wife of R. E. James of Rochester, Washington; Lena, wife of John R. Johnson; Elise; Inge Louise, who died at the age of twenty-one; Emelia; Carl A.; and Thorfin L.

Carl August Linn was educated in the public schools of Minnesota, attending high school at Fergus Falls, where he graduated in 1904, and took his literary and law course at the University of Minnesota. He was graduated in 1909 and admitted to the Minnesota bar June 11, 1909. He soon afterward came to Lewistown, Montana, was admitted to the state bar on December 6, 1910, and did his early work in his profession at Lewistown until March, 1912, when he removed to White Sulphur Springs. Here he became associated with William L. Ford, under the name Ford & Linn, and this firm handled a large share of the general practice in the courts of Meagher County. Mr. Linn was appointed deputy county attorney of Meagher County in March, 1912, and was elected chief of that office in November of the same year, and re-elected in November, 1914. He made a splendid record of efficiency and vigorous handling of all cases brought by the state during his two terms. Mr. Linn also served as special prosecutor for Meagher County in some conspicuous murder trials which resulted in the hanging of three men, sentence of life imprisonment for two others, while two others were sent to prison for terms ranging from two to twenty years.

Mr. Linn is affiliated with Diamond City Lodge No. 7, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which he is Past Master, with Harlowton Chapter No. 22, Royal Arch Masons, Helena Commandery No. 2 of the Knights Templar, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He affiliates with the republican party.

BERT RAREY. One of the enterprising and alert young business men of Hardin who is devoting his abilities to the expansion of the financial control of the Big Horn Valley, is Bert Rarey, cashier of the Stockman's National Bank of this city. Mr. Rarey has been a resident of Hardin since 1919, and he came here from Eastern Montana, the City of Baker having been his former home for six years.

Mr. Rarey was born in the suburbs of Columbus, Ohio, on September 3, 1888. There his childhood and youth were spent and he acquired his educational training in the public schools of the capital city. Leaving high school when he was sixteen years old, Mr. Rarey began working for the Capital City Bank of Columbus, Ohio, and after seven years with that institution, he went to Minneapolis as chief clerk and auditor of the Metropolitan National Bank of that city, and remained there for two years. He was then offered and accepted the position of assistant cashier of the Baker State Bank and held that responsible position until he came to Hardin. From the above it will be seen that Mr. Rarey has had a long and varied experience and that he has concentrated upon one line of work, all of his efforts having been directed toward perfecting himself in it, with the result that he is admittedly one of the ablest financiers in this part of the state. While at Baker, Mr. Rarey took a very prominent part in republican politics and was a member of the central committee of his party of Fallon County.

Mr. Rarey comes of an old American family, founded in Pennsylvania, representatives of which became very early settlers of Ohio. His father, James K. Rarey, was a native of Franklin County, Ohio, and spent his life there, with the exception of the last five years he was on earth, that period being passed with his son at Baker, Montana, and Hardin, Montana, he dying in the latter city in 1919, when he was sixty years old. He was a son of Frederick Rarey, a brother of the celebrated horse-tamer, John S. Rarey, and was associated with the latter in the horse business, as well as being engaged in farming. Frederick Rarey is buried at old Rareysport, now Grosport, Ohio, the land on the old Ohio Canal.

James K. Rarey was married to Carrie Brown, a daughter of Charles Brown, who survives her husband, and lives at Columbus, Ohio. They had the following children: James C., who is a resident of Indianapolis, Indiana; Charles Frederick, who lives in California; and Bert, whose name heads this review.

On January 10, 1917, Bert Rarey was united in marriage at Terry, Montana, to Miss Mabel Sult, a native of Iowa, who was reared in North Dakota. She completed her educational training at Cornell College in Iowa. She is a daughter of George H. Sult, a retired merchant now living at Denver, Colorado, and is the eldest of three sons and four daughters, three of whom are residents of Montana. Mr. Rarey is an Elk. He cast his first presidential vote for William Howard Taft, and has not failed to vote at each succeeding national election and for his party's candidate. He was a selective service man and was classed in Number 3, and had his class been called, his name would have been the first. Although but a recent addition to Hardin, Mr. Rarey has already proven his worth, and is justly numbered among the important men of his community, and one from whom his fellow citizens are expecting great things both with reference to business and public service.

JOHN W. CORNWELL. A native of Montana and member of one of its old families, John W. Cornwell has spent the greater part of his life among the Crow Indians on the Reservation and is cashier of the First National Bank of Lodgegrass.

He was born at Livingston, Park County, Montana, March 15, 1885. His father, John H. Cornwell, Sr., was a regular soldier in the United States army, and his army service brought him to Montana. A native of New York State and of English and Holland stock, he grew up in a rural community, acquired an ordinary education, and joined the army at Brooklyn, New York, soon after the close of the Civil war. His first service was on the Texas frontier, protecting the telegraph lines from Indian depredation. He was with the troops sent to Fort Custer, Montana, at the time of its founding and when he finished his service there he located in that region. He was proprietor of a hotel at the old Fort but left there before the post was abandoned and lived for a time at Livingston, and later removed to Washington and became a fruit farmer at North Yakima. He died at North Yakima in 1908 at the age of sixty-one.

At Fort Custer John W. Cornwell, Sr., married Miss Annie Shoeberg. She was born in Sweden and came to this country when a young girl and was reared on her father's farm in Minnesota. She came to Montana with the old Fort Custer post trader Borup from St. Paul, and thus met her husband.

John W. Cornwell, Sr., and wife had the following children: Edward A., vice president of the Bank of Commerce of Forsyth, Montana; Nellie, wife of J. J. Wimer of Yakima, Washington; Anna, who lives in the old home at Yakima; John W.; Harry, connected with the Cornwall Hardware Company of Forsyth; Emma, wife of Oscar L. Boos, a lawyer at Sunnyside, Washington; Mary, whose husband, Sidney J. Shick, is chief clerk of the Indian Service at the Crow Agency; and Helen, wife of Norman Mead of Yakima, Washington.

John W. Cornwell, Jr., attended the common schools of Livingston, took a high school course at Yakima, Washington, and in 1903, at the age of eighteen, became a clerk at the Crow Agency with E. A. Richardson & Company. He remained in the service of this mercantile organization until he was elected cashier of the First National Bank of Lodge Grass. This bank, which opened for business March 25, 1918, has a capital of $25,000 and has earned surplus of $2,500. A. H. Bowman is president of the bank, W. N. Spear vice president, and Mr. Cornwell cashier.

Mr. Cornwell as a youth acquired a fluent knowledge of the Crow language and he transacts business equally well in his own or the Crow tongue. He knows the Indian character thoroughly, both its strong and its weak points.

March 12, 1913, he married Miss Frances M. Rinehart, who was born in Seattle, Washington, March 27, 1894. Her father, Dr. Joseph H. Rinehart, came west from Springfield, Ohio. His wife was a native of Canada. From Seattle Doctor Rinehart removed to Billings, Montana, where he practiced his profession until his death. Mrs. Cornwell grew up at Billings, and is the second of five children, the others being: Joseph H., Jr., a practicing physician at Springfield, Ohio; Alma M., a professional nurse at Billings; Lewis, of Denver, Colorado; and Elwell O., who is a pharmacist's mate, first class, in the United States navy, and for a time was stationed at Vladivostock, Siberia. Mrs. Cornwell was liberally educated and was a student of the harp at Berlin, Germany, under Professor Posse. Prior to her marriage, she toured the country in concert work, and is also a talented pianist, and is the source of most of the musical inspiration of her home community. Mr. and Mrs. Cornwell have two children, Ervin R. and Mary E.

Mr. Cornwell cast his first presidential vote at Crow Agency for Mr. Taft and has been a regular republican. He is affiliated with Billings Lodge No. 394 of the Elks. He was a leader in all but the first of the Liberty Loan drives at Lodgegrass, and he and Mrs. Cornwell were members of the Red Cross committees.

David Alfred Baker, M. D. In the present century of expanding horizons in medical science, of marvelous discoveries and undreamed of surgical skill, the profession seems to have almost reached a time when its accomplishments are no less than miracles. The modern physician and surgeon, taking advantage of every opportunity for knowledge, must often realize with professional elation, his great power over disease and disability and be encouraged in his struggle to conquer the strongholds not yet overcome. Possessing the steady nerve, the patience that never tires, the trained understanding gained through his long period of special study, he must yet possess, in order to be a successful surgeon, a courage that never quails, together with a superb technical manual skill, for in every physician's life must come emergencies which make just such demands upon him. One of the men who measures up to the exacting standards above mentioned is Dr. David Alfred Baker, who practiced at Jordan since 1910. He is now settled at Hardin, having become associated with his brother, Dr. G. A. Baker in December, 1920.

Dr. David A. Baker was born at Bowen, Illinois, November 11, 1881, a son of George D. Baker, a native of Worcester County, Ohio. By trade a tailor, George D. Baker worked at his calling in his native county and at Bowen, Illinois, where he died in 1883. During the war between the states, he enlisted in the Nineteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry and served as a private until the close of the conflict. He married Susan Clifton, who survives him and makes her home at Bowen. Their children were as follows: Alice, who married William Veach of Bowen, Illinois; Dr. George, who served in the Thirtieth Railway Engineers in France, who were detailed to operate a standard gauge railroad behind the allied lines, has returned to this country and is now at Hardin, Montana; Dr. David A., whose name heads this review; and Miss Mary, who lives at Ekalaka, Montana.

After completing his high school course at Bowen, Illinois, Doctor Baker in 1903 entered a medical college at Keokuk, Iowa, from which he was graduated in May, 1907, and for the subsequent three years he was in a general practice at Bowman, North Dakota, leaving it in 1910 to come to Jordan. Here he was engaged in a general practice until the United States entered the World war, and he volunteered his services on June 22, 1917, receiving his commission on July 5, as first lieutenant. For three months he was stationed at Fort Riley, Kansas, and was then ordered to Camp Travis, Texas, with the Ninetieth Division, Field Hospital section, and remained there until June 12, 1918, at which time he went with his division to Camp Mills, New Jersey, and sailed on June 28 for Europe on the Canadian Pacific liner Melita and landed at Liverpool on July 10, the steamer having encountered and destroyed some floating mines en route, which had escaped anchor from the Irish coast. After two days spent at Camp Winneldown, where the late Lord Kitchener "trained his mob," Doctor Baker, was sent with his detachment through Southampton and across the English Channel to Havre, France, reaching there on July 13. On his way to the medical training camp, Doctor Baker passed through Dijion, Is-sur-til to Recey-Sur-Qurce, where he was in training until August 20. He was then ordered to the Toul sector and took up his position on August 22. During the St. Mihiel drive of September 12-16, his hospital cared for the first American boys of Texas and Oklahoma who had suffered from their first touch with the German gas, but on October 8th the field hospital was moved to the Meuse-Argonne offensive, taking position October 20 at Deadman's Hill and 304. Moving up toward the front they were stationed consecutively at Septsargus, Natillios, Cunel, Romange, Bantheville, being at the last named place when the Armistice was signed on November 11, 1918, which was the doctor's birthday. On that day the hospital moved up to Stenay and there operated as a "sick hospital" until November 20, when it changed its location to Ire-le-sec and stayed for two weeks.

This unit now became a part of the Army of Occupation and went to Luxemburg city, from whence they entered Germany and were at Trier, Hetzerath, Ernst, Manderscheid, and on December 27, left for Cues, Germany, where they were stationed in the Drei Koenigen—three kings—with a camp hospital and took care of the sick and injured. They evacuated to Trier to the Evacuation Hospitals 14 and 7. They remained there until May 20, 1919, when they were relieved from duty and entrained from Gerolstein, Germany, for America, sailing from St. Nazare, France, on the United States transport Buford May 20, 1919, and landing at Newport News, Virginia, June 14. This ship was afterwards used to take Alexander Berkman and Emma Goldman back to Russia. The Ninetieth Division was broken up at St. Nazare and the surplus doctors were sent home to be discharged at Camp Dix, New Jersey, where Doctor Baker took leave of the army. His discharge covers this in substance: "Army of Occupation November 11, 1918, to May 20, 1919" and gives a resume of what is mentioned above. It gives Doctor Baker credit for being in the battle of St. Mihiel and the Meuse-Argonne campaign and service in the Army of Occupation, and two service chevrons.

On his return trip he visited his mother. On February 3, 1921, Doctor Baker's mother died. The doctor returned to Montana, reaching Jordan July 3, 1919, without having been disabled. His collection of German souvenirs is perhaps as complete as any brought over, numbering as it does, 500 articles, which range from a one-pound shell to a French seventy-five shell, and include all the different equipment of the German soldier, the helmet, armor plate or chest protector for the sharpshooter, rifle, flag and iron crosses both first and second class.

Doctor Baker maintains his residence at his ranch on the Big Dry at the bridge crossing at Jordan, which is the homestead he entered and proved up. He is unmarried. When he became a resident of Jordan, Doctor Baker entered actively into its public life and served on the school board for four years, becoming its chairman. He is a member of the Community Presbyterian Church and is one of its trustees. Like the majority of his profession, Doctor Baker has returned home enthused by his service, and anxious to put into active use what he learned by contact with the master minds of his calling.

HADEN HARMON BRIGHT was the organizer and is vice president of the Mildred State Bank at Mildred, and assistant cashier of First National Bank, Miles City, Montana, and is one of the young and prominent bankers in the eastern part of the state.

Mr. Bright came to Montana from Columbia, Missouri, where he was born November 7, 1884. His father, William A. Bright, a prominent Missouri banker, was born in Boone County, that state, September 8, 1850, and is still an extensive land owner in Boone County. In September, 1902, he founded the Boone County Trust Company, and is still actively identified with it as president.

Haden H. Bright is a graduate of the Missouri State University at Columbia, completing the academic course at the age of twenty-one. In the meantime he had worked for several vacations in the Boone County Trust Company, and remained with that institution after graduating for five years, being promoted to the office of treasurer. For two years Mr. Bright was one of the firm Bright & Bright, engaged in the stock business in Finney County, Kansas.

Mr. Bright came to Montana to engage in the banking business, arriving here in January, 1916, and organized the Mildred State Bank, which was opened with a capital of $20,000 in May, 1916. F. P. Older of Mildred has been the president from the beginning, C. F. Smith was the first vice president, an office now held by Mr. Bright. J. L. Murphey is cashier. The strenuous times through which the bank has passed through its brief career has told somewhat on its success, but notwithstanding adverse conditions the capital and surplus are $24,500 and deposits $80,000. The Mildred State Bank Building was erected through the influence of Mr. Bright and his own home contributes another item to the improvement of the village. Mr. Bright is affiliated with the Masonic order and is a member of the Elks Lodge at Columbia, Missouri.

At Garden City, Kansas, he married Miss Mary Eaman. Her father, Charles B. Eaman, was for many years a resident of Detroit, Michigan. Mrs. Bright was born in Arizona on her father's ranch, November 4, 1888. She has two brothers, Thomas and Walter Eaman. Mr. and Mrs. Bright have one daughter, Mary Elizabeth, born January 3, 1918.

IRENE DESY for over thirty years has been identified with the interests of Fergus County in and around Lewistown. He has been a business man of the city and also an extensive stock rancher, and by marriage he is a member of one of the very first families of the city, having allied himself with a daughter of the French Canadian pioneer Janeaux.

Mr. Desy was born at Three Rivers, Quebec, Canada, December 25, 1866, a son of Marcelin and Delise (Lafentan) Desy. His parents spent all their lives in Canada. Irene was the youngest of fourteen children, five of whom are still living. His parents were people of great vigor and vitality, his father living to the age of eighty-five and his mother to ninety. Marcelin Desy, for many years, was regarded as one of the leading contractors in the Dominion of Canada. He was a contractor for the building of roads and dams, much of which work he did for the Canadian Government. He also owned a large farm.

Irene Desy received his early education at Montreal and as a young man had much experience with his father in the contracting business. At the age of eighteen he came to Montana, arriving at Helena on April 28, 1884. The first year he worked in a saw mill, then became superintendent of a ranch, and in 1887 arrived at Lewistown. He spent one year in mining at Maiden, then went to work for Dan Crowley breaking horses and farming. After two years he entered the ice business, and for a time was agent for the Montana Brewing Company at Great Falls. Since the spring of 1903, Mr. Desy has been engaged in ranching for himself, beginning with 160 acres of land and now owning an extensive farm and ranch of 580 acres. This place, a model of its kind, is located four miles east of Lewistown. Mr. Desy is independent in politics.

April 28, 1894, he married for his first wife, Puar Morris. The only daughter of this marriage is Gertrude. On November 26, 1901, he married Evilan Janeaux, who was born at Montreal, a daughter of Francis E. Janeaux. Francis Janeaux was one of the first Indian traders of Montana, his trading post being at Reed's Fort, the original site of the city of Lewistown. He built one of the first buildings in the locality and was an extensive owner of property and a man of philanthropic impulse and of great generosity. His name is permanently associated with the history of Lewistown and one of the first subdivisions is known as the Janeaux Subdivision. Mr. and Mrs. Desy have four children: Francis, Archie, Alser and Mary.

JAMES W. CRAIG, M. D. Seven years have passed since Dr. James W. Craig came to make Montana his future home, and in those years he has made his presence felt in many avenues of the commonwealth's activities, as a physician, as a farmer and as a state senator.

Doctor Craig was born in London, Canada, July 15,

1877, and his boyhood days were spent on a farm in that vicinity. The Craig family was founded in this country by the grandfather of the Doctor, James Craig, who came from the lowlands of Scotland, Roxburyshire, became a Canadian farmer, and spent the remaining years of his life near London. He married Miss Jeanette Carr, and they became the parents of two sons and five daughters.

Robert Craig, one of the two sons and the father of the Doctor, was born near London, Canada, and died on his farm there when fifty-eight years of age, but he is still survived by his widow. She was in her maidenhood Rachel Carrothers, a daughter of Mark Carrothers, a member of an Irish family who settled in the region of London, Canada, in an early day. The following children were born to Robert and Rachel Craig: James W., the well known physician of Piniele in Carter County, Montana; Lewis, who is engaged in farming near London, Canada; and Wilfred, who is with the Northwest Mounted Police at Saskatchewan.

During his early life Doctor Craig received excellent educational advantages, having done collegiate work equivalent to two years of university training, and on leaving college he entered upon the study of medicine at Western University, London, Canada, where he was graduated in April, 1901. But prior to the completion of his medical course he had had three years of experience in a drug store in London. He came at once to the United States after leaving Western University, and for the following twelve years followed the practice of his profession at Minden in Kearny County, Nebraska. During five years of that period he served as health officer of the county. From Nebraska Doctor Craig came into Montana in October, 1913, and established his home and practice in the locality in which he has since lived. This community was then in Custer County, subsequently was in Fallon County and is now in Carter County, Doctor Craig having thus resided in three counties during the years of his residence in Montana without changing his dwelling place. He entered a claim, the farm on which he resides near Piniele, and this he has been improving and developing along with his work as a medical practitioner. For a time he was also the Piniele druggist and the owner and editor of the Piniele Leader, a weekly publication supporting republican principles.

In the spring of 1918 Doctor Craig was made a candidate for state senator, won the nomination and was elected to the office in the following November. He made the race against two independent candidates and one democrat, and as a republican was chosen by a plurality of twenty-two votes. He took his seat in the Sixteenth Legislature, a republican body, and was assigned to membership on the committees of water rights and irrigation, banks and banking and federal relations, and in the special session of 1910 was placed on the judiciary committee. During his congressional career he introduced a resolution memorializing Congress to build a railroad through the Carter County region, and the bill passed both Houses. Doctor Craig was made a member of the joint committee of the House and Senate to locate sites for additional normal schools.

In London, Canada, in August, 1903, the Doctor was married to Nellie E. McGuinn, who was a trained nurse before her marriage. She received her professional training at the Victoria Hospital, London, Canada. Doctor Craig was one of the founders of the Piniele State Bank, and has served the institution as a member of its directorate.

WINTHROP RAYMOND, who died suddenly at his home at Sheridan September 3, 1912, was one of the most widely known pioneers of Montana, and was the founder of the town of Sheridan.

He was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, October 22, 1847. His father, Daniel F. Raymond, was born in Connecticut in 1786, was a brilliant lawyer, moved in circles of prominence and culture, was well known for his literary ability, and is credited with writing the first book on political economy published in America. He is also credited with originating the idea of a national banking currency. Most of his active life was spent in Maryland, and he lived in Ohio only a few years. He died in 1849. His wife was Delilah Matlick, of an old Virginia family. She died in Montana in 1896, at the age of eighty-three.

Winthrop Raymond was the youngest of six children and was about two years old when his father died. He grew up in Missouri, acquired a common school education, and at the age of eighteen, with his mother and brother and sister, started for the West. He arrived in Virginia City September 7, 1865. For nearly half a century his home was in Madison County. As a boy he was employed around Virginia City. He helped to build the quartz mill at Summit in Alder Gulch. For several years he and his brother did an extensive trading business between Summit, Montana, and Corinne, Utah. He became a wholesale merchant at Virginia City in 1870, and entered that business on a scale never before attempted in this section of the Northwest. For many years he and his brother conducted a wholesale grocery house which supplied practically the entire territory and much of the Northwestern country. After 1880 he was engaged in ranching and stock raising. His brother as early as 1876 had introduced into Montana 100 head of the finest bred horses to be found in Kentucky. These horses were the foundation of the famous Belmont Park ranch stock. That ranch at one time comprised nearly 6,000 acres, all under fence. Many famous horses were shipped to that ranch, including Belmont and Tempest. In 1889 Winthrop Raymond engaged in banking at Virginia City as a member of the firm Raymond, Harrington & Company. In 1890 he started the townsite of Sheridan, and his name will always be associated with the early history of that now thriving city.

Of the many tributes paid him at the time of his death perhaps the most discriminating and just is the following taken from a memorial prepared by the Society of the Pioneers of Montana. "Mr. Raymond came to Montana as a boy; young he was as the country itself, and he grew to manhood's estate and increased in civic strength and righteousness, just as the young state grew in those things which have made Montana the proud commonwealth of today. Public spirited, loyal and generous, his pride in his town, in his country and his state, was only exceeded by his tender love and devotion to his friends and family. Respected and trusted by all, loved by those who knew him best, his is a heritage rare and precious beyond price. Winthrop Raymond never dissembled; he was for or against; you could always find him on one side or the other, fighting for his convictions; policy was not his course; brusque, plain spoken, honest and frank; yet, with all, considering other men's feelings and belief, he went his way and lived his life satisfied to do justice to all mankind, and enjoying the good will of his fellow men. His name will long be associated with the early history of this section, his memory will linger in the minds of all."

At Omaha, Nebraska, February 28, 1876, Winthrop Raymond married Hanna E. Bateman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Bateman, of Montana. Four children were born to their marriage: Carrie B.; Daniel

W., former secretary of the State Board of Livestock Commissioners and now associated with Senator Junod in the real estate business at Sheridan; Delilah E. and Mary E. The oldest daughter, Carrie, is the wife of Senator O. H. Junod.

ORLA HUGH JUNOD came to Montana as a teacher, but in a few years left his work in the schoolroom to engage in mining, livestock raising and ranching, and has recently given his principal time and energies to the real estate business at Sheridan, where he is associated as a partner with D. W. Raymond. He is also the present state senator from his district.

Mr. Junod was born at White Pigeon, Michigan, September 24, 1875. His grandfather, Charles L. Junod, was a native of Alsace-Lorraine, as a young man served in the French army, and after his marriage moved to Canton Berne, Switzerland, where he was a farmer and vineyardist. He was born in 1811 and in 1856 brought his family to the United States, spending one year at Erie, Pennsylvania, and in 1857 settling in LaGrange County, Indiana, where he acquired a farm and where he lived until his death in 1888. His wife was Elezabeth Kiefer.

Charles A. Junod, father of Senator Junod, was born in Canton Berne, Switzerland, in 1843, and was thirteen years of age when brought to the United States. He was reared to manhood and married in LaGrange County, Indiana, and for over forty years has lived on the land which his father bought in LaGrange County and is one of the prosperous and well-to-do farmers of that locality. He is a republican and served eight years as a member of the county council. In 1874 he married Evaline E. Steininger, who was born in Schuylkill County, Pennsylvania, in 1845, and died at Howe, Indiana, in 1891. They had four children: Orla Hugh; Charles F., who has achieved distinction in financial circles and is vice president of the Atlantic National Bank of New York City; Joseph S., who is a farmer on the home place in LaGrange County; and Ray L., who is in the bond department of the Illinois Trust Company at Chicago.

Orla Hugh Junod grew up on the home farm in LaGrange County, Indiana, and graduated from the Howe Academy in 1897. With the exception of pedagogy he completed all the required subjects in the State Normal School at Terre Haute, Indiana. In 1899 he came to Montana, and for three years was superintendent of schools at Marysville. In 1902 he went to work for the Penobscot Mining Company, remaining two years with that organization, and after that was in the live stock business forty miles from Helena at Wolf Creek until 1910. He then engaged in ranching, raising cattle and hogs in Madison County, but on June 1, 1919, disposed of his ranch holdings. He has been a resident of Sheridan since 1916, and has given increasing time and attention to his growing business in real estate.

Mr. Junod was elected as a republican to the State Senate in 1914, and in 1918 was re-elected for a second four years term. He is chairman of the roads and highways committee, one of the most important Senate committees, and is a member of the stock-growing and grazing, towns and counties, insurance, and education committees. Senator Junod is a prominent Mason, being affiliated with Sheridan Lodge No. 20, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Virginia City Chapter No. 1, Royal Arch Masons, Helena Consistory No. 3 of the Scottish Rite, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He is also a member of Ruby Valley Aerie No. 1780, Fraternal Order of Eagles, at Sheridan.

In 1910 Senator Junod completed a modern home at the corner of Poppleton and Main streets. He married in 1901, at Marysville, Montana, Miss Mabel E. Matthews, a daughter of Thomas J. and Emily Matthews, the latter a resident of Helena and the former, who was a miner, deceased. Mrs. Junod died in April, 1915 at Helena. She was the mother of three children: Evaline E., born March 3, 1903, and died October 13, 1910; Mabel, born December 30, 1906; and Amoretta, born November 15, 1914.

On May 14, 1919, at Sheridan, Senator Junod married Miss Carrie B. Raymond, daughter of Winthrop Raymond.

STANLEY E. FELT is one of the judges of the Sixteenth Judicial District of Montana. As a member of the Montana bar since 1910, he has had unusual experiences and responsibilities. He is a former county attorney of old Dawson County, and since 1919 has been a resident of Terry in Prairie County.

Mr. Felt was born near Wiota, Cass County, Iowa, June 26, 1881. He represents a family that has been in America for nearly three centuries, and his patriotic record is something for all to be proud of. Stanley Felt and two of his brothers were commissioned officers in the World war, and the fighting record goes back to early colonial days.

The American branch of the family was founded at Charlestown, Massachusetts, in 1628, by George Felt, who probably came from Wales. George Felt subsequently moved to Casco Bay, Maine, where he died. Two generations of his descendants lived in Maine before some of them returned to Massachusetts. Several of the generations in later colonial and the early federal period lived in New Hampshire, where for the most part they were of the agricultural class.

The grandfather of the Montana lawyer was Jeremiah A. Felt, who was born in New Hampshire and was a youth when his father moved West to Adams County, Illinois, and settled at Quincy, where he helped build one of the first frame houses in the city. The two grandfathers of Jeremiah A. Felt were with New Hampshire companies in the War of the American Revolution. Jeremiah Felt grew up in the vicinity of Quincy, became a farmer, and married Anna Leech. Of the ten children one son was killed in the Battle of Chickamauga. George W. Felt, father of Stanley E., was born in Adams County, Illinois, and was only a boy when the Civil war was being fought. He acquired his education in the country and became noted as a champion speller, winning honors in many contests of that nature. From Illinois he moved to Cass County, Iowa, and is now living at Scottsville, Michigan. In Iowa he married Clara Smith, whose father, Joshua L. Smith, represented a Kentucky family and spent his life as a farmer. The Smiths were strong Union people in Kentucky when the state was torn over the secession movement. Mrs. George Felt's grandfather Reynolds was the only man in Barren County, Kentucky, to cast a ballot for Abraham Lincoln in 1864. The children of George W. Felt and wife are: Dr. Garnett Felt, of New Providence, Iowa; Stanley E., George V., of McCone County, Montana; Mrs. Anna Carter and Mrs. Pauline Clampitt, of New Providence. As noted above, all three sons were commissioned officers in the World war. Doctor Garnett was with the Ninety-first Division in its last drive against the Germans in Belgium.

Stanley E. Felt lived on an Iowa farm until he was eleven years of age, when his parents moved to Des Moines, where he grew up. He graduated from a suburban high school of Des Moines, and then entered the University of Iowa, taking both the liberal arts and law courses at the same time.

He graduated in 1908 with the degrees A. B. and LL. B. While he was well educated for the law Mr. Felt the first two years after leaving university engaged in educational work. For one year he was principal of the schools at Doon in Northwestern Iowa, and another year was principal of the Sutherland schools. On leaving Iowa he came to Glendive, Montana, in 1910, and tried his first lawsuit there. In 1914 he was elected on the republican ticket as county attorney of Dawson County, serving one term. As prosecutor he handled the celebrated case against James Harry, Lester Black and Lillian Stollard for the murder of Frank Garinger on Woody Creek. This crime in some respects has surpassed anything in Montana criminal annals, since the murderers buried their victim and forged a bill of sale to the dead man's property, presenting it as proof of their ownership. The principal guilt was fixed upon James Harry, who was given a life sentence, while Lester was sentenced to twenty years, and Lillian Stollard, their accomplice, was given a five year term, though the sentence was suspended.

As county attorney Mr. Felt was also adviser to the Board of County Commissioners. He was in the office when general charges of malfeasance was made against some of the board, and also when the board ordered the prosecution of the clerk and recorder for collecting moneys not properly accounted for. This case was still pending when Mr. Felt retired from office.

Early in 1917 Mr. Felt entered the First Officers Training Camp at The Presidio in San Francisco, and after three months was commissioned a captain of infantry. He was assigned to duty at Camp Lewis, Washington, and remained there all the time he was in the army, receiving his honorable discharge February 21, 1919. Captain Felt took an active part in the organization of the Prairie Post of the American Legion at Terry, and was the Post's delegate to the state meeting of the Legion at Malta June 30 and July 1 of 1919.

Mr. Felt is an active republican, having cast his first presidential vote for Mr. Taft in 1908. He was a delegate to the Montana State Convention at Great Falls in 1912. On November 2, 1920, he was elected as one of the judges of the Sixteenth Judicial District of Montana. Fraternally he is a past master of Glendive Lodge No. 31, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, is a member of Glendive Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, is an Elk, and he and his wife are members of the Eastern Star. Mr. Felt is identified with the Community Church in Terry, while Mrs. Felt holds allegiance to her childhood church, the Catholic.

At Glendive, May 25, 1913, Mr. Felt married Miss Harriet Kelly, a native of Minnesota, who grew up and received her education at Sleepy Eye. She taught school there, and for two terms was county superintendent of schools of Dawson County, Montana. She was still in office when she was married. Her parents, James J. and Amanda J. (Murphy) Kelly, are of Irish ancestry and were born in Wisconsin. Mrs. Felt is one of four surviving children: Mrs. Andrew Larson, of Glendive; Mrs. E. F. O'Neil, of Glendive; Mrs. Felt, and Dennis J., of Glendive. Two sons have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Felt: Robert S., born August 14, 1915, and James R., born November 9, 1920.

Mrs. Katherine (Shriver) Ennis, one of the most highly respected ladies of Southern Montana, and one who is associated with its pioneer educational history, lives at Ennis, named in honor of her late husband, William Ennis. Mrs. Ennis was born between Salem and New Lisbon in Columbiana County, Ohio, a daughter of John Shriver, and granddaughter of John Shriver. The elder John Shriver was born near Baltimore, Maryland, and died in Stark County, Ohio, prior to the birth of Mrs. Ennis. By trade he was a wheelwright but after coming to Ohio, where he was a pioneer, he was occupied with extensive farming activities, although he continued to make various articles for his family and neighbors. Mrs. Ennis owns some of his articles, and claims that he could make anything from a clock to a threshing machine. He married Katherine Sherfy, born in Franklin County, near Baltimore, Maryland, and died at Pekin, Ohio. The Shriver family originated in England, representatives of it coming to the American colonies and settling at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, during the lifetime of William Penn.

John Shriver, the younger, father of Mrs. Ennis, was born near Baltimore, Maryland, in July, 1807, and he died at South Whitley, Indiana, in 1889. Until 1819 he remained in Maryland, but during that year accompanied his parents to Columbiana County, Ohio. Until 1837 he lived on a farm in that county his wife inherited, but in that year removal was made to the vicinity of Oneida, Carroll County, Ohio. There the mother died the year of removal, but he continued to make it his place of residence until 1866, when he retired and went to Indiana. Politically he was a democrat. A very religious man, he was a devout member of the Baptist Church and very active in its work. In young manhood he was a member of the State Guards from Carroll County. John Shriver was married to Rachel Summer, and their children were as follows: Rebecca, who died in 1850; Mrs. Katherine Ennis, who was the second in order of birth; Maria, who died in the Madison Valley, near Jeffers, Montana, during 1894. As his second wife John Shriver was married to Mary J. Totten, native of Ohio, who died in Indiana at the age of eighty years. Their children now living are as follows: Ferman, who lives on a farm near Whitley, Indiana; Annie, who is married and lives at Manchester, Indiana, where her husband is a painter and decorator; and Frank, who is employed in the postoffice at Bozeman, Montana.

Mrs. Ennis attended the public schools of Oneida, Ohio, and being a very ambitious girl, and one of courage as well, she left home and came to Montana, arriving in the state August 16, 1865, and for two terms was engaged in teaching school. She is one of the leading factors in the Episcopal Church at Jeffers, of which she has been a member since the organization of the parish, and the Guild has always received from her a liberal support.

In 1862 she was married at Oneida, Ohio, to William Ennis, born in County Down, Ireland, in 1828. When but a lad of fourteen years he came to the United States, and coming West to Detroit, Michigan, he obtained employment in the railroad shops at that point, and assisted in the construction work of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, becoming road master. The salary he received for this work was $125 a month, an extremely large one for those days, and he was regarded as one of the highly paid men of the organization.

In June, 1863, he came to Montana, and after a short stay at Bannock, came to the present site of Ennis, and on August 13, 1863, took up the present Ennis homestead, a portion of which is now occupied by the town of Ennis. Later he bought more property, at one time owning 2,000 acres, but a good deal of this land has been sold, Mrs. Ennis still retaining between 400 and 500 acres adjoining the townsite of Ennis. In 1881 Mr. Ennis built an elegant residence, then the finest one erected in the territory of Montana, but it was destroyed by fire in 1917. Mrs. Ennis owns the house in which she is now living, and it is on Main Street. Mr. Ennis was prominent as a democrat. Like Mrs. Ennis he was a strong churchworker, and helped to organize the Episcopal Church at Jeffers. Having founded Ennis, he naturally took a deep and never-ending interest in it, and to the day of his death, which occurred at Ennis at 1898, he exerted himself to advance its interests in every possible way. No movement was ever started to thus improve the town that did not receive his support, provided he was sure that it was a meritorious one, and his demise was a heavy loss to the place. Mr. and Mrs. Ennis had one daughter, Jennie Winifred, who is Mrs. Charles W. Chowning of Ennis. A sketch of Mr. Chowning appears elsewhere in this work, for he, too, is one of the worth-while men of this region and deserving a place in its history. The son of Mr. and Mrs. Ennis, named William for his father, was a cattleman, rancher and breeder of horses. He died at Ennis, in 1908, aged forty-one years. He had been married in 1892 to Fannie L. Davis, of Virginia City, and of this union there were three children, as follows: Kathryn, now Mrs. J. D. Ledwick, of Wapato, Washington; Louise, now Mrs. C. S. McLeod, of Butte, Montana; and William, a graduate of the Butte High School. Mrs. Ennis is grandmother to these three children and one daughter of Mrs. Jennie Chowning, who is Mrs. Fay Jeffers, living near Jeffers, Montana.

Thomas Johnstone. To Thomas Johnstone belongs the distinction of being the first permanent settler of the region of Alzada in Carter County, but when he established his home there that community formed a part of Custer County. It was on the 23d of March, 1881, that Thomas Johnstone landed at old Stoneville, and he drove his family hither behind an ox team from Central City, South Dakota. From that early day until the present the name of Thomas Johnstone has been an honored one in his community, and now after a lapse of almost forty years this old Montana pioneer and his life's companion are retiring from the scenes which have known them intimately for this long period and Belle Fourche, South Dakota, will claim them as its own.

Mr. Johnstone was born in Dumfermline, Scotland, May 5, 1851, and he grew to years of maturity in the home of a coal miner. His father was also Thomas Johnstone, who was born and spent his early life in Dumfermline. He was the youngest son of his parents, and his father is believed to have been a mute and was engaged in coal mining. He married Katie Wallace, and they had five sons and a daughter.

Thomas Johnstone, the youngest of these five sons, came to the United States when fifty years of age, in 1869, and became a resident of Barclay, Pennsylvania, later removing to Bernice in that state, and he died there at the age of eighty-one. In his early life he had married Caroline Henerette Smith, a daughter of a sea captain who was on a cruise with his wife in the North Sea aboard the Henerette when this daughter was born, and she was named in honor of the ship. Her death occurred in Scotland in 1864, after becoming the mother of thirteen children, only nine of whom lived to years of maturity, and the three still surviving are: Charles S., a banker at Ashley, North Dakota; Thomas, the Montana pioneer; and Alexander, of Reynoldsville, Pennsylvania, where he has spent his life about the mines.

Thomas Johnstone, the son, received a meager educational training in the schools of his native heath, but his school days were over when he reached the age of fifteen. He was yet a young unmarried man when he left his native land for the United States, sailing from Glasgow aboard the steamship Iowa, and landed in the harbor of New York and passed through old Castle Garden June 9, 1868, accompanied by a sister and other near relatives. He was bound for Barclay, Pennsylvania, and it was there he performed his first work in the United States. He grew up under mining influences in his old Scotch home, and this trade finally became his own, and since landing on American shores he has worked in the coal fields of Pennsylvania, Iowa, Wyoming and for two years he dug coal near Miles City, Montana.

Mr. Johnstone was about twenty years of age when he first saw the broad and frontier west at Carbon, Wyoming, and there he spent six months in the mines. Returning at the end of that period to Barclay, Pennsylvania, he was married there and again started toward the West. At Mongonia, Iowa, he followed mining for some time, and from that point continued his westward course to Central City, South Dakota, arriving there in April, 1878, and for some time afterward followed mining in the hills between Deadwood and Lead. When he finally decided to locate in Montana and take up land for his future home he owned the yoke of steers which brought the family to the state and had sufficient cash capital to provide food for his family during the summer, occasionally replenishing the larder as a buffalo hunter, which also proved a source of some revenue.

Mr. Johnstone chose for his first permanent Montana home a pre-emption in the valley of the Little Missouri, and he lived upon this claim and improved it for fifteen years, his post office having been at Five Miles, which site is now a part of the Johnstone ranch. He selected his homestead not far from his pre-emption, and his latter site has been the family home for a quarter of a century and the spot where their success has been achieved.

The entry of Mr. Johnstone into the stock business occurred after his two years spent at mining, and it was a most humble entry. His first cow was purchased by funds provided by his father, and from that one cow as a nucleus he slowly developed a herd and in time became one of the well-known cattlemen of the region. He bought seventy-five cows from James Craig, of Belle Fourche, South Dakota. He proved up his pre-emption, his homestead and a desert claim, and his additions by purchase gave him title to one thousand acres of land along the Little Missouri. Early in the history of his career as a cattleman he took his two sons into a partnership with him, and Johnstone & Sons continued the business from April, 1904, until September, 1910. Their cattle brand was the "T-J," although each member of the firm had a private brand also, that of the father being known as the "lazy R." In the heighth of their success as cattlemen the company owned cattle to the number of eight hundred head, and the entire herd was shipped out when the partnership dissolved. The sons are still actively engaged in the business, chiefly at Ridgeway, Montana.

Thomas Johnstone took out his citizenship papers in Towanda, Pennsylvania, and he cast his first vote there. His first presidential ballot was given to Rutherford B. Hayes, but he was afterward obliged to miss a few presidential elections by reason of his having lived in Montana before it became a state. He has always given his allegiance to the principles of the republican party. Mrs. Johnstone cast her first presidential vote in 1916, supporting Mr. Hughes, the republican candidate.

On the 7th of July, 1873, Mr. Johnstone married the choice of his youth, Margaret Hodge. She was born in Kirkcaldy, Scotland, a daughter of William and Mary (Waters) Hodge. The father, who was a coal miner, lost his life in a coal pit in 1859. Mr. and Mrs. Hodge were the parents of the following children: Margaret, who was born May 14, 1854; Christina, the wife of John Gillesvie, of Glasgow, Scotland; and John, who was killed in the mines in Central City, South Dakota.

A large family of children have been born to bless the union of Thomas and Margaret Johnstone, namely: Mary, who became the wife of Elmer Holman, and died in Belle Fourche, South Dakota, leaving two sons; Thomas, Jr., a well-known ranchman of Carter County, Montana; Caroline, wife of Leslie White, whose home is in Vale, South Dakota; William, a ranchman at Box Elder, Montana; Maggie, wife of W. F. Harrington, a rancher on Box Elder; John, a Ridgeway, Montana, ranchman; Charles, who is also engaged in ranching in that region; Allen, a ranchman near his brothers; and George Alexander, who is ranching at the old parental home. This youngest son spent two months in Bozeman, Montana, as mechanic while training for service in the World war; also spent four months in Camp Zacharia Taylor, Kentucky, and was discharged from the service December 14, 1918.

Both the Johnstone and Waters families are of old Presbyterian stock, and to this church Mr. and Mrs. Johnstone also belonged prior to their advent into Montana.

WILLIAM C. EVANS, who is now enjoying the comfort of a retired home at Bainville, was for forty years an active stockman of Montana, and is a real veteran of that industry. For a long time he was identified with ranching around old Fort Benton, but the greater part of the present century has been spent in Eastern Montana, in what is now Roosevelt County.

Few men have seen more of the real pioneering and frontier life of the Middle West during the last half of the nineteenth century than Mr. Evans. He was thoroughly inured to hardship and danger before he came to the Northwest. He was born at Marietta, Ohio, February 21, 1849, son of Jeremiah and Hannah (Quimby) Evans. His parents were natives of Ohio, spent their lives as farmers, and about 1854, when their son William was five years of age, they pioneered to Iowa, settling in Palo Alto County, not far from where the Town of West Bend grew up. Jeremiah Evans lived only a few years after going to Iowa, and died at McKnight's Point in 1859, at the age of forty-two, and was laid to rest on the West Fork of Des Moines River. His surviving children were: Hiram, who was the pioneer of the family in Montana, coming out to the territory in 1866 and spent the rest of his life at Fort Benton; Jane, who died in Iowa about 1881, the wife of John Mulroney; John, who with his brother Hiram was a Union soldier during the Civil war and came out to Montana at the close of the struggle, was for some years in business at Fort Benton, and is now residing near Seattle; William C., of this notice; and Winfield S., who came with his brother William to Montana in 1877, and spent his last years on a ranch near Bainville. The mother of these children came with her sons to Montana in 1877, and died at the home of her son Winfield at Fort Benton in 1889, at the age of seventy-one.

Iowa during the '50s and '60s was still a very new country, and the locality in which the Evans family lived was largely isolated so far as schools and other institutions were concerned. With the nearest school twenty miles from home William C. Evans learned his letters and the fundamentals of reading from his mother. When a school was established nearby he attended two winter terms, and his school days were complete when about seventeen. He had a serious sense of responsibility in helping his mother provide for the household, and remained with her until past his majority. Only once while they lived in Iowa were the Evans family exposed to Indian troubles. A band of wandering Sioux camped in the forest near their home and troubled them for provisions all winter. The Indians were threatening and the few whites did all they could to conciliate them. The Indians had promised to leave the country when spring came and when the grass got "so high," but on their leaving the Evans and Carter families discovered their cattle had gone along. One yoke of cattle being used by the Evans family remained, and a few were left at the Carter home. A party of three, Jeremiah and Hiram Evans, and one of the Carters followed afoot with their rifles, overtaking the Indians on the east branch of the Des Moines River, about fifteen miles below Algona, Iowa. They succeeded in rounding up the cattle grazing in the woods and drove them off without molestation from the tribe. One ox belonging to the Evans family had evidently been killed by the Indians.

A little before he was twenty-one years of age William C. Evans married Lucinda St. John. She was the mother of a daughter, Mary, now Mrs. George Reynolds, wife of a ranchman at Snake Butte, Roosevelt County, Montana. Mrs. Reynolds had the following children: Maggie, Anna, Emma (who died at the age of sixteen), Curtis, Elva and Mary.

Leaving his wife and child at West Bend in Palo Alto County William C. Evans accompanied his brother Winfield S. and the latter's family, their mother being also a member of the party, overland to Yankton, South Dakota. There they became passengers on the steamboat Benton of the Powers Line, and after thirty-five days reached Fort Benton, Montana, May 14, 1877. The steamer was loaded with 400 tons of provisions for distribution from Fort Benton to Montana and Canadian points, and the passenger list included 135 adults and 30 children.

The Evans brothers brought with them seven head of horses, also part of the Benton's cargo. Reaching Fort Benton William Evans hired to R. G. Baker and Company to drive bull teams carrying freight to Fort McLeod, Canada. His own outfit consisted of nine yoke of cattle and three wagons, two being trail wagons, and besides himself there was a wagon boss and a herder. Eight other teams of equal size made up the train, with about a dozen men all told. It was 225 miles to Fort McLeod, and the country was hostile and infested with roaming Indians. Each man of the party was ready for attack at a moment's notice, with his rifle in his bunk at night, and twice Indians invaded their camp to steal, and one Indian was once wounded in the fight and also captured. Six weeks were required to make the round trip and some of the supplies were sought in the game which had as yet hardly been disturbed. Mr. Evans participated in two of these round trips during the summer of 1877.

In the fall of that year he started East, traveling by the steamer Mackinaw to Bismarck and thence by rail. On arriving at his home in Iowa he rapped on the door, expecting his wife to meet him. There was no response, and he made inquiries of a neighbor who gave him the tragic and shocking intelligence that his wife was dead. He remained in the old home locality several months before making definite plans for the future. The following spring, having married again, he brought his family to Montana, and then established himself as a ranchman near Fort Benton. He bought a few cattle and continued running them over the range in that locality until 1902, when he entered a pre-emption and tree claim upon the survey of the public domain. His improvements constituted his ranch headquarters. The lumber for his first frame home he hauled from Helena, 140 miles away. His stock was run under the brand "2E," and he continued the same mark after 1902, when he moved his interests to Eastern Montana and established his ranch near Snake Butte on Snake Creek, eight miles north of the present Town of Bainville.

Mr. Evans acquired a very intimate knowledge of conditions around Fort Benton when that Government military post was a center of activity for all the western country. Navigation was usually open on the Missouri as far as Fort Benton only during the high water months of May, June and July, and during the rest of the season boats came up only as far as Cow Island, and all freighting to Montana points was made to that river port. Mr. Evans sold his surplus cattle to the butchers of Fort Benton, who supplied the regions in every direction for some years. Later Great Falls became a center of trade. Mr. Evans gave his time studiously to his ranch interests and never participated to any extent in hunting the big game of the plains. During his trip down the Missouri on the Mackinaw he and his party were tempted by the number of buffalo along the Missouri to go ashore and kill them for meat, and that was about his only acquaintance with the sport which men found in slaying the king of the American desert and plain.

Mr. Evans was one among many cattle men who had to yield before the encroachments of sheep men, and on seeking the new location he came to what is now Roosevelt County, then Valley County, starting with only a small nucleus of stock. He continued the business actively until August, 1919, when he sold his stock and ranch and moved to Bainville.

In March, 1878, Mr. Evans married Libbie Whealy, daughter of Thomas and Isabella Whealy. She was born in Eastern Canada March 18, 1854, and went with her parents to Minnesota in 1864. She was reared in that state, acquired a liberal education and was a successful teacher before her marriage. She died at Fort Benton in 1896. Of her children Josephine, the oldest, is the wife of Robert M. Miller, a ranchman a few miles east of Snake Butte in Roosevelt County. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have three children: Robert, Gladys and Nelson. Leroy Evans, the second child, is a resident of Bainville, and his children are Elsie, Rose, Alice, William and Edna. Myrtle is the wife of B. E. Barrett, of Jordan, Montana, and their children are Elizabeth, Ethel, Clara, Gladys and Shirley. Elva Evans became the wife of P. J. Connolly, of Cutbank, Montana, and is the mother of Annie, John and Kathleen. Earl, a ranchman at Jordan, married Effie Boyd, and they have Veronica, John, Joseph and Robert. Near Fort Benton October 26, 1898, William C. Evans married Mrs. Catherine Scott. She was born in Grant County, Wisconsin, May 29, 1851, daughter of John and Catherine (Polmear) Walker. Her parents were born in England, were brought to the United States when children, were married in Lancaster, Wisconsin, and her father was a miner by trade and also a farmer. He finally went to Colorado for his health and died at Blackhawk in that state. Mrs. Evans' mother died in March, 1919, at West Bend, Iowa, when almost eighty-nine years of age. In the Walker family were the following children: Thomas E., who died in Iowa; Mrs. Catherine Evans; John P., who came to Montana in the early '80s, but spent only a few years in the state, and is now a resident of Rodman, Iowa; James E., of Highwood, Montana; Mary, wife of J. C. Martin, at Kuna, Idaho; Joseph S., of Malen, Washington; and Maggie, wife of B. F. McFarland, of West Bend, Iowa.

Mr. Evans gave his first presidential vote to General Grant in 1872. Like many other republicans, he supported Samuel J. Tilden in 1876 and has been affiliated as a democrat in national affairs since then. He joined the Odd Fellows Lodge at Bainville and is still a member. During the World war he was a bond and stamp buyer, and besides many contributions the home was the scene of much knitting for the boys at the front. Mr. Evans was reared a Presbyterian, but for the most part he has been a "quiet" Methodist.

WARREN E. POLLINGER. In the new era which has dawned for American agriculture probably no one official position has greater opportunities than that of county agricultural agent. The county agricultural agent bears much the same relationship to the farmers of his county as the superintendent of schools does to the schools of the county.

When he entered upon his duties as county agricultural agent of Missoula County, Warren E. Pollinger had the broad experience and the fundamental abilities to make him the one best choice for that office. He is a native Montanan, and has grown up in a close touch with its agricultural, horticultural and livestock industry.

He was born at Twin Bridges, November 17, 1882. Several generations ago his paternal ancestors came out of Sweden and settled in Pennsylvania. His father, Gov. E. M. Pollinger, was born at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, in 1836, but at an early age became tired of his home environment and went to Kansas. That was in 1857, while Kansas was in the throes of a revolution over the issues of slavery and freedom.

In 1872 Mr. Pollinger secured an interest in Montana lands by homesteading a hundred and sixty acres and taking up a desert claim of another quarter section northeast of Twin Bridges. When he left his employment with the stage company he lived on this ranch, developed it, and acquired a total of two thousand acres. He remained on his ranch until 1900. During the subsequent years of his life he spent the winters chiefly on the Pacific Coast and the rest of the year lived at Hamilton, Montana, where he died in 1911. He was a democrat of the old school and a member of the Episcopal Church. Gov. E. M. Pollinger married Helen Cook, who still lives at Hamilton. She was born in Michigan in 1857. She is the mother of nine children.

Warren E. Pollinger attended public school at Twin Bridges and Sheridan, graduated from the high school in 1901, and for twenty years his chief enthusiasm and work have been farming, horticulture and stock raising. He had some extensive experience on his father's ranch and on other farms until 1908. He then went into the Bitter Root Valley, worked and studied the most advanced practices of horticulture and the handling of the fruit crop. He was foreman of the Bitter Root Stock Farm, then superintendent of the Bitter Root Plantation Company, and for two years foreman of the Bitter Root Valley Irrigation Company. For one year he served as local inspector and for two years was district inspector under the State Board of Horticulture. During that time his home was at Hamilton. On September 1, 1918, Mr. Pollinger moved to Missoula and took up his duties as assistant county agricultural agent, and since the first of December of that year has been county agricultural agent. He has made his office a real source of benefit to every farmer and livestock grower in the county. His personal advice is available to every agriculturist in the county.

Mr. Pollinger is a republican and a member of the Episcopal Church. October 25, 1910, at Como, Montana, he married Miss Hazel Nicholson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Nicholson, the latter now deceased. Her father is a farmer at Como. Mrs. Pollinger is a graduate of the high school at Darby, Montana.

They have two daughters, Ella Catherine, born October 1, 1911, and Helen A., born August 11, 1913.

Charles Walter Adams. Early training and experience have given Mr. Adams a prominent place among the mining engineers of Montana and the West. Most of his active work has been with the American Smelting & Refining Company, and he is now manager of its East Helena plant.

He was born at Mitchell, South Dakota, June 6, 1888, son of a prominent and wealthy merchant in that city, Charles W. Adams, sr. The latter was born in Germany, March 14, 1855, and came with relatives to this country at the age of twelve years. He grew up in Clayton County, Iowa, attended the public school of that state, married there, and soon afterward removed to Mitchell, South Dakota, where he had one of the first stores. He has been very successful in business, and has enjoyed many prominent relations with the community and state. He has served as president of the school Board, member of the city council, and as delegate to various state conventions of the republican party. He is a prominent Mason, being a past grand commander of the Grand Commandery of the state of South Dakota, and is also affiliated with the Elks. He married Sarah Grotewohl, who was born in Clayton County, Iowa, in 1860, and died at Mitchell, South Dakota, in 1890. She was the mother of two sons, Fred C. and Charles W. The former was auditor of the Floete Lumber Company at Spencer, Iowa, when he died in 1911.

Charles W. Adams acquired a public school education at Mitchell, being a graduate of the high school, attended Dakota Wesleyan University, and took his professional training in the South Dakota School of Mines, the Utah School of Mines and the Missouri School of Mines. While in college he was affiliated with the Kappa Alpha fraternity and was also a member of the Triangle Club.

The first two years after leaving university he was with the Midland Bridge Company, and in 1912 went to work for the American Smelting and Refining Company. He was attracted to this business more for the purpose of professional experience than by the initial salary, and he worked in practically every department at the smelter, and from one responsibility to another was promoted until he is manager of the East Helena plant. The offices of the smelter are in East Helena, and under his supervision are five hundred employes.

Mr. Adams is also a director of the Western Union Consolidated Oil Company and the Christmas Mining Company. He makes his home near the plant. He is a member of the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers.

In 1919, at Salt Lake City, he married Miss Mary Crowley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Crowley of Salt Lake. Mrs. Adams is a graduate of a convent school at Newport, Kentucky. Mr. Adams is a member of the University Club of Salt Lake City, the Pan-Hellenic Club, the Boneville Club, the Rotary, Montana and Country Clubs of Helena, the Helena and East Helena Commercial Clubs, and is affiliated with El Kalah Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Salt Lake City.

Henry C. Helgeson. It is the initiative and enterprise of Henry C. Helgeson that has had most to do with the commercial activities of the town of Belmont. Mr. Helgeson a number of years ago entered general merchandising, and has developed the largest general store in that section of Musselshell County.

Mr. Helgeson, who is also a Montana homesteader, was born in Crawford County, Wisconsin, February 16, 1880. His parents were Ole H. and Christina Helgeson, both born near Christinia, Norway. The grandfather, Helge Helgeson, brought his family from Norway in 1856 and became a pioneer farmer in Crawford County, Wisconsin, where he spent the rest of his life. Ole H. Helgeson, who was born in 1850, was six years of age when brought to this country, was educated and married in Crawford County, Wisconsin, and remained on a farm there until 1891. The following seven years he was in the hotel business at Viroqua, Wisconsin, and then engaged in the tobacco business, buying, packing, sorting and selling tobacco at Viroqua, which is an important center of the great Wisconsin tobacco industry. Ole Helgeson removed to Belmont, Montana, in 1908, and was actively engaged in ranching for about ten years. Since 1919 he has lived retired at Coeur d'Alene, Idaho. He is a republican and a member of the Lutheran Church, and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen of America. A brief record of his children is as follows: Bertha, wife of Anton Wiken, a merchant at Sherry, Wisconsin; Samuel, who died at the age of twenty-one; Sophia, who died in Vernon County, Wisconsin, aged forty-two, was the wife of Ole Moe, who still lives there; Olive, employed in a drug store at Viroqua; Hilda, wife of Oscar Anderson, a furniture merchant at Reachtown, Wisconsin; Henry C.; James, living with his parents; and Julia, living on her ranch at Belmont, widow of Ole Langve, who died in 1919.

Henry C. Helgeson attended rural schools in Crawford County, Wisconsin, also the grade schools at Viroqua, and spent two years in a high school there. In 1901 he graduated from the Wisconsin Business University at La Crosse, and after one year spent in a clothing store at Viroqua gained a thorough knowledge of the mercantile business in a general store at Westby, Wisconsin. In July, 1908, Mr. Helgeson came to Montana, filed on a homestead of a hundred sixty acres, and occupied it until the fall of 1919. At the present time he has two hundred acres of well developed farm and ranch property. In 1909, while looking after his claim, he established the leading general store at Belmont, and erected a modern brick building, the only structure of its kind in Belmont. He has a busy store, his trade coming from a distance of twenty miles, and he carries all the goods required by his large patronage.

Mr. Helgeson also served as postmaster of Belmont under appointment by President Taft, holding that office from 1909 until 1919. He is a republican, and is a trustee of the Lutheran Church. In 1905, in Vernon County, Wisconsin, he married Miss Tina Jeffeson, a native of Wisconsin. They have five children: Inez E., born May 13, 1906; Henry, born June 3, 1908; Phyllis, born in 1910; Basil, born February 1, 1914; and Alton, born in 1916.

HAMILTON W. EWALT. The people of Carter County are too familiar with the career of Hamilton W. Ewalt for the biographer to call special attention to his record other than to give the salient facts in the same, for here he has spent the best years of his life and has gained a prominent place in the esteem of the people, and is universally respected as a business man, fair dealing being his watchword in all his transactions. He is optimistic, looking on the bright side of life, and never complains at the rough places in the road, knowing that life is a battle in which no victories are won by the idle and indifferent, but that the rewards worth while are to the diligent and courageous at heart. He has contributed his part toward the development and settlement of this section of the country, and today is enjoying that rest which he has so richly earned.

Hamilton W. Ewalt was born near La Belle, Missouri, on November 11, 1861, and is the son of Samuel and Martha (Wilson) Ewalt. The Ewalt family to which he is connected is descended from Henry Ewalt, grandfather of Mr. Ewalt, who came to the United States from Germany and settled first in Kentucky. Later, in the pioneer days of Missouri, he went to that state and settled in Lewis County, where he spent the remainder of his years and is buried. Among his thirteen children were the following: John, Thomas, Henry, Noah, Samuel, William, Joseph; Jane, who married Robert Thomas; Elizabeth, who married a man of the same name and a cousin of the other one; Manala married and moved to Texas; the other daughters also married, but their names are unknown. Six of the sons served in the same company in the Confederate army during the Civil war.

Samuel Ewalt was born in Kentucky, but accompanied his father on the migration to Missouri. In Lewis County of the latter state he was married to Martha Wilson, a daughter of David Wilson, who went to that state from Indiana. The Wilsons and Ewalts were all farming folk and industrious workers. To Samuel and Martha Ewalt were born the following children: Lizzie, wife of James McDaniel, of Moberly, Missouri; Hamilton W., the immediate subject of this review; Kittie Lou, the wife of Norman Smith, of Jackson, Montana; David H., of Cody, Wyoming; John, of Ekalaka; Ida, the wife of James Goodwin, of Knox, Missouri; James, of Cody, Wyoming; and Diora, who died unmarried in Lewis County, Missouri.

Hamilton W. Ewalt spent his youthful days on the paternal homestead and received such educational advantages as were provided by the country schools of that community. In 1885 he went to Kansas and spent four years in Haskell County, where he proved up a pre-emption a few miles north of Santa Fé. He was not satisfied with his experience there, however, and as soon as he found a purchaser for his land he returned to his Missouri home, where he spent a year. In the spring of 1892 Mr. Ewalt came into Montana, stopping first at Powderville for a short time, later moving to Ekalaka, where he spent two years logging for a saw-mill. He was dependent entirely upon his labor for his living, and the next year he began freighting. The first year his outfit comprised four horses, his motive power being doubled the next year. He hauled his first load from Wibaux then known as Mengusville, on the Northern Pacific Railroad, to Ekalaka. He followed that business exclusively for several years and, by the most rigid economy, managed to accumulate some capital. He continued freighting from Miles City to Ekalaka and from Belle Fourche to Miles City, but when he abandoned that as a business he settled on Box Elder, at his present location, and engaged in the stock business.

Mr. Ewalt entered land as soon as the survey was completed on Box Elder, taking the southeast quarter of section 8, township 4, range 59 east. Starting on a modest scale, with both horses and cattle, he gradually enlarged his operations and became a very successful stock raiser. His brand was "lazy E5," which he used on both horses and cattle. He has recently closed out his herds and is now taking life easy, keeping things in order about the ranch and enjoying the fruits of his former toil.

In Lewis County, Missouri, on November 11, 1883, Mr. Ewalt was married to Mildred Zimmerman, the daughter of Martine and Mary (Judy) Zimmerman, farming folk and early settlers in Lewis County. To Mr. and Mrs. Ewalt were born the following children: Guy L., who was accidently drowned in May, 1915; Lola, wife of Carl Burch, a stockman on Box Elder, and the mother of five children, Wilson, Gussie, Crystal, Zelzo and Mescal; and Laura is the wife of Wilbert McVicker, living in the old Ewalt homestead on Box Elder, and their only child is Barbara Lee.

Politically Mr. Ewalt is a supporter of the democratic party and has taken an active part in political affairs of his locality, having served as a central committeeman and delegate to conventions. Like others of the early settlers of this locality, he has enjoyed the novelty of living in three different counties without changing his residence, Fallon County having been created from Custer County, and Carter from Fallon. Mr. Ewalt is admired by all for his sterling honesty, his courage, his hospitality and his public spirit, and is eminently deserving of a permanent place in the history of his locality.

MANNING C. NEWSTROM. The self-made man is the finest product of this great republic, which offers unsurpassed opportunities to the ambitious for rising to almost any position through personal merit and individual effort. Experience has conclusively proven that the most reliant, stable and representative men of any community are those who have had to depend upon their own exertions for advancement. In spite of the fact that sons of wealthy parents are given every opportunity for acquiring excellent educations, and their way in life made smooth, it is the exception, rather than the rule, to find any of them attaining to a success commensurate with that of their fathers, while on the other hand the young men coming from homes in the more humble walks, just because of the spur of necessity, reach a prosperity sometimes many degrees removed from that of their immediate progenitors. The more western states offer many instances to prove the truth of these contentions, notably that of Montana, and one man in particular who deserves mention in this connection is Manning C. Newstrom, member of the retail merchandise firm of Ekalaka, operating under the name of the Charters Mercantile Company, with which Mr. Newstrom has been identified since August 7, 1919, although his house has been in existence, under a different name, for about a dozen years.

Manning C. Newstrom was born in Sweden on December 29, 1885, a son of Carl and Charlotte (Stride) Newstrom, both of whom were born in Sweden, where they were married. When Manning C. Newstrom was two years old his parents came to the United States, locating in Brookings County, South Dakota. They both survive and are living near Arlington, South Dakota, having spent their lives in agricultural pursuits. Their children are as follows: Mrs. J. B. Trasta, who lives at Arlington, South Dakota; Manning C., whose name heads this review; John, who served in the great war as an artilleryman, was among the first contingent to be sent to France, and had the good fortune to pass through all the campaigns of his command without being wounded or taken prisoner, as well as his period of service in the Army of Occupation, and was discharged and returned home in June, 1919, after two years of absence on military duty; and Anna, who is the youngest, is still at home.

Growing up in an excellent home, Mr. Newstrom was early taught habits of industry and thrift, and after completing his course in the district schools he took a business course at Minneapolis, following which he entered the employ of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company as stenographer in the purchasing department under Fred Winn, and remained in that position for four years. Realizing that the opportunity he sought was not to be found there, Mr. Newstrom resolved to travel further West, and with that idea in view set out with no definite objective point in view, merely looking for a locality to suit him. At Miles City, Montana he thought he found the place he was looking for, and so decided to locate there permanently. With the optimism of youth he was not downcast because his sole capital consisted of two dollars, but immediately looked about him for work, and through a sign on a fence asking for workmen he secured employment with W. B. Jordan & Sons Company unloading freight from the car. So reliable and efficient did he prove to be that within two weeks he was offered a position as salesman, and remained with that concern for nine years, or until he resigned to go into business for himself, rising to become shipping clerk of the wholesale branch within a year, and later, traveling salesman, covering Eastern Montana from Miles City to the Dakota line, during this period being a member of the Iowa Commercial Men's Association.

On June 17, 1912, Mr. Newstrom was united in marriage with Miss Eleanor Best, of Vermilion, South Dakota. Mrs. Newstrom was born in the locality of Vermilion in 1880, a daughter of Joseph Best, who first served as sheriff of his county, and then as police magistrate, all of his life being a republican. There were three daughters and one son in the Best family. Mrs. Newstrom, who was educated in the public schools, was a teacher of dancing prior to her marriage. Since casting his first vote for William Howard Taft for President Mr. Newstrom has espoused the candidates of the republican party.

Although a newcomer to Ekalaka, Mr. Newstrom has already identified himself with the best element here, and is destined to achieve business distinction in its midst. He and his partner, Mr. Carey, are thoroughly competent to cater to the demands of their trade, which is gathered not only from Ekalaka, but also from a wide territory contiguous to it, and they take pride in keeping their stock up-to-date in every respect.

CHARLES H. WILLIAMS. During the past quarter of a century, Charles H. Williams has been a resident of Lewistown and for the greater part of this time has been engaged in the drug business here, although now retired. His life has been replete with experiences, and his fortunes have ranged from those of poverty to affluence, yet through it all he has kept a serene and untroubled mind, and few men who have passed their three-score-and-tenth year bear so few of the scars of life's battles.

Mr. Williams was born in a hewed log cabin on a wilderness farm near the present city of South Bend, St. Joseph County, Indiana, November 2, 1845, a son of Samuel and Eliza F. (Thomas) Williams, natives of Maine, where the former was born in 1812 and the latter in 1813. They were married in Maine and there were born the first two children in a family of three daughters and four sons, of which family Charles H. was the fourth in order of birth. Some time in the late '30s the father took his family, consisting of his wife and surviving child, overland to St. Joseph County, Indiana, where he bought land in the timber region and there built a primitive log house, with hewed log floor made of trees as they were cut from the forests. It was in this little home that Charles H. Williams first saw the light of day. Samuel Williams passed the rest of his life there and died in 1889, his widow surviving him ten years. He was an industrious farmer, and a lover of fine driving horses, but was a very temperate man and a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Originally a whig, in later years he transferred his support to the republican party.

The boyhood days of Charles H. Williams were passed amid the surroundings of his father's Indiana homestead, and during the short winter terms he attended the district schools. Later he was given the advantages of attendance at the Northern Indiana College at South Bend, Indiana, from which he was graduated with the class of 1868, in which year he journeyed to St. Charles, Minnesota, in which locality he started farming. In the fall of the same year he turned his attention to matters commercial when he established a general store business at Dover, Minnesota, under the firm style of Miles & Williams. This business was on a sound basis and was prospering nicely when the firm had the misfortune to suffer a disastrous fire which completely destroyed their building and goods and caused a loss to Mr. Williams of practically everything he owned in the world. While not discouraged, he decided that he would seek another location for his next venture and accordingly went to Denver, Colorado, and then to Ellsworth, Kansas. At the latter place he took a stage-coach to Great Bend, Kansas, where he engaged in the general merchandise business under the firm name of Stone & Williams. This partnership was subsequently mutually dissolved, and Mr. Williams took his share of the goods to Dodge City, Kansas, and embarked in the railroad supply business for the railway contractors and workmen who were building the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway. He remained there until the fall of 1872, when he returned to Denver. His first railway venture had proved a profitable one, and with the idea of selling goods to the contractors on the Great Northern Railway, in the spring of 1873 he went to Puget Sound, via Salt Lake City and San Francisco. The failure of J. Cook caused the collapse of Mr. Williams' plans, as all work was stopped on the Great Northern, and Mr. Williams gave up his projects of which he had expected great things and went down the Sound of Tacoma, Washington, and then to Portland, where he took a steamer to the Dells. He then traveled about 1,700 miles by saddle-horse to Fort Benton and Fort Peck, and while the hostile Indians at that time were on the war-path he made his way safely through to Boise City, Idaho. With a couple and their children he went on to Deer Lodge, and after about six months of constant travel finally arrived at Winona, Minnesota.

Not long after his return Mr. Williams embarked in the drug business at Blooming Prairie, Minnesota, in partnership with Doctor Johnson, under the firm style of Williams & Johnson. This business continued until 1874, when Mr. Williams came to Maiden, Montana, and located in the Judith Mountains, where he was engaged in prospecting and mining. After two years he embarked in the drug business at Maiden and conducted an establishment until 1895, in the fall of which year he came to Lewistown and founded a store of a like character. Here he built up a business of large proportions, which he continued to conduct until his retirement in 1917. At that time he sold out and has since lived quietly in his comfortable home at 212 Fifth Avenue, South. During the time that he was engaged in the drug business at Lewistown Mr. Williams was also engaged in ranching four and one-half miles west of the city, where he has 520 acres of valuable property with excellent improvements. On this ranch are an eight-room bungalow, a barn with space for thirty head of horses, other buildings of proportionate character, and a spring of fine, clear water right at the house. This ranch he now rents. Mr. Williams is independent in his political views and was elected one of the first aldermen of Lewistown, but resigned the office. Fraternally he is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. One of the grand old gentlemen of Montana, his career has been a worthy and honorable one, and he well merits the respect and esteem in which he is universally held.

In May, 1877, Mr. Williams was united in marriage with Miss Nellie M. Crandall, at Blooming Prairie, Minnesota, she being a native of Wisconsin. Mrs. Williams died in 1907, having been the mother of one son, Floyd S., who married Leah White and is a resident of Great Falls, Montana.

Robert G. Shiell. It is given to some individuals to advance beyond their fellows by reason of the possession of characteristics that make for success. Their handling of big business affairs is so masterly that their onward progress is steady and they make prosperous all enterprises with which they are connected. Robert G. Shiell, one of Fergus County's prominent ranchmen, is an instance of the above. Still in the very prime of life, he has already accomplished more than many men whose careers are finished, and at the same time has not neglected the duties of citizenship, a statement that will be substantiated by his long record of faithful public service.

Mr. Shiell was born at East Lothvan, Scotland, February 24, 1870, a son of Robert and Catherine (Virtue) Shiell, natives of the same place and both now deceased. Married in Scotland, the parents had nine children, of whom three died in infancy and six are still living, and of these Robert G. is the youngest. Three of the sons, William, John and James, came to the United States in 1886 and located near the old town of U. Bet, in Fergus County. The boys were followed during the next year, 1887, by the father and his wife and other children, who settled in the same community. There Robert Shiell, who had been a shepherd in his native land, found employment at the same vocation that had occupied his attention in the Lammermoor Hills. On taking out his citizenship papers he entered Government land, upon which he built a home, but after a few years sold out his land, retired from active labor, and removed to Great Falls. His last years were passed at the home of his son, Robert G., where he died in 1903, at the age of eighty-two years, his wife passing away in 1914, when she was eighty-six years old. They were faithful members of the Presbyterian Church, and Mr. Shiell was a democrat in political faith.

Robert G. Shiell was educated in the schools of his native land and was seventeen years of age when he accompanied his parents to the United States. His first money in this country was earned by herding sheep on the American Fork, employment in which he was engaged for three years, and he then entered the hotel business at Living Springs, a venture in which he made an almost phenomenal success. Subsequently he removed to Garneill, where he also established himself in the hotel business, and conducted a popular hostelry for fifteen years, his house becoming widely and favorably known to the traveling public. During the time he was boniface of the latter caravansary he began to interest himself financially in Fergus County ranch land and in running cattle and sheep. His first purchase was what was known as the Alf Stephens ranch of 520 acres, and later he bought the old U. Bet ranch of about 1,000 acres. In addition to being an extensive raiser of cattle, he engaged more and more extensively in the sheep business, and at one time had from 6,000 to 7,000 head of sheep. He is still extensively interested in that business, as well as in farming, although his home is made at Garneill. While business interests have made large and important claims upon his time and abilities, Mr. Shiell has not neglected civic duties, for during the past fifteen to seventeen years he has served capably as justice of the peace, to the entire satisfaction of his fellow-citizens. He is a man of much force of character, who carries to a successful conclusion every enterprise he undertakes. His support in public matters has been given to the democratic party.

Mr. Shiell was married September 6, 1891, to Miss Annie Gray, who was born in East Lothvan, Scotland, daughter of George and Jessie Gray, also natives of that country, who spent their lives there, both being laid to rest in the old cemetery at Pencaitland. Mrs. Shiell was the fifth of a family of nine children. To Mr. and Mrs. Shiell there have been born four children: Nettie Gray, the widow of Ernest H. Argersinger, one of the organizers of the First National Bank, of which he was cashier at Judith Gap at the time of his death, in November, 1918, when he left one daughter, Ruth Gray; Robert J., who died in 1911, at the age of seventeen years and eleven months; Kate V., the wife of C. N. Hovie, a ranchman near Judith Gap, with one daughter, Catherine; and Gracie Allen, who is attending the polytechnic school at Billings.

John O. Gilkerson. A pioneer of Montana of the year 1877, John O. Gilkerson has had a personal share in the wonderful events which have formed the state's history since that time, and has worked his way to position and fortune solely through the force of his own initiative. Various lines of business have profited by his energetic and capable management of affairs, and for years he has been known as one of the prominent ranchers and business men of Fergus County, but at present he is more or less in retirement from active labors and is making his home at Lewistown, where a number of his most worthy accomplishments have been centered.

Mr. Gilkerson was born at Mount Gilead, Morrow County, Ohio, February 22, 1852, a son of James and Ann (Ward) Gilkerson. The father, a native of Ireland and a harnessmaker by trade, died when the son was but a child, while the mother, who was born in Pennsylvania, survived until fifty-five years of age. They had two children: Clara B., the wife of Michael Nickson; and John O. John O. Gilkerson was given but ordinary educational advantages in the public schools of Indiana, where he was taken as a lad, and earned his first money plowing corn for John Huffman at Greenfield, Indiana. Later he learned the shoemaker's trade with his uncle, John Ward, but this vocation did not satisfy him and in the spring of 1877 he answered the call of the West and traveled by rail to Franklin, Utah, and from that place by stage-coach to Helena, Montana. At the latter place he secured employment with John Green, a ranchman, as a range rider, but not long thereafter took up freighting between Helena, Fort McCloud and Billings. During the fall of 1877 he helped to drive the cattle through to the Poplar River Indian Reservation, and in this difficult task was detailed to go ahead and separate the buffalo herds, so that the cattle could be driven through without mingling with the buffalo. In the winter of 1877-1878, Mr. Gilkerson passed his time in the mountains hunting with Jake Hoover.

Later, for a time, he was engaged in a retail liquor business at Fort Benton, but disposed of his interests therein to give his attention to ranching in the Judith Basin, where he had taken up government land seven miles east of the present site of Lewistown. In 1885 he discovered coal on this land, and subsequently delivered the first coal sent into Lewistown. For more than thirty years he continued to mine and sell coal, only leaving that industry when he retired from active business affairs in 1919. Mr. Gilkerson has been identified with the upbuilding of this section in various other ways, and was the builder of the first structure ever used by the county officials at Lewistown, situated on Washington Street, between Third and Fourth avenues, this being erected in 1886. He was also the builder of the first plant for the manufacture of ice in Northern Montana, an enterprise equipped throughout with electric power and modern equipment, and was engaged in the ice business profitably until his retirement in 1919. Also, he was a director of the You Go Coal Mining Company. Mr. Gilkerson now devotes himself principally to looking after his ranching interests, which are large and important. He is the possessor of an excellent reputation as a business man of sound standing and absolute integrity, and as a citizen has given evidence of his public spirit on a number of occasions. He votes the democratic ticket, and his fraternal affiliation is with Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in which order, as in business circles, he has a number of warm and appreciative friends.

In December, 1886, Mr. Gilkerson was united in marriage with Miss Della Ball, who was born in Indiana. Of their six children only one is living: Percy, his father's associate in his ranching and business ventures, who married Mabel Simpson and has one daughter, Dora.

John B. Clark is a true and typical product of the West. He has never spent any considerable period of his life anywhere but the free and open plains, mountains and valleys of the northern and northwestern states and territories. He was born on the bleak prairies of Minnesota, and has been identified with the open country of Montana fully forty years.

He was born December 25, 1858. The place of his birth was Rochester, then scarcely started as a village, now a world famous center of surgery. His parents, Bernard and Mary (McFalls) Clark, were married in Olmsted County, Minnesota, where the City of Rochester now stands. Bernard Clark was born in Dublin, Ireland, and came to this country by sailing ship when he was a boy. He landed at New York City, went South to New Orleans, and enlisted in the United States army, serving with an infantry regiment during the Mexican war. Later he was a member of the cavalry and fought in an Indian campaign. Coming up the Mississippi, he located in Iowa, and then went to Minnesota Territory, being one of the first to settle in Olmsted County. He took up a homestead five miles from where the City of Rochester now stands, and by hard labor converted his environment into a good farm home. The first house was built of logs but was later replaced by a frame dwelling. At the time of his death he owned a half section of good land in Minnesota. He died at the age of sixty-five. His wife, Mary McFalls, was born in Indiana and died at the age of fifty-five. They were the parents of thirteen children, John B. being the second in age. Three sons and six daughters are still living.

John B. Clark grew up on his father's Minnesota farm, and attended school only during the winter sessions. Leaving home at the age of twenty-one he went to the Black Hills of South Dakota, traveling by ox teams from Fort Perry. He prospected and mined in that region and also worked on a ranch for about two years. He then bought a saddle horse and a pack horse and came through to Miles City, Montana, in the fall of 1877. There he bought teams and worked on the grading of the Northern Pacific Railway during the fall and spring of 1878. From there he went on to Helena and took a contract for getting out logs to build a railroad tunnel. This was his employment during the winter of 1878 and the summer of 1879. Selling out his outfit he went on to the Gardner branch of the railroad and worked through the remainder of the summer of 1879 in building that road. From there with his teams and equipment he moved to Fort Benton and engaged in the freighting business between Fort Benton and Lewistown for two years. In 1881, selling his outfit, he located on the stage station on Arrow Creek and spent the winter of 1881-82 working for John LaMott in road grading and hunting and trapping beavers and deer. In 1883 he went to the White Sulphur Springs and worked in the timber and sawmill and in the summer of 1884 returned to the Judith Basin and spent two years with J. C. Walker in a sawmill. During that time he located a tract of unsurveyed land. After leaving Walker he continued in the sawmill business with Charles Long on Beaver Creek for about three years. Selling his interests to Mr. Long, he returned to his ranch, which had been surveyed in 1885. From that time forward Mr. Clark was busy in building up and acquiring extensive farm and ranch interests, raising cattle and horses, and at one time had about 3,500 acres of land. He still owns 2,000 acres, constituting a splendid ranch situated nine miles southeast of Moore, and he makes his home on the ranch. He has never sought public office, and is a democratic voter.

April 5, 1897, Mr. Clark married Mary Dundum, a native of Montana. They had two daughters, Helen and Theresa. The latter died at the age of two years. Helen is the wife of August Ide, and her two sons are John L. and William Clark.

George F. Wright, a present county commissioner of Fergus County, left the farm of his father in Iowa at the age of sixteen, and has spent his subsequent years in Montana as a cowboy, rancher and stockman, and is now enjoying a well earned retirement at Lewistown.

He was born in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, April 18, 1865, a son of Jackson and Nancy (Thompson) Wright. His parents were also born in Allegheny County. His father was a farmer there, and in 1874 moved to Madison County, Iowa, where he bought land and became one of the leading farmers and stock raisers of that section. At the time of his death, which occurred in 1890, at the age of sixty-six, he owned a finely improved place of 320 acres. He held the office of township assessor and in politics was a republican. His wife died at the age of forty years. They were the parents of nine children, George F. being the fourth in age. Eight are still living.

George F. Wright was nine years old when his parents moved to Iowa, and he finished his education in the public schools there and at the age of sixteen came to the Judith Basin in Montana. His first employment was with the T Ranch outfit and afterward he was with several sheep and cattle companies until 1899. In that year he bought the old Willow Dale Ranch of 340 acres and put in a number of years raising sheep and cattle on a large scale. He sold most of his stock and practically retired from business in 1910. Mr. Wright was elected a county commissioner in November, 1918, on the republican ticket.

He married in May, 1893, Ruth Fisher, a native of Missouri. They have two daughters, Gladys and Lois.

James Fergus was elected the first president of the Montana Pioneers Society, an honor fitly bestowed, when most of the prominent builders and and makers of Montana were still alive and there were many other pioneers eligible to the same position. A brief sketch of his career is therefore a distinct contribution to the history of Montana.

He was born in Lanarkshire, Scotland, October 8, 1813, and died at the age of eighty-four in 1897. He grew up in a Scotch home, where the religious spirit was that influenced by a rigid Presbyterian father and mother of liberal views. He had a common school education, and at the age of nineteen crossed the ocean to Canada. He spent three years in a Quaker settlement and learned the trade of millwright. The first summer he spent in the United States he was employed as a millwright at Green Bay, Wisconsin. At that time, over eighty years ago, he also visited Milwaukee and Chicago, and in the late '30s moved to Eastern Iowa, in what was then the Blackhawk Purchase. He built and superintended powder mills at Savannah, Illinois, and at Moline in that state engaged in the foundry and machine business. He was also a member of the firm Wheelock & Fergus, paper manufacturers, at Moline. But for ill health he might have become one of the great industrial figures in the Middlewest.

In 1854 he moved to Minnesota and in company with two other men laid out the town of Little Falls, owning five-twelfths of the townsite. He built with his partners a dam and bridge across the Mississippi River. Later he became identified with Fergus Falls, Minnesota, owning half the townsite.

From Minnesota he started west again, and while in Colorado in the winter of 1861-62 received reports from the new gold mines of the Idaho country. He joined Captain Fisk's expedition of 1862. His account of the experiences of this pioneer expedition is preserved in the files of the Montana Historical Society and has been published in several works. He drove his own ox team from Little Falls, Minnesota, to Bannack, the first mining camp of Montana. Such were the qualities of his character and the vigor of his leadership that he was from the first looked upon as a man of prominence in the territory, and was called upon for many official responsibilities, including election as the first recorder of Alder Gulch, Virginia City, and as the first county commissioner appointed in the territory for Madison County. He afterward moved to Lewis and Clark County, near Helena, and was elected to serve two terms as commissioner of that county and as a member of the Legislature. He also did some placer mining at Alder Gulch and Virginia City, owning the mine known as No. 13 Last Chance Mine and No. 2 Anaconda Mine near Butte. But his chief interest throughout his career was stock raising. In 1865 he located his ranch on Prickly Pear Creek and was in the cattle and sheep business there for sixteen or seventeen years. Seeking a wider range, he located about 1880 in the Judith Basin, where he founded what is known as Armells Ranch and grazed his herds over many hills.

His reputation as a public man followed him to the Judith Basin and he was soon prominent in public life. He represented Meagher County in the first Constitutional convention and afterward in the State Senate. He was instrumental in getting a new county set off from Meagher. The bill which he introduced gave the name Judith to that county, but on the motion of two of his political opponents the bill was amended so as to make the county Fergus County. He was himself a republican in politics.

A few years before his death an appreciation written of him may be quoted as a permanent judgment upon his life and character. "His main characteristics are a natural aptitude for mechanical enterprises, a sturdy independence of thought, a strict integrity of purpose and a love for study and good books. He has beyond question the best and most select library of any ranch or stock man in Montana. He takes and reads on an average twenty-five of the best publications in the country and some from Europe, reading by his own estimate not less than three hours a day upon an average for the past sixty years. It may well be inferred that he keeps fully abreast of the times. Although eighty years of age and an invalid for some time, Mr. Fergus is still active and energetic, giving a portion of his time to the management of his affairs."

At Moline, Illinois, March 16, 1845, he married Pamelia Dillin, who was born in Jefferson County, New York. She died October 6, 1887, the mother of four children, Andrew, Mrs. R. S. Hamilton, Mrs. S. C. Gilpatrick and Mrs. Frank H. Maury. That Mrs. James Fergus was a notable figure among the pioneer women of Montana may be inferred from a tribute paid her by the late Col. W. F. Sanders, as follows: "The dead wife, mother, and friend who lies here belonged to no religious sect, believed in no religious dogma and desired no religious services over her remains. The wishes of the living will be kept as sacred contract with the dead. While she could not understand how she could live after death or locate a heaven or a hell, she clearly comprehended the duties appertaining to her station in life, and in their performance was an obedient child, a faithful wife, a loving mother, a true friend and an honest woman, performing her full duty in all stations of life, beloved by all, leaving not an enemy behind."

Andrew Fergus is the only son of the distinguished Montana pioneer James Fergus, for whom Fergus County was named, and whose life and experiences are briefly sketched on other pages. Andrew Fergus is still a rancher, a life to which he was reared, and is now proprietor of the old ranch of his father, known as Armells Ranch, twenty-two miles from Lewistown. James Fergus secured the establishment of a postoffice on the ranch known as Armells, and the office of postmaster once held by James Fergus is now in the keeping of Andrew Fergus.

He was born at Moline, Illinois, July 3, 1850, and came to Montana with his parents when about thirteen years of age. He attended the schools of Helena, a private school at Alder Gulch and still later attended a school in Minnesota, where most of the students were half-breeds. Almost as long as he can remember he was with his father on the ranch in the cattle and sheep business, and gradually assumed increasing responsibilities. He has been a rancher for forty-three years, and at times has grazed as high as 40,000 head of cattle, sheep and horses. He is still a big stock man, though his attention is now concentrated upon the handling of about 4,000 head of sheep.

Mr. Fergus impresses men as not altogether typical of the characteristic western rancher. Though he has lived the greater part of his life out on the range, he has the dress and manners of the alert and well bred city business man. Mr. Fergus has never sought any political honor and votes independently. He married in 1908 Miss Hazel Akely, and they have three children, two daughters and one son.

Wiley King is one of the historic characters of the Yellowstone region, an early settler of Pease Bottoms, and is one of the living witnesses to connect the present with an era in which all Montana and the Northwest was a contested dominion between the encroaching white men and the hostile Indians.

He was born about three miles from Rockport in Atchison County, Missouri, December 15, 1858, the short month of the year, which accounts, as he says, for his body being so short. His father, Samuel King, was a native of Kentucky, but went to Missouri and married a native of that state, Louisa Stone, daughter of a Missouri farmer. Samuel King was a "Pikes Peaker," going out to the gold find of that region and crossing the plains in 1859. About the beginning of the Civil war he returned for his family, and he lived at Pikes Peak for several years as a merchant and miner. He followed various stampedes to new gold strikes. In 1864 he loaded his family on a wagon, and with two five-yoke teams of cattle came overland to Montana, reaching Alder Gulch, then a new gold field. In 1866 he drove on to Diamond City, Confederate Gulch, where Wiley King attended his second school, taught by Mrs. Doctor Hunter, whose husband is honored by the name given to Hunter's Hot Springs. Mrs. Hunter still survives, one of the aged and venerable women of pioneer times.

At Confederate Gulch Samuel King continued mining with little success, really losing his capital day by day. He gave up mining altogether in 1867 and took a ranch close to Bozeman, land that is now the property of his son Granville R. King. After living there a few years he went West to California, while his wife remained on the ranch, and he died soon after reaching the Golden State. His widow remained in Bozeman, where she died in 1915, when almost seventy-five years of age. She was the mother of the following children: Thomas; Wiley; Samuel Richard; Granville A.; Robert F.; Mrs. Lellan N. Milliron, all of Bozeman; Noah Ray, a commercial traveller; and Mrs. Cora May King, of Billings.

Thomas Wiley King came to man's estate with a common school education. He was working out at the age of fifteen, and his excursions carried him far and near, but he always knew that home welcomed him with his mother when he wanted it. He was a cowboy, a farm hand, and for a time carried the mail through the Indian country between Bozeman and Emigrant Gulch under George Arnhold. The Indians were hostile and had killed some settlers, and his mother forbade him to continue the hazardous occupation. He also drove stage between old Junction and Wear Brothers ranch for Gilmer and Salisbury five months, and again from Junction to old Fort Custer. The Sioux Indians were on the war path during this time also. His partner was killed by a rifle and butcher knife, and Mr. King stumbled over his dead body as he entered their shack. He was a farm hand for J. C. Guy, father of Bob Guy. He then bought an outfit and began stage driving, and later acquired a bull outfit and carried freight between Itchetah and Fort Custer, continuing this occupation for four years, until 1883. Selling his outfit, he began trading and trafficking in horses. For a time he occupied a place on Pease Bottoms, but never proved it up. His home has really been in the Bottoms since 1878. His ranch is four miles below the upper end of the valley and only a mile from the site of old Fort Peace. Mr. King has a modest little establishment, and runs his stock on the range. His brand is "W" on the left jaw.

Mr. King never married. He loves freedom and liberty and he could never make that love consistent with the companionship of some good woman. He has lived a bachelor, but not altogether in loneliness, since he has always kept hired help. A democrat in politics, he voted for Mr. Cleveland for President in 1892, though in local politics he has cast his vote for the man rather than for the party. He was reared in the Methodist Episcopal Curch, South, and has never joined a fraternity. Mr. King has been concerned with only few matters outside his personal interest and experience, but is a stockholder in the Billings Packing Plant. He has always been ready to support with his means the community and national welfare, and was a bond buyer for the government during the World war.

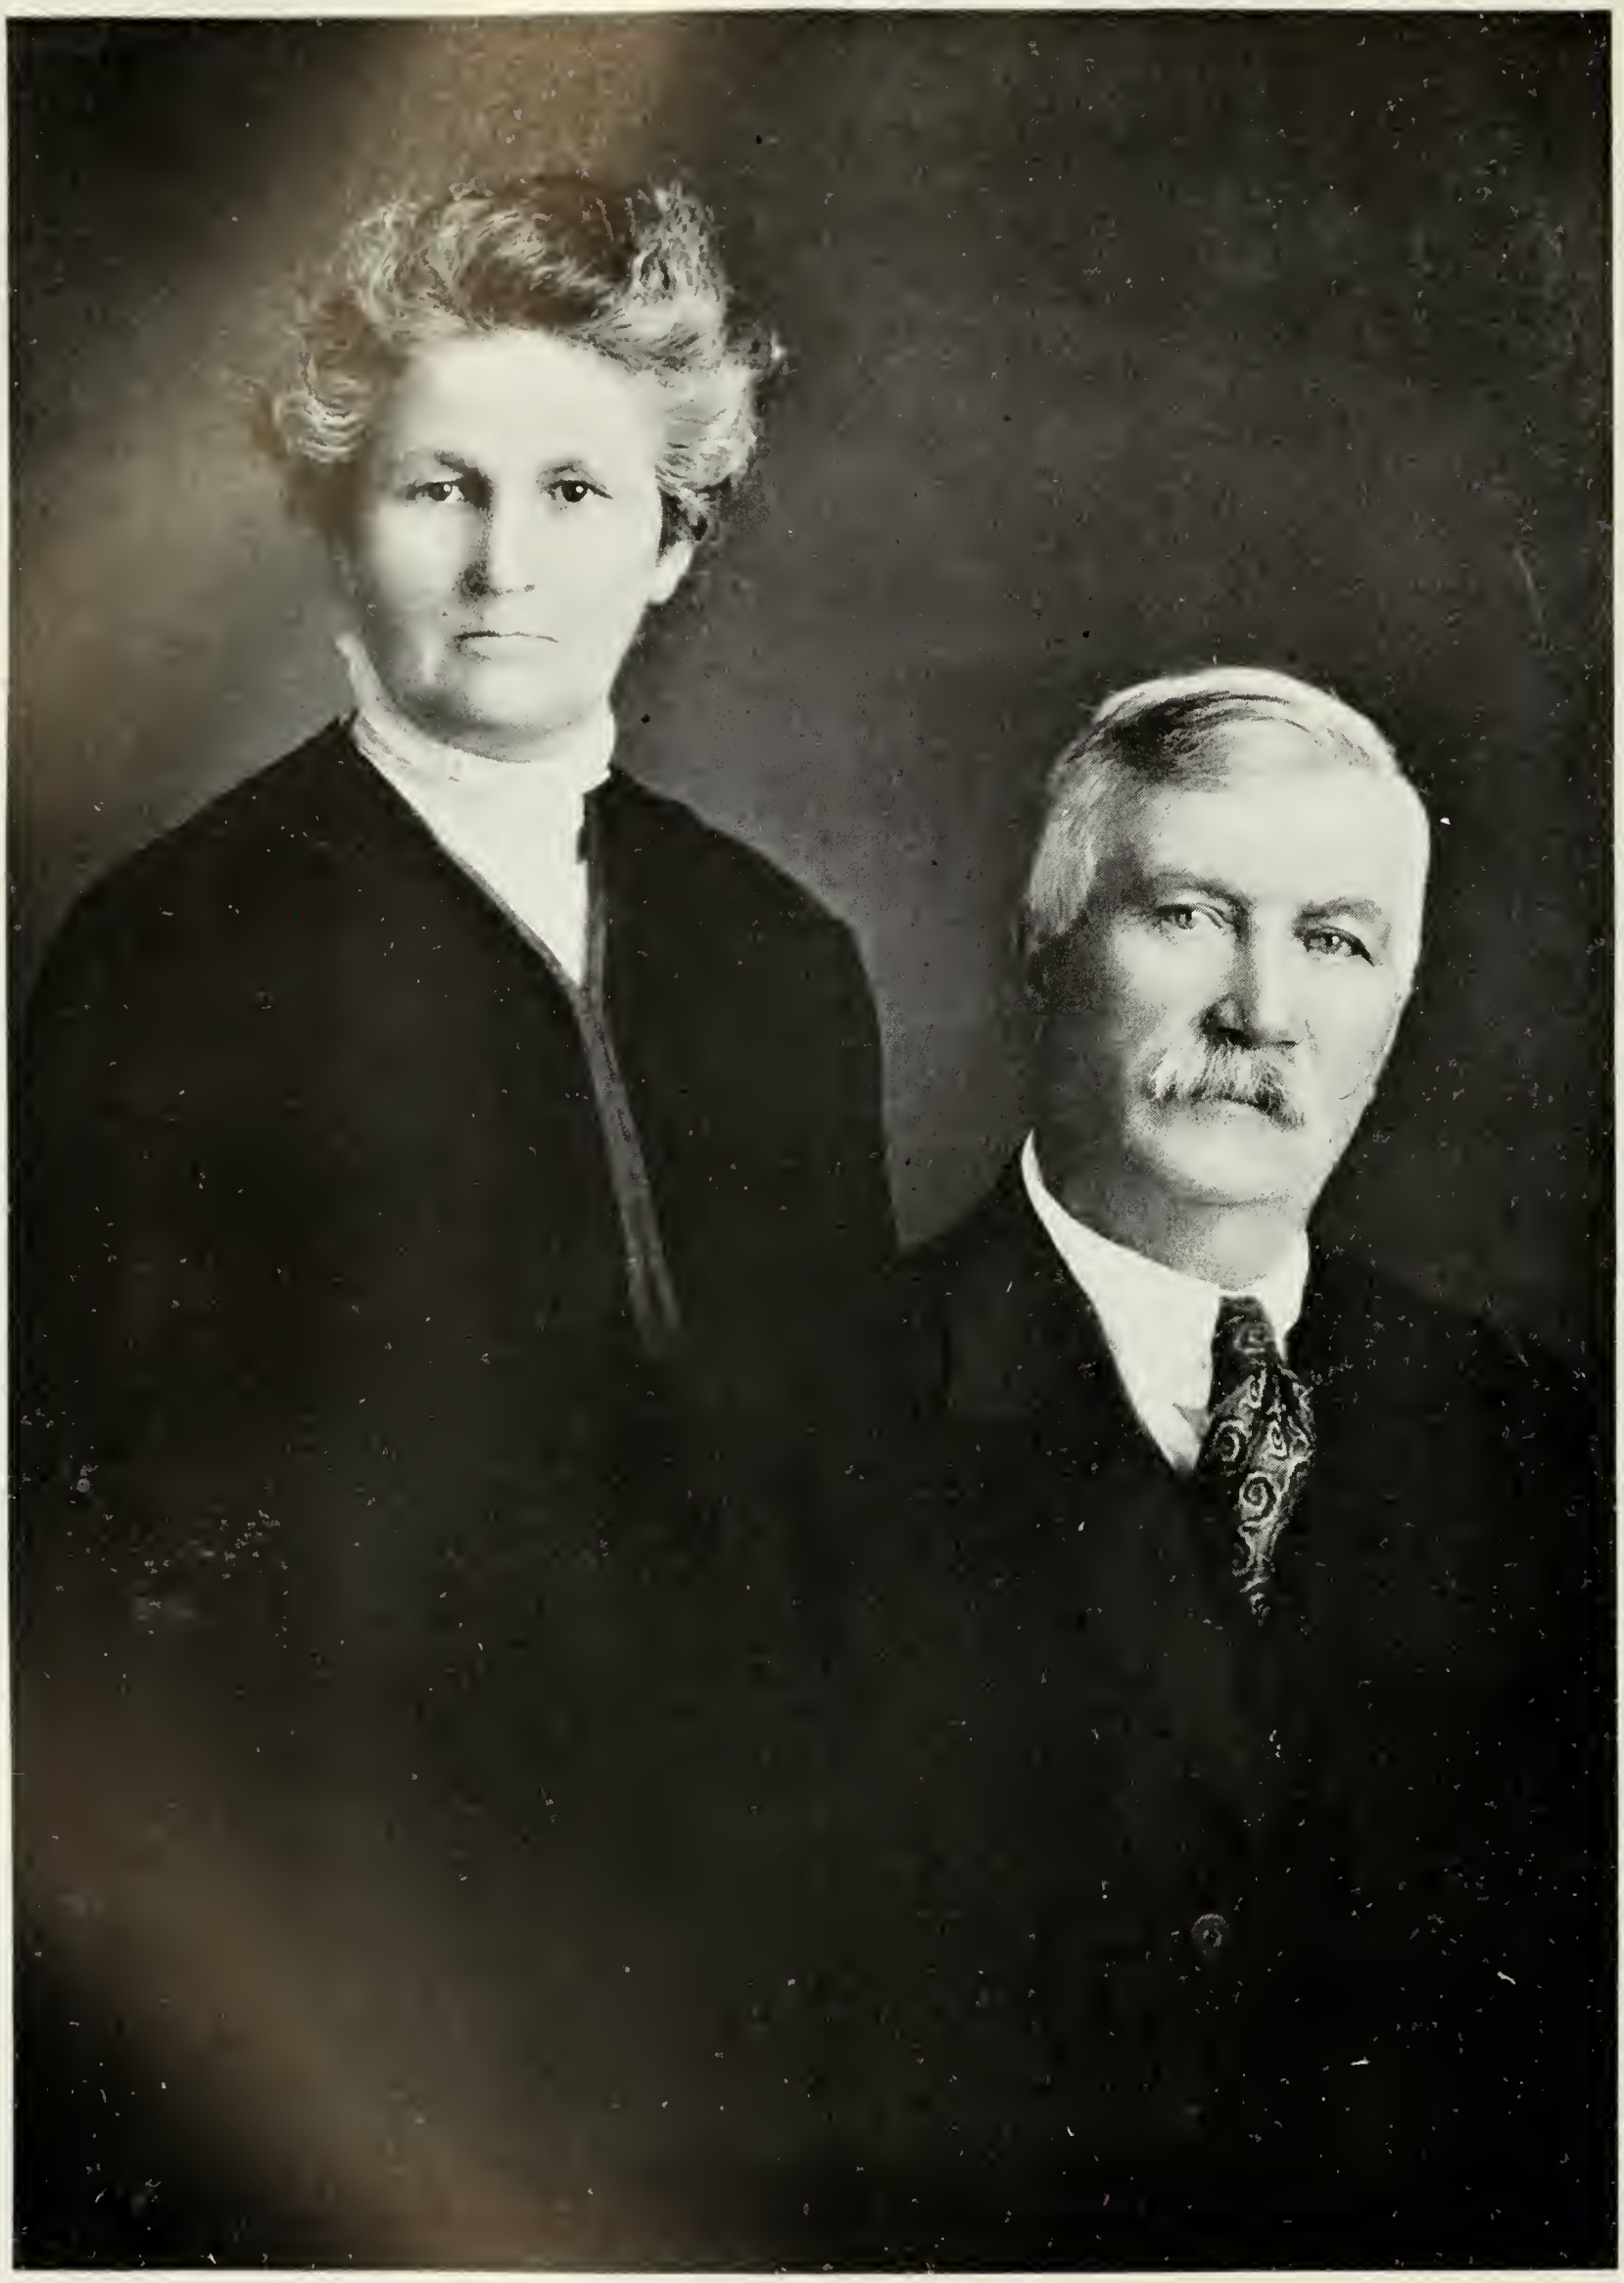
Arthur Charlesworth. Out of the personal enterprise of Arthur Charlesworth, who has been identified with the Medicine Lake locality of Sheridan County for twenty years, have come some of the fruits of prosperity that distinguish Eastern Montana, including a well ordered ranch and farm, building and other permanent improvements, fields of grain and pastures dotted with horses and cattle.

Mr. Charlesworth, who was one of the pioneers around Medicine Lake, was born in Lackawanna County, Pennsylvania, November 15, 1872. His parents, John and Lucy (Brunt) Charlesworth, were born in Staffordshire, England, and came to the United States soon after their marriage. His father spent his life as a mason or stone cutter, and died at Scranton, Pennsylvania, in June, 1892, surviving his wife five years. He was also a musician, and was a leader of a band at Scranton.

Arthur Charlesworth, oldest of his parents' children, acquired a common school education, and was hardly more than fourteen years of age when it devolved upon him to become in a degree self-supporting. Though he lived in a great coal mining center, he found his early work on a farm, and continued as a wage earner for several years.

About 1896 Mr. Charlesworth came to Montana and for five years lived around Shawmut in the Musselshell County. His first employers were Jenizen Brothers, ranchmen of that locality, who commanded his services for about five years. He was well equipped by nature and previous experience for making a skillful hand on a stock ranch, and he also exerted himself to secure some capital looking toward an independent enterprise.

When he came into what is now Sheridan County in 1901 he brought with him a small bunch of horses, and turned them loose on the grassy plains of old



William Skelton

MRS. WILLIAM SKELTON

Valley County. The lands he squatted on joined the townsite of Medicine Lake, and that tract he subsequently entered as a homestead. For a single man he built a rather pretentious pioneer home, a frame building 18 by 24 feet divided into three rooms. Besides horses he subsequently added cattle, and in the early days the surrounding range was dotted with the brand "DF" on his horses and "BB" on the Charlesworth cattle. He was one of the prominent shippers out of this region to the Chicago markets, and while he sold his cattle at prices ranging from 8 to 16 cents a pound, he always managed to realize a profit from his industry. Mr. Charlesworth has also been well satisfied with his participation in the horse industry, and is making that as prominent a feature of his enterprise today as at any time before.

Mr. Charlesworth located his desert claim on the Big Muddy, four miles north of Medicine Lake, and "scripped" forty acres adjoining. His home was established there in 1912, his residence consisting of a five-room cottage. Other permanent improvements showing what good use he had made of his time and opportunity here consists of a barn 76 by 56, with mow room for eighty tons, a granary of 12,000 bushels capacity, stock shed 24 by 70 feet, a bunkhouse and his pioneer log stable.

Mr. Charlesworth was one of the local ranchers who first turned their efforts toward the cultivation of the soil, and this branch of his business has been continued until he is regarded as one of the leading farmers of the valley. His chief crops have been grain, and his success has been satisfactory, though his methods have hardly been different from those of other farmers in the same region. His best yield of wheat was thirty-three and one-third bushels on ten acres of land, and one season his oats threshed sixty bushels to the acre. He made a rather unsuccessful experience with alfalfa, and it is his opinion that the crop was killed by an overflow of the waters of the Muddy rather than by drought.

September 22, 1917, Mr. Charlesworth married Mrs. Ethel DeSilba. She had a claim adjoining that of Mr. Charlesworth and had come into this district somewhat later than he. She was born at Owatonna, Minnesota, her maiden name being Armstrong, and had come to Montana from Lansford, North Dakota. She has one sister, Mrs. Tom Kelley, of Plentywood. By her first marriage, to Amos DeSilba, she is the mother of two sons. Dwight L., the older, was for two and a half years in the United States navy during the World war, on the battleship Pennsylvania, in the convoy and patrol service in English waters, and he crossed the Atlantic twenty-two times during the war. He was trained in the navy training camp at Bremmerton, Washington, and was discharged there in October, 1919. The other son is Harry DeSilba, who is studying music and training as a cornetist at Chicago.

Mr. and Mrs. Charlesworth did their part at home during the war, contributed to every drive or call for funds, were members of the Red Cross, and Mrs. Charlesworth did her share of knitting for the boys at the front. Mr. Charlesworth joined the Odd Fellows Lodge at Medicine Lake some years ago, and has filled some of the chairs.

WILLIAM SKELTON. Among those who came to Montana when the territory was mainly in its primitive wildness, infested by wild animals, numerous and ferocious, and the scarcely less wild but more savage red men, was the gentleman whose name forms the introduction to this paragraph, he having been here for a period of over a half century. He performed well his part in the work of developing the country from a wilderness to one of the foremost sections of the great Northwest, and he is, together with the other early actors in the great drama which witnessed the passing of the old and the introduction of the new conditions, deserving of specific mention here and every consideration at the hands of the later generation. We of today cannot pay such sterling characters too great a meed of praise in view of the sacrifices they made in order that their descendants and others of a later day should enjoy the blessings of life.

William Skelton was born in Cumberland, England, October 22, 1850, and is the tenth child in order of birth of the eleven children who blessed the union of Henry and Martha (Chambers) Skelton, both of whom also were natives of Cumberland. They are both deceased, the father dying in 1878, at the age of seventy-six years, and the mother in 1876, at the age of seventy-five years. Eight of the children are still living. Henry Skelton was a farmer by vocation. In 1865 he came to the United States, locating in New York State, but two years later he returned to his native country and there spent the remainder of his days. He was a member of the Episcopal Church.

William Skelton was reared and educated in England and was fifteen years of age when, in 1865, his parents immigrated to the United States. Though they located in New York State, he went to Canada, where he was employed at farm work, for which he received $6 per month. A year later he returned to New York State and, learning that his parents had left there, he decided to come West, having heard much of the golden opportunities presented here to the man of energy and ambition. He first located in Sioux City, Iowa, in the spring of 1867, but soon afterward came up the Missouri River to Buford, Montana, working on a steamboat. He later returned to Sioux City, but again came to Montana, locating at Fort Benton, whence he came to Helena. From there he went to Prickley Pear Valley, where he was engaged in road construction, after which he returned to Fort Benton. From there he went to Fort Peck, where for a time he was engaged as a guard.

From there the Old Fur Company was starting a new trading post at Pushett for the Indians. The company had built a flat boat and loaded it with supplies. Thirteen men took the boat up to Pushett to start work on the new post. Two scouted and two steered, while the rest cordelled the boat. After the post was built Mr. Skelton engaged in poisoning wolves and hunting other animals, as there were an unlimited number of buffalo, wolves, elk and deer. He then went up to the mouth of the Musselshell, to what was known as the Clendenning Post, and continued to hunt and kill wolves, going from there to Rock Springs, now known as Valentine Springs. Valentine was a partner of Mr. Skelton at that time, and he died later at Little Rockies. Mr. Skelton then returned to Clendenning Post and disposed of his furs, from which place he went to Carell, just being built, where he also hunted buffalo, elk and other game. In company with Thomas Dwyer, John Lee and Sam Elwell he moved to Snowey Mountains, where they hunted on the site where Lewistown, Montana, now stands, and in the spring they loaded their hides on the Diamond R bull teams and returned to Carell. Later he went into the woodyard business at Cow Island, also operating other woodyards in connection. When the great gold excitement was at its height in the Black Hills of Dakota he joined the rush to that locality and spent some time there in prospecting and mining. Leaving there, he went to Bismarck, North Dakota, from which place he walked to Fort Benton in company with Eugene Abbott. On the way they passed through Sitting Bull's camp, that being only a short time after the massacre of General Custer and his troops. After spending a week at Fort Peck and two weeks in Fort Benton he engaged in hunting on Beaver Creek. He then returned to Fort Benton and sold his hides and pelts, after which he returned to Cow Island and re-engaged in the wood business, remaining there until it became unsafe on account of the outbreak of the Nez Perces. He assisted a number of white people across Cow Creek, and while he was absent from the island on one of these trips his partner, Charles Buck, was killed by the red men. Mr. Skelton returned to the island, but could find no trace of Buck, for the red men had put the torch to everything that would burn. When things had quieted down somewhat Mr. Skelton went on a hunting trip down the Missouri River, but later returned to Cow Island and for the third time engaged in the wood business. In 1878 Mr. Skelton joined the stampede to Bearpaw Mountain on account of the gold strike there, and a year later he joined the gold stampede to Yogo. Later he squatted on a ranch near Stanford, Fergus County, turning the first furrow in the valley, and where he engaged in stock raising. He was successful in that enterprise, carrying on an average from 200 to 500 head of cattle and from 50 to 200 head of horses. He brought his ranch up to a fine state of improvement and so conducted his affairs as to be numbered among the progressive and enterprising ranchmen of his section of the country. In 1916 Mr. Skelton sold his ranch and retired from active business, making his home in Great Falls, where he is quietly enjoying that rest which his years of labor so richly entitle him.

On December 2, 1879, he was married to Vaitleain Vann, who was born in Fort Snelling, Minnesota, the daughter of Peter and Mary (Billguard) Vann. These parents were both natives of Canada, the father born at Winnipeg and the mother at Red Lake, and both are now deceased, the father dying in 1878, at the age of fifty-one years, and the mother in 1884, when in her fortieth year. They were the parents of eleven children, three of whom are living. Peter Vann operated a stage house in Minnesota known as Vann's Crossing, and he also ran a stage line for many years. At the time of his death he was about to engage in the cattle and horse business on the Teton River in Montana. He was a republican in his political views and was a member of the Roman Catholic Church. To Mr. and Mrs. Skelton were born eleven children, namely: William H., who died at the age of twenty-one years; Mary Ann, who died at the age of three years; Martha M., the wife of L. F. Coughlin; Joseph, who married Sophia Anderson, and they have one son; John L., who was married to Saide Huff, and they have one son; Peter A., who married Ida Bushard, and they have one daughter; Nina V., the wife of James Hogan, and they have a daughter; Stanford W.; Lena; Carl M.; and Florence V., who died when two years of age.

Politically Mr. Skelton has given his support to the democratic party. He takes a commendable interest in local public affairs and can always be counted upon to lend his support to every movement which promises to benefit the community in any way. He has had in many respects a remarkable record since casting his lot with this section of the country, and has passed through many experiences which would have daunted one of less courage and determination. He had many encounters with the Indians, who in those early days were apparently ready to take to the warpath on a moment's notice, but he was diplomatic in his intercourse with them in peace and fearless in his attitude toward them in hostile days, so that he gained a reputation as one who could hold his own with the redskins at any time. He tells many interesting incidents of those early days, and if his experiences could be put in permanent form they would make an important and valuable contribution to the historical literature of the state. A man of genial qualities and sterling character, he enjoys the esteem and respect of all who know him.

John W. Blair, rancher, banker and business man of Helmville, is one of the comparatively few survivors among the real Montana pioneers, those who came to this territory during the early '60s.

Mr. Blair was born in Seneca County, Ohio, in October, 1841, son of Thomas and Mary (Saylor) Blair. He is of Scotch-Irish ancestry on his father's side, while his mother represented some of the most prominent people of old Virginia. John W. Blair grew up on his father's farm in Ohio, had a public school education, and had barely reached his majority when the Civil war came on. He enlisted and served as a member of the Forty-ninth Ohio Regiment of Minute Men.

John W. Blair was one of a party of 300 men who arrived at Virginia City, Montana, July 12, 1864. They had traveled hundreds of miles through the western wilderness to reach this famous mining camp. During the next year Mr. Blair spent part of the year in Utah, was also a miner in the Last Chance Gulch, where he lived for about six years, and in the fall of 1871 identified himself with the community of Helmville in what is now Powell County. His residence here has been almost continuous for half a century.

While he had an active participation in the early mining districts of the state, Mr. Blair's career has been practically that of an agriculturist and rancher. Near Helmville he developed one of the finest and largest ranches in the state, at one time comprising 28,000 acres. He was one of the big sheep men of Montana, and his ranch was also the home of some of the finest specimens of Shorthorn cattle. He sold this magnificent ranch property in 1910. In that year he established the banking business of Blair & Company at Helmville, becoming president of the company. He also did much to develop the Town of Drummond, being a partner in the erection of the Palace Hotel and one of the organizers of the Drummond State Bank. Mr. Blair for many years has been a man of wealth, resources, energy, initiative and public spirit, and no attempt can be made here to summarize his manifold activities either in his home community or the state at large.

He has been in politics only for the good of his home community or state. An interesting story is told to the effect that Mr. Blair went to the polls to vote upon the first state ticket after the adoption of the constitution in 1889, and believed that the name John W. Blair, which he found as a candidate for a member of the Legislature, to be an acquaintance in another part of the district. Just before casting his ballot he was informed that the name was his own, and thus unexpectedly the honor was thrust upon him of being a member of the first State Legislature and taking part in the proceedings. He was again elected a member of the Legislature in 1912. In politics he is a republican. He is one of the honored members of the Society of Montana Pioneers.

John J. Foley, the division freight and passenger agent of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company at Miles City, has been a Montana resident since 1909. He was born in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, September 29, 1872, and was reared there, attending St. John's College and Marquette University of that city and prepared himself for a commercial or business course. His parents had died during his childhood, and thereafter until he reached mature years he remained with his sisters and brother. He is a son of William and Mary (Murphy) Foley, both of whom were born in County Wexford, Ireland, were married there and came to the United States before the war between the North and the South. The father volunteered for service in this Civil war, and served throughout the period as a member of the famous Iron Brigade. He was a Wisconsin soldier under Colonel McArthur and in General Bragg's command. In civil life Mr. Foley was a stanch supporter of republican principles, and at the time of his death, which occurred in Milwaukee in March, 1877, he was serving as deputy collector of internal revenue. His life's span covered a period of forty-five years. His widow survived him but three years and passed away in 1880. Their children were: Mrs. Anna Roberts, whose home is still in Milwaukee, Wisconsin; George, in charge of the city incinerator of Milwaukee; Mrs. T. P. Manion, also of Milwaukee; and John J., the only representative of the family in Montana.

John J. Foley has devoted nearly the entire period of his industrial career to railroad work, and his first identification with railroading was as freight clerk with the Milwaukee road. In 1896 he entered the service of his country as a soldier in the United States army, enlisting as a private in the Fourth Infantry, Company G, at Milwaukee. Two years later, in 1898, he was promoted to the rank of second lieutenant, and on the 10th of October, 1899, was made first lieutenant. He saw service in Cuba, the Philippines and in China. His Cuban service was during the Spanish-American war, in which he participated in the famous battle of San Juan as sergeant of his company, and in the Philippines he took part in the Philipino insurrection, having served in the first outbreak made by Aguinaldo's troops in February, 1899. Following this outbreak came the battle of San Pedro Macti, Pasig River, and the southern campaign with General Swann and engagements at Binang, Calamba, Lucena, Tyavas, Santa Tomas, Atimoncan and Santa Cruz.

Leaving the Philippines, Mr. Foley went with the quartermaster's department on detail to China in 1900 to participate in the Boxer uprising. The troops landed at Tientsin, went inward to Peking to relieve the American legation, and about a month later were ordered back to the Philippines and remained there until November, 1902, performing police and garrison duty. Ordered back to the United States, Mr. Foley arrived in San Francisco, December 24, 1902, remained at Camp Presidio for two months, and ordered then to Fort Clark, Texas, he spent about six months in recruiting service, until he resigned from the army in January, 1904. He was wounded in the engagement at Tyavas in 1899, sustaining a flesh wound in the knee, but with this one exception he enjoyed good health during the eight years he served in the army.

In 1904, the same year he resigned from military duty, Mr. Foley entered the service of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, as rate clerk in the freight office, and five years later was transferred to Montana as agent of the company at Miles City. After some time spent as the Miles City agent Mr. Foley was promoted to the position of traveling freight and passenger agent, and this appointment was succeeded in turn by his promotion to the office of division freight and passenger agent at Miles City in 1916.

Before leaving Milwaukee, Wisconsin, Mr. Foley was married there in April, 1897, to Miss Rose Pattison, who died without issue. In St. Louis, Missouri, in November, 1909, he married Miss Rilla Clements, a daughter of George Clements, a business man of St. Louis. One daughter, Camilla, has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Foley.

Mr. Foley began voting as a democrat, casting his first presidential ballot for Mr. Wilson. In 1911 he served as his party's delegate to the state democratic convention at Great Falls, during a period of four years was treasurer of the Custer County Democratic Committee, and since that time has served continuously as a committeeman. He belongs to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks at Miles City, and is a deputy grand knight of the Knights of Columbus and chairman of its entertaining committee. During the period of the World war Mr. Foley conducted all the war loan and other drives on the Trans-Missouri and the Mussellshell Division of the Milwaukee road, and in many other ways he assisted in war auxiliary work and has always made his presence felt in the promotion of civic and industrial interests.

JOHN ESCHLIMAN has been a resident of Fergus County for over twenty years. For some time he was engaged in contracting and building in and around Lewistown, but for the most part has been a successful rancher and farmer. Mr. Eschliman is probably the leading alfalfa grower in Fergus County, having been one of the first to develop that crop and by intensive experimentation and study having mastered the difficult art of raising the crop for seed.

Mr. Eschliman, who has had a long and varied career in many localities, was born on his father's farm near Massillon, Ohio, January 30, 1851, a son of Abraham and Mary (Horst) Eschliman. His parents were both natives of Pennsylvania. His father went to Ohio with his parents in 1833, and the Horst family located in the eastern part of that state a few years later. The Eschlimans were pioneers in Stark County, Ohio, and the family when they first settled there lived in the woods and their nearest markets for supplies were Cleveland fifty miles away and Pittsburgh ninety miles distant. When the head of the house went for supplies the mother remained to keep guard and prevent the bears from invading the log barn after the small stock of pigs and other animals. Abraham Eschliman was well known in Stark County, serving as a justice of the peace for about twelve years. He afterward moved to Illinois. He was a member of the Methodist Church and in politics a whig. John Eschliman was the second in a family of twelve children, seven daughters and five sons, nine of whom are living. Their father died at the age of seventy-five and the mother at eighty-four.

John Eschliman grew up on his father's farm in Illinois, attending the public schools and working with his father until 1872. He learned the carpenter's trade, and in the spring of 1872 returned to Ohio for his bride. They then settled in Crawford County, Illinois, where he followed farming for several years. In 1876 Mr. Eschliman made the first stage of his journey westward, going overland to Nebraska and locating on the Blue River in Saline County. He was a farmer on that part of the frontier for three years, and then bought land in Washington County, Kansas, farming and stock raising until 1884. He then sold out all his possessions and returned to Canton, Ohio, in order to give his children better advantages at school. While living there he worked with the Canton Steel Works as heater for nine years and one month. In 1893 he returned to Nebraska, and in Butler County worked at his trade as a carpenter. In the fall of that year he went to Julesburg, Colorado, to visit his brother, spent the winter at Denver, working at his trade, and in May, 1894, took employment with the Denver and Rio Grande Railway. In July of that year he returned to Denver and then came on to Billings, Montana, with a party of freighters bound for Grass Range in Fergus County. Here he filed on a homestead, and while proving up worked at his trade at Lewistown. While there he built three houses and was also employed in the Lechmond Department Store. In 1907 Mr. Eschliman took his family to his homestead, and about that time began his efforts in the growing of alfalfa. He had made a thorough study of alfalfa for several years. The seed produced on his land has found an extensive sale throughout Montana, and even in the states of Kansas and Illinois. In 1918 Mr. Eschliman leased his ranch, but is still making his home there. He has been honored with several places of responsibility, such as road supervisor, member of the school board, and has always taken a deep interest in the cause of education. He has also been a member of the Republican Central Committee and a delegate to various conventions. Mr. Eschliman is a republican and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In December, 1872, he married Miss Caroline Miller. She was born in Ohio in 1850 and they were school children together. To their marriage were born eight children, five daughters and three sons. Two of their sons have military records. The oldest child, Oliver, is now living on the home ranch with his father. He married Clara Gouder and had four children, three of whom are living. Clara is the wife of Ed Faulk, of Canton, Ohio, a contracting painter, and of their five children four are living. David, the third child, is a resident of Canton, Ohio, and engaged in the real estate business and has been honored with the office of alderman. He enlisted in 1898 for service in the Spanish-American war, was captain of a company, and served in the Santiago campaign, his troops being re-enforcements to Colonel Roosevelt's Rough Riders. After the war he returned to Canton and married Miss Eubehurdt and they have three children. Minnie, the fourth child of Mr. and Mrs. Eschliman, is the wife of Ed Dean and the mother of three children. They live at Canton. Mary is a resident of Canton. Della, of Canton, married John Campbell and has two living children. Mrs. Alice Richardson lives at Buffalo, New York, and is the mother of two children. John, the youngest son, enlisted in the Tank Division in the spring of 1918, and was with his command in the great battle of the Argonne Forest, where he led the way against the Huns. He was a corporal and master of the Tank Division.

Charles Fox King is one of the buoyant pioneer characters in the Northwest who are still active in business, and is giving a full measure of service for all the strenuous experiences of his early days. Mr. King, who is proprietor of what is probably the oldest taxi cab and transfer business in Montana, and the largest concern of its kind at Helena, at one time drove stage and did freighting when Montana was practically innocent of railroads.

He was born at St. Paul, then little more than a pioneer outpost in the Northwest, on February 28, 1859. He is of English ancestry. His father, Charles Columbus King, was born in 1826 at the City of Wheeling, which subsequently became the birthplace of the State of West Virginia, but at that time was in old Virginia. He was married in Wheeling, moved to St. Paul in 1850, and was one of the first merchants in that pioneer city. He died at St. Paul in 1910, after a residence of sixty years. In the early days when Minnesota was subject to Indian hostilities he served as a member of the Pioneer Guards at St. Paul. He was a democrat, a member of the Episcopal Church and the Masonic fraternity. His wife was Emily Bennett, who was also born in what became the State of West Virginia in 1830. She died in St. Paul in 1917. Of their family of ten children only three are now living: Virginia Miller, who never married and died at St. Paul at the age of sixty-three; Franklin John, a machinist, who died at St. Paul at the age of forty-eight; Emma, who died at St. Paul aged eighteen; Charles F.; Walter T., an accountant living in St. Paul, Minnesota; Nellie Aubrey, unmarried, and living in St. Paul; Jennings, who died in boyhood; Fannie, Mamie and George, all of whom died in childhood at St. Paul.

Charles Fox King received his early education in the public schools of his native city, and left high school when he was about sixteen years of age. He worked in stores and at other employment until his first visit to Montana in 1877. For about six months he was employed by the Government in Custer County. He then went back to St. Paul, worked in the city for a time, and during the summer of 1879 was steamboating on the Red River of the North with headquarters at Winnipeg, Canada. Soon afterward he came again to Montana, and at Fort Assiniboine was a stage driver and trader, carrying passengers and goods to many of the settlements in the western part of the state. He followed that occupation for six years. Mr. King came to Helena in 1885 and followed teaming in the city for two years, and in 1887 established a hat business, which he conducted until 1889. The next two years were spent in the cab business at Seattle, and he then returned to Helena and since then for nearly thirty consecutive years has managed the leading cab and transfer business of the city. Since 1906 a full line of taxi cabs has been added to the equipment, and he is still giving his personal attention to the details of a perfect service. The offices are in the Placer Hotel.

Mr. King is unmarried and resides in the Atlas Block. He is a democrat, a member of the Episcopal Church, is affiliated with Morning Star Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Helena Consistory No. 3 of the Scottish Rite, Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and Helena Aerie No. 16 of the Eagles. He is a former member of the Modern Woodmen of America.

Henry N. Kempton. On another page is contained a review of the fortunes and experiences of one of the most interesting pioneers of Eastern Montana, the late James B. Kempton. One of his sons is Henry N. Kempton of Terry, whose life also contains elements of interest and whose work and influence have gone for the greater development and prosperity of this section.

Henry N. Kempton was born on his father's ranch below Greeley on the Platte River in Colorado, December 31, 1871. He acquired his early education at the ranch in Evans, Colorado, and later at Terry when the family moved to Montana. His last schooling was at old Amity College in College Springs, Iowa. He left school and returned to work on the range about Terry.

As a boy he spent much of his time on the back of a broncho, and, like his older brother, became an expert rider. In time lassoing horses and cattle became a tame sport, and wolf catching was proposed. The two boys had some successful tryouts on a bunch of gray wolves. By riding close to the pack and crowding one of the wolves out of the bunch, it was easy to get him into the loop. In a dispute as to which of the brothers was the better rider, a couple of uncles suggested a contest on the home ranch. The horses were saddled and the conditions were that which ever one could ride and whip his horse without holding on would be declared the winner, and the title fell to Henry.

Henry Kempton gave his whole time to the Kempton "Home Ranch" and lived there until 1916 and continued to be associated with its management until January, 1919, since which date his chief business has been the ice plant at Terry, which had been established several years previously. On moving to Terry in 1916 he occupied his new home and rooming house on Logan Avenue, a ten-room, generous, modern home for the family, and one which also dispenses hospitality and comfort to transient guests.

Mr. Kempton has had many experiences that identify him with the old time cattlemen and cowboys. He has been all over the Northwest country handling stock, and at one time he trailed 400 head from Terry to Camp Crook, shipping stock from there to Omaha. Mr. Kempton is a republican and cast his first political vote in 1896.

In Miles City, Montana, December 16, 1906, he married Miss Charlotte Manguson, a native of Vermland, Sweden. Her parents were Magnus Brenson and Cajsa Elofson. Mrs. Brenson came to the United States in 1903 with her younger daughter, following Mrs. Kempton, who crossed over in 1902. Mrs. Kempton was employed as a housemaid in Terry for a time and later at Miles City. She is one of four children: Mrs. Sanford S. Kempton, of Kildron, South Dakota; Mrs. Augusta Braley, of Terry; Mrs. Henry N. Kempton; and Hedwig, who married Ole Waswig, of Terry. Mr. and Mrs. Kempton have a family of five children, named Albert, Helen, Millie, Oswald and Freda.

Andrew Green. Widely known in many parts of Montana as a successful building and construction contractor, Andrew Green has been through a most interesting variety of experiences. Few men have seen more of their native country, and he knows much of pioneer days in Montana.

Mr. Green, a resident of Lewistown, was born at Paterson, New Jersey, May 24, 1865, sixth in a family of twelve children born to Thomas and Dora (Burger) Green. His father was a street contractor but retired fifteen years before his death.

Andrew Green had limited opportunities in the way of schooling. As a boy his first regular employment was in the silk mills at Paterson, beginning at wages of $1.50 a week, sweeping out, and later at quill winding. Then successively he stripped tobacco in a tobacco factory, worked in a shirt factory, was employed in the Rodgers Locomotive Works, and did much common labor with pick and shovel. By hard and practical experience he learned the brick laying and plastering trade. He followed this for about a year at Philadelphia, and then took passage at New York City in the winter of 1886 bound for San Francisco. He crossed the Isthmus of Panama on the railroad. He worked at San Francisco and then went around by sea to Seattle, Washington, and followed his trade at Seattle, Tacoma, Port Townsend and other places. He kept up with the progress of the building boom through Portland, Salem and Eugene, Oregon. He returned to California by rail to Los Angeles, worked in Sacramento, Oakland, at Salt Lake City, Leadville and Denver, Colorado, on to Kansas City, back to St. Louis, from St. Louis went to Chicago, and followed his trade at Kalamazoo, Detroit, Buffalo, Niagara and other points in the East. Thus his experience covers many of the important cities from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

In 1896 Mr. Green went back to Seattle, Washington, with the idea of continuing his journey to Alaska. Failing of securing a passage on a steamer, he returned to Chicago, and in the winter of 1897 arrived at Butte, Montana. The following spring he was working on some of the university buildings at Missoula, and then worked at lining furnaces on smelters at Anaconda, Helena and Great Falls. He came to Lewistown by stage coach, and here engaged in a very successful contracting and building business until 1902. His firm was Green & Smith. They built the Bright Hotel, also the Green Block, owned by Mr. Green, and many other structures. They were also the firm who took contracts to move the old Day Hotel from Main to Broadway, and then gave this noted old time hostelry its brick addition.

In 1902 Mr. Green took up a homestead two miles from Lewistown on the Castle Butte road. He has increased his landed possessions until they comprise 640 acres. For several years in addition to handling his homestead he was in the coal business as secretary of the Spring Creek Company. In later years he has devoted his time chiefly to grain raising and general farming. Mr. Green is a stockholder in the Lewistown State Bank, is a member of Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and also belongs to the Woodmen of the World and the Improved Order of Red Men. Politically he supports the republican party.

In 1898 Mr. Green married Miss Sarah Ann Day, who was born at Mineral Point, Wisconsin, and is a member of an old and prominent family of Montana. They had two children: Thomas M., a student in the Ferguson County High School; and Chester A., who died at the age of five and a half years.

Lowell C. Burns. Of the business men of Baker who have found success in the handling of realty, one who has made rapid progress, is Lowell C. Burns, who has been identified with real estate lines since 1913, but who has been a resident of Baker since December, 1909. Mr. Burns is a native of Sullivan County, Missouri, and was born on a farm near Green City, that state, June 19, 1883, a son of George S. Burns.

Enoch W. Burns, the paternal grandfather of Lowell C. Burns, came from Eastern Kentucky and settled on a farm in Ralls County, Missouri, later moving to Sullivan County, where he died in 1909, at the advanced age of ninety-three years. His wife was a Miss Boyd, who left her husband five sons and a daughter. Of these, William, James and Wesley, and their father, were soldiers of the Union during the Civil war.

George S. Burns, father of Lowell C., was born in Ralls County, Missouri, and was reared near New London, where he was limitedly educated. He was reared as a farmer, but later entered merchandising at Winigan, Missouri, and completed his career there, passing away November 17, 1916, at the age of fifty-seven years. He married Julia E. Shaver, who was born in Putnam County, Missouri, a daughter of George W. and Anna (Lipp) Shaver, natives of Germany who became farming people. Mrs. Burns, who was the youngest of eleven children, passed away in 1901. She and her husband reared the following children: Nora, who became Mrs. E. C. Millay and died at Kirksville, Missouri, in 1908; Lowell C.; Rev. Asa O., of Mexico, Missouri; Sylvia D., the wife of

J. W. Bundridge, of Moberly, Missouri; Goldie Ruth, who died unmarried in 1916; Ruby Icle, who is a teacher in a business college at Moberly; and Elwood McKinley, who is with the Sweeney Auto School of Kansas City, Missouri. Of these children Rev. Asa O. Burns is one of the accomplished classical instructors in Hardin College of Mexico, Missouri, and prominent as a public speaker, who is also widely known in the field of evangelistic work. Doctor Burns, as his state knows and calls him, outlined, at the suggestion and with the aid of his brother Lowell, when he was seventeen years old, a course of study to cover a period of twelve years, and this plan he followed without resources other than those he provided himself as he went along.

Lowell C. Burns continued his farm experience until he reached the age of fourteen years, at which time his father engaged in merchandising at Winigan, Missouri, and in this business the son was trained. For six years he followed merchandising, and left his native state when he came to Montana, locating at Billings, where his maiden work was as ticket clerk for the Burlington and North Pacific Railroad. He was thus engaged for a year and one-half, and then went to Bridger, Montana, where he was associated with the Bridger Coal and Improvement Company until he came on east and engaged in merchandising at Miles City. This venture proved eventful but unprofitable, and he left that community ready to begin life over. Mr. Burns' prospecting for a location resulted in his selection of Baker as a point to make another start. The Milwaukee road had built in here the year before, and this country had been opened to settlement recently, a fact which led Mr. Burns to believe that it would be fully populated sometime. So he came into the Village of Baker, then with a population of some fifty people, and entered the employ of J. Land & Son as bookkeeper, a capacity in which he earned his first dollar in Fallon County. He served this firm about three and one-half years and then opened a real estate office as the successor to W. R. Barber, who had been dealing in real estate and who was also United States commissioner.

Through Mr. Burns' efforts as an advertiser of the state at least this end of it has been placed before the homeseeker and investor to its advantage. He placed an agricultural exhibit of Fallon County farm products before the people of St. Paul during the Farmers Equity Convention in 1916, and has lost no opportunity since to give the world the truth about the opportunities for the homeseeker in Eastern Montana. His work is done as a broker, and his sales have occurred among landseekers from the states of Minnesota and Iowa. His aspirations personally have taken the form of the development of the agricultural, educational and industrial field about Baker. He has been connected with the public schools as a board member a number of years, which schools comprise twelve grades and provide for education and graduation of pupils who enter, and are affiliated with the state educational institutions of Montana. Only three classes have gone out of this high school carrying its diploma and to take positions of trust and as good citizens everywhere or anywhere.

Mr. Burns was married at Winigan, Missouri, May 3, 1907, to Miss Lula B. Wallace, whose father, Isaiah Wallace, came with his wife from Nova Scotia and settled among the Missouri pioneers. Mrs. Burns was born in Linn County, Missouri, within twelve miles of the birthplace of General Pershing, December 17, 1884, and is one of a family of eleven children. Four children have been born to her and her husband: Gretta Lorain, Gwendolin Persus and Richard Wallace, who reside with their parents; and Gordon H., who died in infancy.

Mr. Burns affiliates with the republican party and voted first for Theodore Roosevelt for President. His Masonic connections are with the Blue Lodge and Chapter, the former at Baker and the latter at Miles City.

Neptune Lynch, whose record as a pioneer is properly told in this work, was born in County Galway, Ireland, in 1824, and acquired all his education before leaving his native land. He came to this country at the age of fourteen, and leaving Castle Garden rode horseback across half the continent, at a time when there were no railroads, to Roanoke, Howard County, Missouri. There he made his home with his Uncle Lynch to the age of twenty. He then married Miss Elizabeth S. Alexander. They became the parents of five children: Charles A., who is a resident of Kalispell, Montana, and has three sons; James D., who died in Calgary, Canada, thirty years ago; Neptune, Jr., who died at Plains twenty years ago, leaving two daughters and one son; Mrs. Elizabeth Lee Grinnell, who died in Spokane eleven years ago; and Mrs. Mary Lynch Boyer, a resident of Plains, and proprietor of the Hotel Northern of that city.

In 1849, leaving his wife and two children with his uncle in Missouri, Neptune Lynch went by way of Panama to California, and remained in the far West six years. Returning to Missouri, after settling his uncle's estate he gathered his family around him, and in 1860 started again for the setting sun. His first location was at Denver; in 1862 he removed to Boise, Idaho, and in 1866 came to Montana, first locating at Helena, and for two years farming near the present site of Townsend. In the spring of 1870, following the Cedar Creek gold excitement, he joined that stampede and in November came to "Horse Plains," now Plains. Here he followed farming and stock raising the rest of his life. The family in the early days had frequent troubles with Indians, and endured many other hardships. One time the household was confined to an unvarying diet of potatoes for three weeks, and were thankful for that. There were no schools nor churches, but despite the lack of such advantages the Lynch home was a very happy one. Neptune Lynch was a democrat in politics and a Catholic in religion. For several years while living in Missouri he studied medicine with Doctor Blake in that state. He obtained a knowledge that was useful to him and his family and to the entire community in Montana. He was able to handle all ordinary cases of illness in his own family, and was the doctor and nurse for all the people who lived in Plains during the seventies and eighties. In 1893 Mr. Lynch was in a railway accident, losing his left leg just below the knee, and suffered a great deal and was never quite the same strong man afterward. He was a rugged character, strong, kindly, sympathetic and greatly beloved by all who knew him. His generosity caused him to divide all that he had.

His death occurred May 25, 1898, as a result of pneumonia, and his widow, who survived him six years, died of the same disease. Her people were Kentuckians, and she was born in that state, going with her family at the age of four years to Missouri. She was a great-grandniece to Daniel Boone. Her grandfather's name was Sidney Logan and her father's name John Alexander. Neptune Lynch served for a number of years as postmaster at Plains, finally resigning that office in 1883.

Edward E. Gaines, M. D. A skilled physician, a high-minded citizen, Doctor Gaines has thoroughly earned the esteem and affection of the people of Wilbaux and the surrounding territory since he located there in November, 1907. A physician is always more or less of a public servant, and Doctor Gaines has emphasized that feature of his work, and has given himself with unremitting energy and faithfulness to all the duties imposed upon him both professionally and as a private citizen.

Doctor Gaines was born in Vernon County, Wisconsin, May 19, 1862. His grandfather, Theodore Gaines, was a native of New York state, and a pioneer settler in Wisconsin. He came West from Connecticut in the early '50s, and made the journey to Lake County, Illinois, with ox teams. While passing through the city of Chicago his wagons were stuck in the muddy streets. His trade was scythe grinding. Theodore Gaines married Adaline Peck, and of their three sons and two daughters the following are still living: John J., of Spokane, Washington; James, of Sparta, Wisconsin; and Mrs. F. M. Sears, of St. Paul. Theodore Gaines was born July 22, 1810, and died at Viroqua, Wisconsin, in 1862.

Levi Gaines, father of Doctor Gaines, was born at Hartford, Connecticut, May 26, 1832, and had a common school education. He spent a seven years' apprenticeship as a carpenter and joiner, and followed that trade throughout his active career. He lived in Lake County, Illinois, for a time and in 1856 went to Viroqua, Wisconsin, accompanied by his wife and child and driving two yoke of oxen. He built most of the buildings of that new and developing town. For a physical disability he was rejected when he volunteered in the Civil war. He was a republican, a member of the Congregational Church and affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Levi Gaines died in September, 1905. He married Cornelia Stevens, whose father, Eber C. Stevens, was a New York man and spent many years as a farmer and broker at Rockford and Freeport, Illinois. Mrs. Levi Gaines, who died August 10, 1910, was the mother of two sons, Eugene and Doctor Gaines, the former a resident of Los Angeles.

Doctor Gaines completed his early education in the Viroqua High School, and while there he was employed as a drug clerk and learned the profession of pharmacy, which he practiced in different places in Wisconsin. He also studied medicine at Viroqua under Dr. H. A. Chase, and in 1882 entered Rush Medical College at Chicago, where he was graduated February 26, 1886. For a year of that time he worked as a druggist. Doctor Gaines practiced medicine at Rhinelander, Wisconsin, for three years, and then for seven years at Cashton, Wisconsin, where he was also prominent in local affairs, taking an active part in the movement to incorporate the village, served as village officer and as health officer and county physician. His home for many years before coming to Montana was at La Farge, Wisconsin, where he was not only burdened with a busy practice as a physician but bore an equally prominent part in civic affairs, helping incorporate the town, serving as health officer, and as member of the school board for many years his efforts carried the school bonds voted for the erection of the La Farge school building. He was also a member of the council, president of the village, and his name is held in high esteem in that locality.

Doctor Gaines considers the years spent in Montana as the most strenuous of his career. He has always engaged in general practice and has been honored with the positions of county and city health officer and has contributed in other ways to the improvement of the community. During the war he was a member of and examining physician for the local Selective Draft Board, and he and his wife were active in Red Cross and other war auxiliary movements. During the influenza epidemic Doctor Gaines was the only physician in the county, and literally wore himself out attending to his patients, while Mrs. Gaines did hospital work as a nurse during the epidemic. Doctor and Mrs. Gaines have contributed to the Roosevelt Memorial Fund. In Wibaux they have built a six-room bungalow, modern in every particular, located on Esther Street in the Davis Addition.

Doctor Gaines began voting as a republican, casting his ballot for James G. Blaine in 1884. He became an Odd Fellow at Cashton, Wisconsin, and since coming to Wibaux has taken his Masonic degrees and has done the work of Blue Lodge No. 81.

At Antioch, Illinois, Doctor Gaines married for his first wife Miss Agnes LaPlant. She was the mother of three children. Harry J., the oldest, who was registered in the draft but was not called, is principal of the high school at North Crandon, Wisconsin, and finished his education at Beloit College. He married Lura Osborne, and their three children are Marjorie, John and Earl. The second of the family, Earl Gaines, secretary and treasurer of the Wheatland Lumber Company of Harlowton, Montana, married for his first wife Nina Anderson, who died, leaving a son, Eugene, and for his second wife married Cecil Boufelette, who is mother of a son, George Boufelette Gaines. The third child of Doctor Gaines is Gertrude.

At Cashton, Wisconsin, Doctor Gaines married Miss Olga Fenholt. She was born at Christiania, Norway. Her father, John Fenholt, who married Frederica Berg was a stage man in Christiania, and after his death his family came to the United States, locating at Cashton, Wisconsin, where Mrs. Gaines grew up and received her education. She was an only child. Doctor and Mrs. Gaines have a son, Dwight, born February 14, 1902.

GEORGE W. CLEVELAND. Specific mention is made of many of the worthy citizens of Carter County within the pages of this work, citizens who have figured in the growth and development of this favored locality and whose interests have been identified with its every phase of progress, each contributing in his sphere of action to the well being of the community in which he resides and to the advancement of its normal and legitimate growth. Among this number is he whose name appears above, present assessor of Carter County, peculiar interest attaching to his career from the fact that more than forty years have elapsed since he first came personally into touch with this locality.

George W. Cleveland was born at Davenport, Iowa, on August 3, 1860, the son of Jeff and Anna (Joyce) Cleveland. The father was born in New York state, where he was reared and received a limited education. Early in life he accompanied the family on their removal to Michigan, where, eventually, he became a farmer and railroad contractor. During the Civil war he took an active part in the recruiting service, serving as wagon master in getting men started for the front. He had charge of the transfer company in St. Louis, Missouri, where he lived during the early years of the war. Finally he became a freighter and merchant in the Black Hills, though prior to that he had operated a woodyard at Sioux Point, removing from there to Sioux City in 1868, where he remained until 1876, when he made his final move to Deadwood. His death occurred at Spearfish in 1894. At Cynthiana, Kentucky, Jeff Cleveland married Anna Joyce, a native of that place and whose sympathies during the Civil war were with the South. She died at Ekalaka, Montana, 1907, at the age of sixty-four years. To this worthy couple were born the following children: George W., the immediate subject of this review; Edward, deceased; Isabel, Mrs. B. F. Francis, of Fresno, California; James, of Carter County, Montana; Ella, wife of A. J. Speelman, of Ekalaka; and Nannie, of San Francisco.

George W. Cleveland was reared under the parental roof, but his school education was somewhat limited. However, this deficiency has been abundantly made up by much reading, close habits of observation of men and events and extensive business experience, so that today he is considered a well-informed man on general topics. While but a mere child he accompanied his parents on their removals, first up the Missouri River to Sioux City, and later to Sioux Point, remaining with his parents until his marriage, and during this time contributing his share to the family exchequer. He established his own home in the Black Hills as a farmer, his home being located about twelve miles northeast of Spearfish, where he took a pre-emption. This he relinquished in 1894 and came to Montana, locating where he now lives, on the head of Cripple Creek, where he entered a homestead at the foot of Conger Hill and built a dugout for his pioneer home. As soon as he had his family established he set to work to erect a better home, and by the next fall had completed a comfortable log house.

While at that time Mr. Cleveland owned a few head of horses and cattle, he needed some ready cash and to obtain this he began freighting from Belle Fourche to Miles City and Wibaux. He followed this vocation for fifteen years, and through it he was enabled to remain on his first land and to prove up on it. He has developed the place, which now comprises 480 acres, and one of the features of the ranch is the famous Cleveland Spring, which furnishes water sufficient to irrigate ten acres, the flow never being decreased by the most extreme droughts.

At Crawford, Nebraska, where Mr. Cleveland was working temporarily in the construction of the B. & M. Railroad, he married Mattie Miller, who was born in Iowa in January, 1870. Her father, Benjamin H. Miller, had moved to Crawford from Hazelton, Iowa. His children, seven in number, were as follows: Mattie, Mrs. Cleveland; Warren, of Douglas, Wyoming; Benjamin, of Crawford, Nebraska; Mrs. Gertrude Hodge, of Crawford; Ulster, of Casper, Wyoming; Howard, of Casper; and Mrs. Laura Sullenberger, who died at Sundance, Wyoming. To Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland have been born the following children: Inez, the wife of Herbert Stoddard, of Cedar Butte, South Dakota; Grover, George, Warren, Kyle, James, Frank, Wealthy and Dora.

Politically Mr. Cleveland has always given his support to the democratic party. He was serving his district as school trustee when he was elected assessor of Custer County. In the bill creating Carter County he was named the first county assessor, and at the ensuing election was chosen to succeed himself, being the present incumbent of the office. He organized the work of his office and has assessed the county three times. In all life's relations he has been true and faithful to duty and the trusts reposed in him, and thereby he has won the unqualified confidence and respect of his fellow men.

LEO BEAN, one of the leading business men of Baker, and a man who has earned the respect of the people of this city, is a representative of the Chinese nation. He was born in the province of Canton, China, on July 11, 1866, a son of Leo Yee, who spent twenty-five years in the United States as a shoemaker and cobbler and then returned to China. He is still living and resides at Honan, China. Leo Bean is the only child of his father.

In 1880 he sailed from Hong Kong, China, for Portland, Oregon, accompanying some friends to the New World, and since his landing here has made this country his home. He spent a year in Portland and then went to San Francisco, California, where he attended a Chinese school to complete the studies begun in his native land. For the subsequent four years he continued a student, although during a portion of the time had to attend school at night, working as a porter in a saloon to earn his living. In 1893 he came to Montana, and in December of that year secured employment in a Chinese laundry, working there and in a restaurant for eighteen months, saving his money carefully. Having by that time been able to accumulate a little capital, he borrowed some more money from a cousin and embarked in a restaurant business of his own, conducting it under the name of the Billings Restaurant, and during the dozen years he owned it he made his first permanent success. Leaving Billings, he went to Beaumont, Texas, and for five years conducted a restaurant there under the name of the Canton Restaurant. In this undertaking Mr. Bean had a partner, one of his countrymen.

Returning to Billings, Mr. Bean opened the California Restaurant and conducted it in partnership with another countryman. A year later he began prospecting in Eastern Montana to find a location that suited him for permanent occupancy, and found what he wanted at Baker, where he located in 1909, although he continued to own his Billings restaurant for a time, or until he sold it at a profit.

Mr. Bean bought the Hitch lunch counter, which he subsequently enlarged into a restaurant, taking over additional space built for him, and occupied the place until the building was lost through the misfortune of his landlord. He then bought a lot on which he erected his own business building, and in it established the Montana Cafe. His friends called him "Lew Jim," the name having been bestowed upon him at Billings, and as his Chinese name is one difficult to translate into English he has kept the one given him by one of his associates. His parents named him Leo, which has since been corrupted into Lew. Officially he is known as Leo Bean, and all of his legal transactions are made under that name, it having come to him as a result of an error on the part of the court officer who made out his first legal papers at Billings.

Leo Bean has not confined himself to the restaurant business at Baker, but had accomplished much of importance there, especially in the line of making permanent improvements, and owns three business houses on Main Street, eight dwellings and a laundry building. Mr. Bean provided the capital for establishing the Sam Lee Laundry, a steam plant which accommodates the people of Baker and the surrounding territory. He also owns four houses in the Barstow addition to Baker, two lots in the Savage addition to Baker and forty acres of land three miles east of Baker in what is called the "oil land" locality.

In every movement started for the betterment of Baker Mr. Bean has been conspicuous in his willingness to give it support, and his money has been liberally donated to provide entertainment for the people of Baker. He has shown a special interest in baseball, of which sport he is very fond, and has sacrificed time and money willingly and voluntarily in behalf of the Baker team, driving the players in his machine to points over the circuit so that match games might be promptly played. A member of the Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Bean was a hard worker in the interest of county division whereby Fallon County came into being, and Baker was made the county seat. His sympathies are with the republican party, and while his citizenship has not yet been established, so he is not a voter, he is a close student of public matters, and has sound ideas with reference to them and political issues.

During the World war Mr. Bean entered into the spirit of the times and bought bonds of all of the loan issues, and his purse was gladly opened for all of the war drives for war work and relief.

The success which has attended Mr. Bean is all the more remarkable when it is remembered that he has been handicapped by the unfortunate prejudice ill-informed people used to hold against his race. Not understanding the wonderful knowledge, resources and history of China, ignorant people could not appreciate, until they were shown beyond any possibility of question, the splendid qualities of these quiet, hard-working and thrifty sons of the Orient. Little by little this unjust prejudice is melting away, and men like Mr. Bean are winning their rightful position in various communities where their generosity, unexampled business acumen, kindly natures and sterling characters are receiving the recognition due them. Baker has many reasons to be grateful to Mr. Bean for what he has done for it, and his career is being followed with interest by the numerous friends he has made for himself both in Fallon County and elsewhere. On Christmas day of 1919 the town people gave him a watch, engraved, which was bought by public subscription and presented by the mayor for the good he had done in the community.

CHARLES W. GREENING, vice president of the Hardin State Bank, is one of the experienced bankers of the Big Horn Valley, whose connection with the finances of Montana dates back to 1908, when he came to Melstone as cashier of the private bank of Wiley, Clark & Felton. Not long after Mr. Greening became associated with this institution it was chartered as a state bank, with a capital of $20,000, but since then a surplus of like amount has been accumulated. Its deposits are $250,000, and dividends were paid after three years. This bank handles a large farm loan business and has been an important factor in the development of the agricultural resources of this section. Mr. Greening left the bank as cashier several years ago, but is still its vice president and heavy stockholder.

Mr. Greening joined Mr. Clark and Mr. Wiley in the undertaking of opening the bank at Sumatra, Montana, first as a private institution under the name of Wiley, Clark & Greening, and this was later chartered as the Sumatra State Bank, with a capital stock of $20,000. This bank has deposits aggregating $250,000, and of it Mr. Greening is vice president and a director and stockholder. After the first year this bank paid dividends.

Wiley, Clark & Greening organized a private bank at Ingomar, Montana, which was chartered as the Ingomar State Bank and in the fall of 1919 it was nationalized as the First National Bank of Ingomar, with a capitalization of $25,000, and it now has deposits of $350,000. Mr. Greening also holds the office of vice president of this institution, and it has paid a dividend ever since the early days of its history.

Another bank with which Mr. Greening is also connected is the Vananda State Bank at Vananda, organized and chartered as a state institution in 1917 by Mr. Greening and A. T. Hibbard. Its capitalization is $20,000, and its deposits are about $125,000. Mr. Greening is on its directorate, and the board has just paid the stockholders the first dividends.

The Farmers State Bank of Jordan, with which Mr. Greening has been connected, was organized in the summer of 1918 by Mr. Greening, Mr. Wiley and Mr. Henderson, with a capital stock of $20,000. The deposits are $159,000, and quite recently it has been chartered as the First National Bank of Jordan.

The Hardin State Bank was bought from the original owners in April, 1919, and during the first year $10,000 was added as a surplus to the original stock and surplus of $75,000, and a substantial dividend paid to the stockholders. All of these banks are sound institutions and the men associated with them are of such standing in their communities that their connection with such organizations is the highest kind of a guarantee of their financial strength.

Mr. Greening has also been an important factor in the cattle business at Mosby, Montana, where he owns a ranch and is an extensive producer of beef, which he ships to outside markets. He is president of the Weede Cattle Company, and in 1908 joined the ranks of the homesteaders, taking a claim south of Melstone. He served that city as its first mayor, and for several years was president of its school board and president of the Commercial Club. Since coming to Hardin he has been making an aggressive campaign to bring in outside capital and settlers. Now, as always, he is a republican, and strong in his support of his party's principles. He was elected a senator from Big Horn County in the fall of 1920.

Charles W. Greening was born in Mower County, Minnesota, on July 26, 1882, and he began his educational training at Grand Meadow, Minnesota, continued it at Northfield Academy in 1900, and then entered Carleton College and was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1904. That same year he went to Minneapolis, Minnesota, and while working during the day in the Northwestern National Bank studied at night in the law school of the University of Minnesota, from which he was graduated in 1908, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws, and was admitted to the bar of that state, and, leaving the bank that same week, he started West, reaching Miles City, Montana, in July, from whence he went on to Melstone and started upon his remarkable banking career in this region, acting in this instance upon the advice of Mr. H. B. Wiley of Miles City. The subsequent events proved that Mr. Wiley not only had a clear understanding of conditions and opportunities, but that he was an excellent judge of men and their capabilities.

Mr. Greening is a son of Charles F. and Clara E. (Caswell) Greening, natives of England and Illinois, respectively. The father became a Union soldier, enlisting from Wisconsin and serving under General Banks and later General Sherman, and receiving his honorable discharge at the termination of the war. He then came to Minnesota, met his future wife at LeRoy, that state, and after they were married he located in that place and for a time was engaged there in conducting a hardware business. Later he went into the banking business at Grand Meadow, and died there in 1915, when just seventy years of age. His widow still lives at Grand Meadow. Their children were as follows: Elgar F., who is president of the Exchange Bank of Grand Meadow; Mrs. S. M. Croft, of Washington, District of Columbia; Elmore J., who is cashier of the Exchange Bank at Grand Meadow; and Charles W., whose name heads this review.

On November 12, 1911, Charles W. Greening was united in marriage at Carroll, Iowa, to Miss Jewell Ross, a graduate of Drake University and a native of Indiana. She is a daughter of W. T. and Clara Ross, the former of whom is city engineer and mayor of Carroll, Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Greening have two children, both born on November 22, two years apart, their names being Shirley and Charles Ross Greening.

W. F. Stufft. The most elaborate history is perforce a merciless abridgement, the historian being obliged to select his facts and materials from manifold details and to marshal them in concise and logical order. This applies to specific as well as generic history, and in the former category is included the interesting and important department of biography. In every life of honor and usefulness there is no dearth of interesting situations and incidents, and yet in summing up such a career as that of Mr. Stufft the writer must needs touch only on the more salient facts, giving the keynote of the character and eliminating all that is superfluous to the continuity of the narrative. The gentleman whose name appears above has led an active and useful life, not entirely devoid of the exciting, and today is ranked by universal consent among the leading and representative citizens of his section of the state.

W. F. Stufft was born in Bedford County, Pennsylvania, and is the son of Michael and Margaret (Knisley) Stufft, of whose nine children the subject is the fifth in order of birth. His mother was descended from English and German ancestry. Mr. Stufft received his educational training in the public schools of his native county and was reared on the paternal farmstead. When he was twenty-two years of age he migrated to Nebraska, where he became engaged in farming and stock raising, in which his efforts were rewarded with a fair degree of success. He remained there until 1897, when he decided to go further west and made the overland trip to Flathead Valley, Montana. The trip was made in true Western style, in covered wagons, and required two months and ten days, they having left Nebraska on May 12th and arrived at their new location on July 22d. They had two mule teams and fine equipment for those days, so they really traveled with some degree of comfort. Mr. Stufft purchasd a homestead of 160 acres in what was then a comparatively unsettled country and in which he was numbered among the pioneers. He energetically set to work to improve the opportunities that were here presented, made substantial improvements and prosperity attended his efforts. Some time later he bought 800 acres of land in Glacier County, Montana, and to the improvement of this tract he has devoted himself indefatigably. Mr. Stufft is engaged in farming and stock raising, giving special attention to thoroughbred hogs, principally of the Duroc Jersey breed. He has been remarkably successful as a breeder and it is noteworthy that he has exhibited his animals at the Nebraska and Iowa State Fairs and at fairs at Salem, Oregon, and Spokane, Washington, and that at these contests he has won more blue ribbons than any other exhibitor in his class. Mr. Stufft is entitled to considerable credit for the persistency with which he has endeavored to elevate the standard of livestock raised in the Flathead Valley, having brought the first thoroughbred hogs to this locality. He has built a beautiful modern home, well constructed and conveniently arranged, and which is luxuriously furnished. The barns and outbuildings are also of permanent construction and convenient arrangement, in order to minimize the labor of attending to the stock. The main barn is 64 by 126 feet in size.

Politically Mr. Stufft is a stanch supporter of the republican ticket and takes a keen interest in the trend of public events. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, which he joined twenty-one years ago and in which he holds membership longer than any other member at Kalispell. He has advanced to the degrees of the Encampment and Canton. He is also a member of the United Workmen, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Court of Honor. Religiously he is a Presbyterian.

Mr. Stufft was married to Maria M. Fickes, who was born in Bedford County, Pennsylvania, the daughter of John W. and Rebecca (Weisel) Fickes. She was educated in the public schools of her native county. To Mr. and Mrs. Stufft have been born three children, namely: D. F., who is a progressive and successful rancher at Cutbank, married Agnes Schell, and they have two children, Esther and William F.; Nettie, who is a graduate of the Kalispell High School, became the wife of M. R. Baldwin, proprietor of a garage at Cutbank, and they have a son, Daniel; Lydia is the wife of L. Kent, an employe of the Great Northern Railroad at Kalispell, and they have one son, Lemoine S.

Mr. and Mrs. Stufft have been witnesses of the wonderful transformation which has taken place in Western Montana during the years since they first entered the Flathead Valley, and they have richly earned their share of the general prosperity which has blessed this section of the country. Mr. Stufft has been recognized as a man always ready to endorse and support every worthy public movement, and has done his part to elevate the moral, religious and educational standard of the community. He has seen many parts of the country and is enthusiastic over the Flathead country as a place of permanent residence, the winters and summers both being more nearly temperate than most other sections of the country. He is a strong and continual booster for Montana. Mrs. Stufft was an enthusiastic worker for the Red Cross during the recent World war, having personally knit many socks and made many hospital shirts. The Flathead County Chapter of the Red Cross covered itself with glory, and Mrs. Stufft is justifiably proud of her part in the glorious work. Mr. and Mrs. Stufft are deservedly popular in the community where so many of their active years have been spent, for they have been generous and unselfish in their attitude toward all things affecting the welfare of the whole community.

Charles S. Einsel is prominently known to the community of Piniele as the cashier of the Piniele State Bank, as a homesteader of a portion of the townsite and as one of the founders of Piniele. He traces his descent in direct line to the founder of the family on American shores, Henry Einsel, who was brought to the United States from Germany when he was but a year or two old. Nothing definite is known of the family home in the Fatherland, as the father Henry died while crossing the ocean and nothing is known of other children. The mother went with her son Henry to York County, Pennsylvania, and was afterward married to a Mr. Miller, by whom she had children. Henry Einsel in his youth learned the saddler's trade, following the occupation until his removal with his family in 1805 by wagon from York County, Pennsylvania, to Fairfield County, Ohio, a distance of four or five hundred miles. On their arrival in the Middle West they located on a quarter section of heavily timbered land eight miles southeast of Lancaster, and there Henry Einsel followed farming and stock raising until his death a few years later. At his death he left his widow with eight small children, the eldest being then only fifteen years old, and the youngest, Lewis, was less than a year old.

John Henry Einsel, a son of the Rev. Lewis Einsel, was reared on a farm near LaFayette, Indiana, he having moved there with his parents when ten years old. In addition to a district school education he received a regular training in a business college. In the year 1878 he and his brother Ephraim moved to Waco, York County, Nebraska, where John H. embarked in the lumber and implement business, but later removed to the Town of York in that state and entered the banking business. This was in the year 1882, and in the following year, owing to the building of railroads in the south middle part of Nebraska, he and his brother Ephraim moved to Phelps Center in Phelps County, with the expectation of a railroad coming through the town, for at that time the survey ran that way. But after their homes and banking buildings had been completed the survey of the new cut off of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad from Kenesaw to Oxford was changed to go some eight miles south and pass through what is now the town of Holdrege. The Einsel brothers accordingly moved all their improvement to Holdrege and were among the first to locate there. Soon afterward they built a two-story brick bank building, known then as the Commercial State Bank of Holdrege, and it stood on the site now occupied by the F. Johnson Company. About 1889 the Einsel brothers built the stone banking building opposite the brick structure and moved their banking business there.

After a time John H. Einsel turned his attention more to outside interests, looking after their properties and also their live stock interests. They had a large ranch twelve miles west of Holdrege and feed yards just outside of the town, and they fed many cattle. They also handled many western cattle, shipping from Western Nebraska, Colorado and Wyoming.

John H. Einsel subsequently disposed of his interests at Holdrege and moved to Los Angeles, California, and later to Pomona in that state, where his death occurred in the fall of 1891. His life's span covered a period of forty-five years, and they were years devoted to his home, to the gaining of many true and loyal friends, to the promotion of all that was good and uplifting and to the interests of the communities in which he resided. His was truly a noble character. He was an active worker both in republican politics and the Masonic fraternity.

John H. Einsel married Elizabeth Willis, who was born in Chicago and moved with her parents to Fulton County, Illinois, during her infancy. A few years later her parents migrated to York County, Nebraska, homesteading a few miles north of Waco, and her father afterward carried mail and passengers between Lincoln and Grand Island before the railroads were built through that country. In this manner he was able to support a family of twelve very comfortably until the railroads were built to this point and gave them a market for their grain and stock. After the death of her husband in California Mrs. Einsel returned to Holdrege, Nebraska, and made her home with Rev. Lewis Einsel and his wife until her marriage to Herbert W. Scott on the 2d of August, 1893. They continued to live in Holdrege until the fall of 1896, moving then to Hastings, Nebraska, where Mr. Scott died in April, 1908. He, too, possessed a noble character and gained the respect and admiration of those who came to know him. Since the death of her second husband Mrs. Scott has spent much time in travel, having made a trip to Europe and many trips from coast to coast in this country. Her home, however, is still at Hastings.

Charles S. Einsel, a son of John H. and Elizabeth Willis Einsel, was born in York County, Neraska, August 8, 1883, and was but eight years of age when his father died. The same year of his birth the parents removed to Phelps Center, Nebraska, then a new country and in advance of the railroad, and the following year the name of the town was changed to Holdrege. There the son attended the public schools and also the schools of Hastings, Nebraska, and supplemented this training by a college course in Michigan. In 1901, after leaving the schoolroom, he took charge of a cattle ranch near Haigler, Nebraska, and two years later, in October, 1903, moved to Axtell, Nebraska, where he purchased a stock of hardware in association with his step-father, Herbert W. Scott. In 1905 Mr. Einsel purchased the latter's interest and continued alone in the store until August 18, 1907, when the entire business portion of Axtell was destroyed by fire. As he carried very little insurance on his stock of goods Mr. Einsel was not in a position to resume his mercantile interests, and in the spring of 1908 he began work for the International Harvester Company as a traveling salesman, but after a year on the road took charge of a general mercantile store for his mother at Wilsonville, Nebraska. A few months later the store was sold and he then moved to a farm a short distance from Axtell, where he has been engaged in farming and stock raising during the past two years.

Leaving his native state of Nebraska, Mr. Einsel with his family made the overland journey to Montana, where he arrived on the 28th of September, 1910. The nearest stage line was Alzada, and there he hired a buggy to bring him the remainder of the way to the present site of Piniele. He was alone in the community at that time as far as neighbors were concerned. He at once entered his homestead, the land having been opened to settlement about that time, built a one-room log cabin, and in the first year here began cultivating twelve acres of his land. He came into the country, however, not to farm but to find a location where he could eventually conduct a banking business. He brought with him less than $500 in money, which amount was consumed in living and other expenses before he actually made any money. He secured the establishment of the postoffice at Piniele the year after his arrival, and the name Piniele was given the office by the department. It is an Indian name, meaning "sacred ground." Mr. Einsel was appointed the first postmaster, and served in that office about two years.

In 1915 he founded the Piniele Leader, a weekly paper of democratic principles, and he continued his connection with the publication until 1917. During his residence in this community the establishment of the various mail routes out of Piniele, the opening of the first store and the organization of the bank are all matters with which he was actively identified.

The Piniele State Bank was established June 4, 1917, the day it was opened to the general public, and it was capitalized at $20,000 and numbered the following officers: A. M. Blackford, president; C. H. Miller, vice president; Mr. Einsel, cashier, and the board of directors in addition to the officers named were A. T. Hibbard and J. M. Craig. The bank has assets of $170,000, with deposits of $140,000, and in consideration of the crop conditions and the call upon the people for war funds the institution has surpassed the expectations of its founders. During the year 1918 the patrons of the bank purchased war stamps and liberty bonds to the amount of $80,000.

Mr. Einsel organized and established the second bank of Broadus in Powder River County, and opened it for business May 8, 1919. Its officers contain the following well-known names: Frank T. Kelsey, president; Charles S. Einsel, vice president, and A. W. Heidel, cashier, and A. Montgomery and C. M. Miles with its other officers constitute its board of directors. The institution is known as the Powder River County Bank, and is capitalized at $25,000, and its assets at the end of its first four months of business were $135,000.

Aside from his banking interests Mr. Einsel also has extensive land holdings in the vicinity of Piniele, which he regards as an investment worthy of any conservative financier. When he first came to his present location it was within the limits of Custer County. Fallon County was organized shortly afterward, and this section was made a part of that incorporation, and subsequently Carter County was organized, and Mr. Einsel has thus resided in the three counties without having changed his voting place or his residence. While a citizen of Fallon County he was elected a member of the Montana Legislature, taking his seat in the House as a member of the Fourteenth Legislature. That was a democratic body, with George Ramsey as speaker, and Mr. Einsel was made chairman of the printing committee, and a member of the live stock, state lands and other committees. He was elected to the office as a democrat, and served in the Legislature one term.

On the 9th of November, 1902, at Hastings, Nebraska, Mr. Einsel was married to Laura Miller, who was born at Kearney, that state, November 8, 1884, a daughter of Charles Henry Miller, who was born at Boswell, Ohio, August 9, 1859. During the early years of his life he went to Nebraska, arriving at Kearney in 1879, where he first worked in the hardware store in which he afterward bought a controlling interest. He was left an orphan when very young and was reared by an uncle, F. C. Grable. Mr. Miller married October 31, 1883, Clara Belle Scott, of Kearney, and they became the parents of three children, Laura, Kathrine and Alberta. The second daughter, Kathrine, was born February 20, 1887, at Kearney, Nebraska, and was married to Frederick Alvin Porter, of Heartwell, Nebraska, November 17, 1909. Mr. Porter was born May 16, 1882. They have one child, Charles Alvin, born April 17, 1911, at Belle Fourche, South Dakota. Alberta Alice, the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Miller, was born March 11, 1897, at Boise, Idaho, and she is still with her parents.

In 1891 Mr. and Mrs. Miller moved to Boise, Idaho, later to Walla Walla, Washington, thence to Spokane, and in 1902 established their home in South Dakota. During the year of 1920 Mr. Miller took up ranch property in Montana.

Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Einsel, Elizabeth Catherine, born November 29, 1903, and Jane Ann, born May 20, 1913. During the period of the recent World war Mr. Einsel was a member of the Carter County Council of Defense, was also a member of the Legal Advisory Board, served as registration agent, was chairman of the southern part of the county for the liberty loan drives, and in each of the several drives the county succeeded in "going over the top." Mr. Einsel was also chairman of the war savings drive for the south side of Carter County and was also treasurer of the south side Red Cross.

William Fulton. The three decades William Fulton has spent in Southeastern Montana have contained a busy program in ranching, and since his prosperity became established on a firm basis his effective aid and interests have done much to influence the general business and civic development of the Ismay community.

Mr. Fulton was hardly twenty years of age when he came to Montana. He was born at Beith, Ayrshire, Scotland, July 30, 1870, and represents an old Scotch ancestry in both lines. His parents were Alexander and Mary Stevenson Fulton, the Fultons having been farmers for generations, while the Stevensons were prominently identified with the woolen mill industry in Scotland, owning and operating a water power mill. Alexander Fulton spent his life at Beith, and of his eleven children nine grew up, William being the only one in the United States.

William Fulton spent his early life on a small farm in Scotland, attended public school to the age of thirteen, and his knowledge of men and affairs have been largely a product of experience. He and another young man started for the United States in search of opportunities of the western world, and landed at Philadelphia from the ship Hibernia from Glasgow. He had no relatives in this country, and his first destination was Illinois. While in St. Clair County, that state, he worked as a farm hand at twelve dollars a month near the town of Marissa, and a year and a half more on a farm in Carroll County, Illinois. While in Illinois he made the acquaintance of Mr. McKay, who had Montana interests, and it was through Mr. McKay that young Fulton was influenced to come to the Northwest.

Arriving in Montana in February, 1890, Mr. Fulton went out to the McKay ranch on Milk Creek, now in Fallon County but then part of the great domain of Custer County. For a couple of years he was a wage worker with Mr. McKay, receiving forty-five dollars a month. Montana was then the best wage state in the Union. Mr. Fulton had all the Scotch thrift, knew the value of labor and money and exercised the most rigid economy in accumulating enough for his independent start in life. In order not to spend money as so many laborers did he carefully kept away from town for almost two years. He was Mr. McKay's shepherd and at the end of two years bought an interest in the sheep. Mr. Fulton has gained his principal stake in Montana as a sheep man. In 1893 he bought a half interest in the McKay ranch, which then became known as the McKay-Fulton ranch. Their sheep interests grew into the thousands, and ranged over a large section of public domain. With the curtailment of the public lands by settlement the sheep industry became less profitable, and since then cattle have been an increasing factor on the ranch. Mr. Fulton had bought a small bunch of cattle before he became a partner of Mr. McKay, and the cattle were turned in as part of the deal, and some of their offspring are still on the ranch. The first brand adopted by Mr. Fulton was D2, and he bought another brand, KO, and has used both brands. At the start he had only the common stock of this locality, experimented by crossing with the Galloway, but when this cross proved unsatisfactory he combined the Shorthorns and Herefords, and of late years the Hereford strain predominates, while a little Shorthorn blood contributes a heavier and more profitable animal than the full-blood White Face.

Mr. Fulton has a good knowledge of the contrasting prices of the sheep industry during the past quarter of a century. He has sold wool as low as eleven cents a pound, his best sale being under the Government appraisement price of sixty-two cents in 1918.

The McKay-Fulton ranch is now generally known as the KO or the Fulton ranch. It was only a "squatter's right" when Mr. Fulton joined it. It now embraces nearly thirty-four thousand acres of deeded land, divided into several large pastures, with about thirty sections under fence. Better improvements have been added by Mr. Fulton, and the management plans eventually shelter for all the stock. Two artesian wells from a depth of 800 feet supply abundance of sweet, pure water at a rate of twenty gallons a minute. For a brief time Mr. Fulton owned a Shorthorn farm in Minnesota, and lived there with his family one winter, but the climate did not prove acceptable and the following year they returned and established their home at Ismay. Mr. Fulton owns the old George Burt home. On that plot of ground he drilled the first flowing well in town, flowing at the rate of twenty-five gallons per minute, with sufficient pressure to reach all parts of his modern home.

Soon after the advent of the Milwaukee Railroad Mr. Fulton lent his aid to the organization of the First National Bank of Ismay, is still a stockholder and director, was one of the organizers and is a stockholder and member of the official board of the Baker State Bank, was a subscriber to the first grain elevator built at Ismay and also to the creamery. He was one of the contributors to the pioneer telephone line from Miles City to Ekalaka, known as the Miles City-Ekalaka Telephone Line, and subscribed to the first wool house built in Miles City. These new enterprises were among the first to be undertaken by popular subscription. Mr. Fulton also bought some of the bonds of the Elks home in Miles City.

It will therefore be seen that while he has never sought political honors he has used his opportunities and his means in many ways to promote the best interests of his section of the state. His only official service was as director of the Ismay public schools. After coming to Montana he took out citizenship papers in Miles City, becoming eligible to vote in 1896, in which year he supported William McKinley for president, and the republican party has been his choice for the most part since then.

At Minier, Illinois, June 25, 1903, Mr. Fulton married Miss Bertha Fluss. Her brother is Lon Fluss, a well-known rancher on Powder River in Prairie County, and one of the first county commissioners of that county. Mrs. Fulton was born in Tazewell County, Illinois, September 7, 1877, and received a public school education. To Mr. and Mrs. Fulton were born eight children: Daniel Alexander, Helen Marie, Vivian Leota, Mary Melissa, William Frederick, Louise, Robert Bruce and Frank.

David Harrison Russell. There are few characters among all the settlers of the western region who measure up to the type of real pioneers as Mr. Russell does. In the first place, his life in the West began almost as early as the introduction of civilized life here, and when he was barely of school age. His last guardian angel, his grandmother, died when he was but eight years old, and he was thrown among strangers at a time when children of his tender years are usually nestling close to their mothers' side and having the benefits of the maternal love, advice and understanding sympathy. Just how he passed through the varying vicissitudes without yielding to the call of evil and maintained himself inviolate is an untold and unrelated story. The back of a pony provided him early with a livelihood from childhood, and his venturesome spirit led him into frays with the wild men of the region while civilization was disputing sway with them for establishment. Our Government had just established its fort at Vancouver, and General Scott was in command when the wagon train bearing the remnant of the Russell family reached that place. Immediately all the children perished from attack of measles except David H., and but for his grandmother he would have been a castaway in reality.

His wits sharpened through his contact with incidents and events, Mr. Russell assumed a man's place in the defense of his region against the assaults of the red man. He was but a child when the Cayouse Indian outbreak came, in 1855-56-57, and he did valiant and valuable service in it and carries upon his body wounds as evidence of that period of experience. He was later permanently marked by a poisoned bullet fired by an Indian, and other encounters with the belligerent element of the West left their impression in scars on his person. He left few parts of the Northwest uncovered and unvisited when he came to Montana to make his home, and his first trip into this region for that purpose was his entry into Alder Gulch just after the discovery of gold. He came across with pack ponies with a few others from Boise, Idaho, where he was the first man to place a load of lumber on the townsite, and at the Last Chance mine unloaded his pack and became one of the motley crowd seeking the yellow metal and profiting from the varied activities which its presence inspired. From this time forward other pages of these notes reveal a few of the things he did and indicate in a mild way something of his interesting life.

The veteran of the West is the modest reference made to introduce this old figure of this vast region and one who came to it in childhood and has lived in it for three score and ten years. He is David Harrison Russell, of Ekalaka (Indian spelling Ijkalaka) and a ranchman and old buffalo hunter of Eastern Montana. It would be difficult to include all the interesting points in his career, and nothing but an extended article could do him justice. He is of Scotch blood, but born in Henderson County, Illinois, at Oquawka, December 3, 1843. His father, Levi Russell, who settled in that state about 1838, and who was a native of Scotland, was, with four brothers, sent out of Scotland by Lord Russell, his elder brother and heir to the family estates, and all came to the United States. Of these, William settled in Virginia, George settled in Ohio, Nathan crossed the plains and settled in Oregon, while Levi made his home in Illinois. Levi Russell married Mary Findley, a daughter of John Findley, who served as a soldier in the War of 1812, but whose father was a Revolutionary soldier from Pennsylvania. Mrs. Levi Russell died at St. Joseph, Missouri, while the family was en route by wagon train to the Pacific Coast, and was one of a large number of the party who died there of the cholera. She and her husband were the parents of: Harvey, William and Elizabeth, all of whom died of the measles at Vancouver, Washington, just after the remnant of the family reached there; and David, the youngest child. Levi Russell returned to Illinois after the death of his wife, and stayed there until 1852, when he also crossed the plains and established his home at Corvallis, Oregon, where he was engaged in milling.

David Harrison Russell grew up among strangers in the far Northwest. His grandmother Findley looked after him while she lived, but when she died in 1851 he was left alone and from that time forward his way was hewn with his own axe. As a boy he went on the cow trail early and became a broncho rider, and until he was past forty years of age was identified with the trail in one or another capacity in the West. He has covered all the west coast from the north line of the United States to the line of Central America, and has trailed cattle, driven teams of mules and cattle through all the states of the Northwest, and has hunted buffalo in Colorado and Montana. In later years, and when he came into the region of Eastern Montana, he did so as a buffalo hunter, and in company with Isaac Downing killed 2,650 buffalo during the winter of 1881-2 for the hides, besides the deer, antelope and grey wolves. In the spring of 1883 he shipped 19,000 hides and skins out of this region, and when he abandoned that enterprise located in Custer (now Carter) County and has been ranching here ever since. He entered land in 1893, as soon as the Government surveyed it, and established his first permanent home on the tract which ever afterward remained as his abiding-place. In his first years as a ranchman he owned as finely blooded cattle as Montana afforded, but the winter of 1886 denuded him and swallowed up all he had made and in addition left him with a heavy debt hanging over him. He has tried different breeds of cattle, including Shorthorn, Hereford, Polled Durham and Devon, and the last-named is his favorite. He ranched them in Wyoming during the late '70s and raised two-year-old heifers that dressed up to 1,000 pounds. His brand here is "RUS" but the "NY" and the "AW" were recorded in his name in earlier times.

Mr. Russell, as above noted, was always without a home as a boy. He spent no two Christmases or Fourths of July in the same place until he settled down for life in Montana. As a lad not yet thirteen years of age he enlisted for service in the Cayouse Indian war in Oregon, enrolled at Albany, that state, served in Lieutenant Jeffreys' company, and during the seven months spent in the field there was real Indian fighting almost daily, the men sleeping in their saddle blankets, being exposed to all kinds of weather and to hunger (eating horse meat at times), and in every way having a strenuous time. He was shot through both hips and rode seventy-five miles to Fort Henrietta while carrying despatches and reached his destination and delivered his message, in answer to which an army relief expedition was sent out to the fighting men. As late as 1917 Mr. Russell pulled a piece of bone from his hip that had been shattered in that Indian war. He has been identified with the democratic party always, but voting has constituted his service, save that of helping to hold elections.

Mr. Russell was married at Fort Laramie in 1873 to Ijkalaka, a Sioux Indian girl, daughter of Eagle Man. She was brought up by white people in Wyoming, and died in Carter County, leaving the following children who grew up: Rosa, who married Reuben Lambert and died at Cold Springs, Montana; Ben, who died as a young man; James, a ranchman at Ekalaka; John, of Interior, South Dakota; William, a ranchman of Carter County; Kate, the wife of Frank Chrestnot, of Ekalaka; George, a member of the United States navy who saw service during the World war; Clara, the wife of Henry Trink, of North McGregor, Iowa; Florence, who married Charles Whitney, of Ekalaka; Oliver, who served with the United States Engineers during the World war, was gassed and wounded, and returned after his honorable discharge, and completed his college education; and Romaine, a student at the Pierre Industrial School.

Mr. Russell married for his second wife Mrs. Elizabeth Josephine Boyle, a daughter of John and Mary Curtis Brown. She was born at old Williamsburg, Greater New York, and her father was an ocean captain and a trans-Atlantic sailor who had gone on the water as a young man, and who finally lost his life in the Bay of Biscay. Mrs. Russell, the only child of her parents, was brought up in the home of her uncle, W. S. Brown, who owned lobster and fish canning factories and also had much to do with the Atlantic trade. Her uncle's home was at Red Bank, on the Miramichi River in Canada, and Mrs. Russell made frequent trips across the water with her first husband, Charles Johnson, a foreman for her uncle. By him she has a son, Stanley Johnson, now in the United States Navy, who served through the World war. Mrs. Russell's second husband was James Edward Boyle, by whom she has a son, Leo James, who enlisted for the World war and was with the electrical engineers and on the Western front when last heard from, in August, 1918. Mr. and Mrs. Russell were married May 24, 1902.

THOMAS E. ASLAKSON. The experiences of Thomas E. Aslakson as a farmer and early settler of the Redstone community of Sheridan County serve a good purpose, even though briefly described, to indicate the historical development of that section during the past decade.

Mr. Aslakson, who in addition to his farming interests is also manager for the Imperial Elevator at Redstone, was born in Chicago, Illinois, December 23, 1870. His father, Ole Aslakson, a native of Norway in the vicinity of Christiania, came to the United States in early manhood, locating at Chicago, where he married Sophie Anderson. After varied experiences in the West they spent their last years in Chicago, where Ole died in the fall of 1909 and where his widow is still living. A brief record of their children is as follows: Andrew, of Minneapolis; Marie, wife of Clarence Ball, of Chicago; Minnie, wife of Mike Donnelley, of Chicago; Thomas E.; Tillie and Jule, both of Minneapolis; Oscar, of Flaxville, Montana; Milo, a farmer near Redstone, Montana; and Al, of Canby, Minnesota.

The Aslakson home in Chicago was not within the area of devastation caused by the great Chicago fire of October, 1871, though the family had all their goods in readiness to move should the flames reach them. In 1877 the family went to Iowa and spent two years at Forrest City, returning to Chicago for another two years. Ole Aslakson then took his family to Canby, Minnesota. It was at Canby that Thomas E. Aslakson spent most of his boyhood and grew up on a farm. He was educated in country schools, and lived with his parents to the age of eighteen. He then entered a flouring mill at Canby, and in four years acquired a thorough and practical knowledge of the milling business. From there he went to the Marshall Milling Company as a miller, a business he served for ten years. In the fall of 1908, locating at Crosby, North Dakota, he bought grain for the Osborn-McMillan firm two years, at the end of which time he loaded his household goods into a wagon and started for Montana.

Mr. Aslakson reached the Redstone community in March, 1910. He came unusually well prepared for any adversities that might overtake his efforts as a home maker, and was able to establish his family with an unusual degree of comfort beyond that of many early settlers. His first act was to enter a claim, his homestead being the north half of section 18, township 35 north and range 52 east. He was the first entryman on the "bench" near Redstone, and his location was marked by a primitive 10 by 12 frame shack, which sheltered him and his wife and child until the next fall, when a story and a half frame, 14 by 24 feet, succeeded it. In 1916 the family took possession of their third home, built in the semi-bungalow style, with full basement, and furnace and other modern equipments. It is an eight-room dwelling, and is the comfortable abode of the Aslakson family of wife and two children.

Mr. Aslakson on coming to Montana became a grain farmer at the beginning. Hail destroyed his first crop, but his second effort gave him a large yield and his third crop was also one of fair returns. Wheat and flax were his main dependence. His banner crop in 1915 gave him twenty-six bushels of wheat to the acre and seventy-five bushels of oats, his total grain yield that year being 5,600 bushels. In ten years he has seen both the fat and the lean of farm enterprise, and the afflictions of drought have intervened so that farming has not been one roseate round of pleasure and profit. Mr. Aslakson estimates that about 60 per cent of his efforts have been rewarded by substantial crops. His home farm has grown by successive developments to 400 acres, and he also owns 280 acres elsewhere. On his homestead he has broken 225 acres, and altogether has put 290 acres under the plow. He has not depended entirely on grain, and has diversified his efforts by the introduction of a few stock, and sells some each year at a profit.

Mr. Aslakson became manager of the grain business for the Imperial Elevator Company in 1914, and has officiated in that way at Redstone ever since. In 1913 the local elevator handled 125,000 bushels of grain. Since then the business has been light, and a large part of it has consisted of in-shipments.

For the past six years Mr. Aslakson has been one of the trustees of the Redstone schools. When he came to this region the only schoolhouse in the entire district was about five miles away from his place of settlement. A new school district was organized in the summer of 1910, and he has been on the board of directors since the spring of 1914. He has always had convictions on public matters and has voted regularly as a democrat since supporting Mr. Cleveland in 1892, while a resident of Minnesota. He was made a member of the Masonic Lodge at Redstone, and is junior warden of Eagle Lodge No. 103. Both he and his wife participated actively in the community efforts to sustain the war, including the Red Cross, and the women of the household were busily engaged in knitting socks and sweaters for the boys at the front.

At Marshall, Minnesota, June 27, 1900, Mr. Aslakson married Miss Elizabeth Lee. She was born near Kankakee, Illinois, in June, 1882, daughter of Richard and Sarah (Wampler) Lee. Her father was a native of Kentucky and served as a Union soldier with an Illinois regiment during the Civil war, and spent his active life as a farmer in Illinois and Minnesota. The Lee children were: Richard, of Sheridan County, Montana; Mrs. Maggie Culshaw, of Marshall, Minnesota; George and Edward, residents of Minneapolis; Susie, wife of William Mullaney, of Marshall, Minnesota; Mrs. Aslakson; John, whose home is in Canada; and Blanche, wife of William Wilbarger, of Vesta, Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Aslakson's two children are Kenneth and Myron.

JOHN C. CRONK, a stockraiser and ranchman of Blaine County who is widely known all over this section as a breeder of Percheron horses, identified himself with this community in 1899, coming to Coburg from Chinook. He was born at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, March 14, 1874, a son of James Cronk, who passed his life in Linn County, Iowa, as a farmer, and died there in 1908, when sixty-eight years old. He was born at Demorestville, Canada, but early came to the United States and settled in Linn County, Iowa, where he was later married to Miss Amy Cramer. Their children were as follows: George E., who is a resident of Los Angeles, California; Alice, who is married, lives in Arizona; Lottie, who married James Hoover, of Robbins, Iowa; Howe, who is a resident of Foley, Minnesota; May, who married Gene Allen, of Robbins, Iowa; and John C., whose name heads this review.

John C. Cronk attended the schools of Cedar Rapids and Coe College, and then began to be self-supporting. For the first year he worked for wages, and then took the contract for doing the grading work between Marion and Dubuque, Iowa, for the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad, and carried it out so as to make some money. Mr. Cronk then was engaged in farming in Linn County for several years, but left Iowa for the West.

Upon coming to Montana he was engaged in prospecting in the vicinity of Whitehall for a time, but becoming convinced that about only 1 in 400 miners made a success of this line of endeavor he would only be wasting his time, and so entered the employ of Courtney Sheriff at Canon Ferry, ferryman, hotel proprietor and owner of the state line at that point. It was the duty of Mr. Cronk to take care of the stage horses, and for his arduous duties received his board and $30 a month, and when he left after nearly a year of the hardest kind of work he was practically without funds. Twenty years elapsed between that date and the one of his next meeting with his old employer, the second one being the occasion of Mr. Cronk's exhibit at Helena of a bunch of his Percheron prize horses, bred on his extensive and valuable ranch in the Milk River Valley. Mr. Sheriff was astounded to learn that this wealthy and celebrated fine stockbreeder was the same "kid" who had curried and cared for his stage horses a score of years before.

Leaving Mr. Sheriff, Mr. Cronk went to Chinook, and about all he owned was his bedding. He secured employment in the hotel at Chinook and spent his spare moments looking for a suitable location for his claim, and after nearly a year at Chinook decided upon homesteading at Coburg. He was one of the first white settlers to select this locality. His first home on his claim was a "dugout," which cost him $1.75 for hinges and a window light. He had accumulated a few hundred dollars, and this enabled him to engage in dealing in stock. He paid $4 for his first horse at a Chinook auction sale, which price contrasts very favorably with the $3,000 he has received for some of his fine Percherons.

From the time he bought that first horse, and perhaps even before that event, Mr. Cronk's ambition was to get into the horse as well as the cattle industry, and gradually work up to breeding blooded horses, and he worked steadily with that end in view. By 1900 he was able to begin shipping in that class of stock, and held auction sales along the Great Northern Railroad from Williston to Kalispell. The success of this venture proved that his judgment was excellent, and he increased his capital with each succeeding sale. Later he began shipping horses to Canada of the Percheron and Belgian strains, and this, too, proved a very profitable venture.

So successful did he become in handling horses that in 1908 he began to concentrate on the breeding of blooded horses, and formed a partnership with a stockman in Iowa, the two importing Belgian horses and dividing their shipments, Mr. Cronk bringing his to Montana. He began his exhibitions at the local fairs, and in 1912 made his first exhibit at the Montana State Fair. With the exception of 1914 and 1919 he has been an exhibitor ever since, and has taken more than $200 prizes, including champion stallion and champion mare ribbons. These exhibits have been valuable advertising and have brought him prominently before the stockgrowers of the country, and from across the international line in Canada. Lingot, the famous stallion and twice champion of the Percherons of Montana, is of Mr. Cronk's stable, and Lingot's get have never been beaten at the Montana State Fair, and one of them, Lingot Linda, has been three times champion of the Helena State Fair.

Mr. Cronk's success with blooded cattle has been chiefly with the Shorthorns, although he has some fine specimens of Herefords on his ranch. While he has never been an exhibitor of cattle, he has bred and sold some 400 bulls, and thus rendered a valuable service in encouraging the introduction of blooded cattle in the state. On his ranch the junior Cronks are breeding Shetland ponies and Chester White hogs, and are making a record not to be overlooked. One of his sons entered a calf contest put on by the Blaine Farm Bureau, and sold his calf at auction for $400, for which he had paid $175. He fed it 117 days, weighing it at 540 pounds and selling it at 940 pounds.

A strong believer in alfalfa, Mr. Cronk has grown it for many years. His valley land is under his own irrigation system, and with it he has been able to grow four tons of alfalfa to the acre, and has some of the best settings of that hay to be found. His claim of 320 acres has grown into a ranch of about 3,000 acres, in which his wife's claim is included, and about 1,600 acres are under irrigation, and 500 acres carry alfalfa. His substantial improvements include an eight-room residence; two horse barns, one being 32 by 32 and another 64 by 72 feet; a granary with a storage capacity of 8,000 bushels of grain, including his granary rooms in the barns; sheds for cattle and other buildings for his machinery and appliances needing shelter; and a tenant house which is in accord with his other buildings, for he has regard for the comfort of those whom he employs, all of these representing an outlay of from $12,000 to $15,000. Mr. Cronk also has ranching interests on Savoy Creek, this property being known as the McDaniel ranch, and is fairly well improved and devoted to alfalfa and grain.

On February 5, 1901, Mr. Cronk was married at Fairfax, Iowa, to Miss Annie Rogers, a daughter of James Rogers. Mrs. Cronk was born at Fairfax, Iowa, where her father was an early settler and farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Cronk have the following children: Norma, Roger, Johnny and Ruth.

Both by inheritance and conviction Mr. Cronk is a republican, and he cast his first presidential ballot in 1896 for William McKinley.

In addition to his other interests he is interested in the Farmers State Bank of Coburg, of which he was the first president, and he is president of the Blaine County Farm Bureau. Coming in the second selective draft, Mr. Cronk submitted his questionnaire about a week before the signing of the armistice, and although he was connected with the very important industry of food production and because of that was entitled to exemption, he laid no claim to it, being ready and willing to respond when called into the service. Mr. Cronk belongs to the best type of western manhood and is self-reliant, clear-brained and dependable. Long ago recognizing the imperative necessity for the production of better stock, he has gone about his business in a highly efficient manner, and his remarkable success acts as a strong incentive to others to follow his example. He has always had the good of his community at heart and has been generous in his benefactions to it, but his real service has been in the encouragement of agricultural activities and the advertising of the advantages of the region through his own stock operations. His will and resourcefulness have enabled him to overcome obstacles which have arisen in his path, and he has developed these characteristics and others which give him the power to stimulate men to wholehearted endeavor to become, as he, worth-while citizens and upright and prosperous men.

JOHN W. MCKEE. The high and responsible calling of banking has placed John W. McKee in the front ranks of the business men of Sheridan County. A number of years ago, soon after he arrived on Montana soil, the First National Bank of Plentywood was organized, and since the beginning of its history Mr. McKee has been the active man in the management of its affairs. The bank was organized with a capital of $25,000, but its growth has been rapid and secure, and in 1920 its capital and surplus is valued at $45,000, and its officers and directors are men of the highest standing. Its president is A. J. Langer, of Plentywood, its vice president is John H. Davis, its cashier is John W. McKee, its assistant cashier, Rose A. Lauritzen, and its second assistant cashier is Roman C. Nathe, who also constitute the bank's board of directors with the addition of I. L. Shippie, of Plentywood.

Mr. McKee was born at Rosita, Custer County, Colorado, February 16, 1882, but when he was eighteen months old his parents removed to Ottawa City, Canada, and on May 24, 1894, the family home was established at Kennedy, Minnesota. His father was David D. McKee, who was born at Quebec, Ontario, of Scotch-Irish parents, his father being David McKee, a millwright. The younger David followed gold mining in Colorado and subsequently bridge building and contracting, but after locating in Minnesota he became a bookkeeper for the Kennedy Land & Town Company. His death occurred in the town of Kennedy, January 1, 1901, when he had attained the age of forty-seven years. He had married Annie Ryan, who was born at Quebec, Ontario, Canada, and was the daughter of a native Irishman, whose sons became conspicuous in the business life of the United States. One, Dennis Ryan, built the Ryan Hotel in St. Paul and was the owner of two of the famous mines of the country, the Horn Silver at Frisco, Utah, and the Bassick at Rosita, Custer County, Colorado. This Dennis Ryan was also the first man to attempt to tunnel the Hudson River at New York. Patrick Ryan, another son, was a wealthy miner at Salt Lake, and the third, John Ryan, the only survivor of the family, is a prominent and wealthy stockman of Salt Lake.

The following seven children were born to David and Annie McKee: John W., the Plentywood banker; David D., cashier of the State Bank of Tappen, North Dakota; Catherine, wife of Charles J. Johnson, of Fairview, Montana; Anna, also of Fairview; Mary, who married Andrew H. Strand, of Wildrose, North Dakota; James P., assistant cashier of the State Bank at Tappen, North Dakota; and Helen, wife of Garland Smith, the postmaster of Plentywood. The mother of these children survives her husband and resides at Plentywood.

John W. McKee received his educational training in the public schools and in a business college in Minneapolis, Minnesota, and later studied law for three years under F. W. Medbery at Ross, North Dakota. But instead of pursuing the law as a vocation he entered upon a business career and has pursued it chiefly as a banker. In 1905 he went to Hope, North Dakota, where he was employed as a bookkeeper in the First National Bank until he went to Ross, that state, to become the yard manager for the St. Anthony and Dakota Lumber Company. After five years with that corporation Mr. McKee went to Rugby, North Dakota, where he spent a year in the lumber business, and from that point he came to Montana in January, 1913. In this new location he engaged first in the real estate and loan business, but in the following August associated himself with the First National Bank as its acting cashier, and since then his time has been given almost entirely to the banking business. He is also the secretary of the McKee-Lang Land Company of Plentywood, organized for the purpose of doing a general land business, buying, selling and farming, and they are doing an excellent work in developing property adjacent to Plentywood. During the recent period of the World war Mr. McKee was at the head of the Liberty Loan Committee of Plentywood, and was the custodian of the money collected in one of the drives.

At Denver, Colorado, July 15, 1915, Mr. McKee was married to Miss Emily Landmark, who was born in Trondhjem, Norway, but was brought by her parents to the United States in infancy and was reared at Canby, Minnesota. She attended the public schools and the Winona Normal School, becoming a teacher at the close of her school days, but was engaged in the abstract business at the time of her marriage. Mr. McKee has always been a supporter of democratic principles since casting his first presidential ballot for Judge Parker in 1904.

Joseph C. Tope. A young lawyer of brilliant qualifications for leadership and effective work in his profession, Joseph C. Tope is a graduate of the law department of the State University, and is serving his third term of service as county attorney of Prairie County. He has made law enforcement a realty, and his vigorous prosecutions have given a distinctly better tone to the entire community over which he has jurisdiction.

Mr. Tope was born at Arcola, Indiana, September 10, 1891. His great-grandfather, John Wesley Tope, was of Scotch ancestry. He was born in 1798 and died in 1872. He became an extensive land owner and farmer in Jackson County, Ohio, and was able to give each of his children eighty acres of land. He was noted for his strong physique, being the champion strong man of a large region. He won a contest at log lifting at a barn raising, lifting two more logs than his competitor with the competitor on top of the load. He married Polly Campbell, and they were the parents of six daughters and four sons.

One of the sons was Brice Tope, who spent all his life in Jackson County, Ohio, and it is said that he was never fifteen miles from home in all his days. He died within a mile of his birthplace. For only two days did he work away from home, and that was helping build a railroad, at wages of $1.10 a day. He married Amelia Scott, who was born on the Scioto River in Pike County, Ohio. She died in 1876, about eleven years before her husband. Their children were James, George W., Elmer and Mrs. Ressa Van Fossen of Jackson, Ohio.

George W. Tope, father of the Prairie County attorney, is a well known rancher and farmer in Chouteau County, his home place being about two miles from old Fort Benton. He was born in Jackson County, Ohio, in January, 1863, and lived on his father's farm until he was eighteen, when he accompanied two brothers to Indiana. He had acquired a country school education. In the vicinity of Cherubusco and Fort Wayne, Indiana, he worked in a wagon shop, learning the trade, and eventually established a shop of his own, which he conducted for several years at Arcola and Cherubusco. Abandoning the forge and bench, he came to Montana in 1908, and is still occupying the homestead he entered. He handled stock on a modest scale and has always been a progressive and forward-moving farmer, introducing novelties and experimenting with things to determine their practicability and adaptability to the region in which he lives. He has maintained himself a representative citizen, is a democrat in politics, and was called upon to act as agent for the county in purchasing the seed supplies authorized by the bond issues of 1919. George W. Tope married Nettie V. Aker, who was born in Allen County, Indiana, where her father, Jacob Aker, was an early settler from Virginia. He acquired an education in the country region of Allen County. George W. Tope and wife have the following children: Bertha, wife of Freeman Ramsey, of Fort Benton, Montana; Edith, wife of C. F. Deck, of Fort Benton; Joseph Clarence; and William Herman, a farmer at Fort Benton.

Joseph C. Tope was eighteen years of age when he came to Montana. He had grown up at Cherubusco, Indiana, attended the public schools there, and was in the second year of high school when he came with other members of the family to Fort Benton in May, 1909. Mr. Tope is a graduate of the Fort Benton High School and in 1911 entered the University of Montana, receiving a scholarship for the excellence of his work in high school. While the scholarship provided for his tuition he paid the rest of his expenses by clerical and other work. He had only $40 when he entered the university. He carried on both the classical and law courses, received his A. B. degree in 1915, and his degree in law the following February.

Qualified by his degrees for a professional career, while looking for a location he stopped off at Miles City. He became acquainted with Hon. George W. Farr, who caused him to linger a few days while this well known lawyer was making up his mind concerning the merits of the young law student. Mr. Farr decided to send him to Terry with a commission to open a law office under the firm name of Farr & Tope. Mr. Tope reached Terry traveling on borrowed money, and in the old Lumber Exchange Building opened the firm's office and in Terry tried his first suit at law. He was associated with Mr. Farr until January 1, 1917, when, at the beginning of his first term as county attorney, the partnership was mutually dissolved.

When Mr. Tope began his residence at Terry on May 1, 1916, he was a total stranger. Neverthless in August he was urged to make the race for county attorney. He did this reluctantly, feeling that he was too new to interest the public in his candidacy. In the four-cornered race before the primaries he won the republican nomination, and defeated his opponent in November by almost a three to one vote. He succeeded William G. Armstrong, the democratic encumbent, and began his duties with a heavy criminal docket of stock theft and forgery cases. Well equipped as a lawyer, courageous and determined, he prosecuted the docket of cases with an outcome most favorable to the county and state. He was especially vigilant against the "rustlers," relieving the county of some undesirable citizens, and at the same time attracting an increased population of substantial home makers. In 1918 he succeeded himself, winning the nomination in the primaries and defeating his democratic opponent in November. The vigor of his first term has characterized also his second administration, and cattle rustling in that section of the state is today regarded as a rather hazardous pursuit.

At St. Mary's, Idaho, January 1, 1916, Mr. Tope married Miss Rhea C. Townsend. She was born at Peru, Nebraska, a daughter of George and Kate (Hudson) Townsend, the former a native of Nebraska and the latter of Indiana. Her parents now reside at Turlock, California. Mrs. Tope is the youngest of four children, the others being Mrs. Ida M. Platt, of St. Mary's, Idaho; Dr. Adelbert, of Minatare, Nebraska; and Harry H., who died leaving a family at Lincoln, Nebraska. Mrs. Tope was educated in the Beatrice High School and spent two years in special work in the University of Montana at Missoula, where she met her husband. Mr. and Mrs. Tope have one son, John M., representing the fifth generation of this family record.

Mr. Tope chose his affiliation with the republican party on reaching his majority. He is a member of the Sigma Nu college fraternity, and in Masonry is affiliated wtih the lodge, chapter and commandery, and a member of Algeria Shrine of Helena, Montana. He is a member of the Terry Community Church, is president of the Terry Chamber of Commerce, is attorney for the State Bank of Terry and also acts as counsel for a number of local business firms.

JOHN WEINSCHROTT. There are many men who attain material success and there are many others who are called to high positions in life. When both these ends are achieved by one man and entirely through his own unassisted efforts there is occasion for more than usual interest to be aroused in the consideration of the factors that have brought this about. It is a long step from the primitive Hungarian home to a seat of equality among the leading men of Plevna, but such a step has been taken by John Weinschrott, a successful merchant of this city and ex-mayor of the municipality where he has lived since 1911.

John Weinschrott was born at Bockovar, Hungary, on December 1, 1886, a son of John Weinschrott, who was born in the same place as his namesake. When the younger John was ten years old the family immigrated to the haven of so many of foreign birth, the United States, sailing from Hamburg, Germany, on a steamer of the North German Lloyd line bound for Baltimore, Maryland, and after a trip of fifteen days reached their destination without any unusual incident occurring save the children had access to all the sugar they could eat when that commodity was being unloaded at New York City.

There was quite a large settlement of Hungarians in the locality about Regent, North Dakota, and the Weinschrott family came West to join their fellow countrymen. The elder John Weinschrott entered a homestead, proved it up and there made a home for his family until 1909, when he retired. In 1910 he paid a visit to his old home in Hungary, but returned to the United States well satisfied that he had been wise in making the change he did. In 1911 he located permanently at Plevna, where he is now living in retirement after his long years of strenuous effort. He married Johanna Schaffer, a daughter of John Schaffer, likewise a farmer, and she is also living. Mr. and Mrs. Weinschrott became the parents of the following children: Lena, who is the wife of John Klemm, of Dickinson, North Dakota; John, Jr., whose name heads this review; Joseph, who is a farmer located near Gladstone, North Dakota; Anna M., the wife of Peter Collin, of the Gladstone district; and Nick, who is a farmer and lives near Plevna, Montana.

John Weinschrott, Jr., was reared in North Dakota and educated in the country schools and priest's school at Richardson, North Dakota. Having learned to be a farmer, for the first three years following his majority John Weinschrott followed that calling, putting to practical use the knowledge he had gained, but it did not satisfy his ambition, and with three associates he went into a grain, lumber and implement business at Regent, North Dakota. In the fall of 1910 he came to Montana looking for a better opening, and spent his first months in the state at Broadview. After looking the ground over thoroughly he decided to locate permanently at Plevna, and put in a stock of agricultural implements aggregating about $2,000, in a building 181x30 feet. Since then as his trade expanded he has added the handling of furniture and hardware, and in 1914, erected his present store of two-stories, 24x70 feet, which has later been extended until it is now 140 feet in length. He maintains his residence above his store, and still owns his original store building, which has been used for different purposes.

John Weinschrott has always supported the republican party, casting his first presidential vote for William Howard Taft, although Colonel Roosevelt was his choice for the nomination. He has always been identified with Plevna since he came to it when it was little more than a hamlet, and he the first merchant. Steadfastly he stuck to his business, rising above all discouragements and overcoming numerous obstacles, and he helped to organize the Commercial Club, of which he was second president, serving as such from 1913 to 1918. He also contributed his support in the establishing of the Plevna school district, and has been a member of the school board ever since. In 1918, two years after Plevna was incorporated, Mr. Weinschrott was chosen mayor or chief councilman. During 1911 he was very active in trying to get a market established at this point, but realized that such efforts were liable to be abortive until proper banking facilities were afforded, and then, with customary public spirit, he set about to interest V. S. Hinsl, representing the Bargerding interest of Minnesota, to open a state bank at Plevna, serving it as vice president until he disposed of his interest in it.

On November 25, 1906, John Weinschrott was married near Gladstone, North Dakota, to Frances Herold, a daughter of Peter Herold, who brought his family to this region from Hungary in 1898, having been a resident of Josefvalva. After coming to this country he engaged in farming. His wife bore the maiden name of Catherine Anton, and they became the parents of the following children: Mrs. Weinschrott, who is the eldest; Nick, who is a farmer near Gladstone, North Dakota; Mike, who is engaged in farming in the same neighborhood as his brother; Elizabeth, who died unmarried; and Peter, who is a resident of Dickinson, North Dakota. Mr. and Mrs. Herold have retired from their farm and are living at Dickinson. Mr. and Mrs. Weinschrott have had the following children born to them: John A., Anna Catherine, Frances (who died in infancy), Mary, Joseph Peter, Helen and Agnes.

The Weinschrotts are members of the Catholic Church, in which faith both Mr. and Mrs. Weinschrott were reared, and he has been actively identified with the growth of the church at Plevna, having served as one of its trustees since 1911. During the World war Mr. Weinschrott served as a member of the executive board of the Red Cross Chapter at Plevna, and rendered very valuable assistance in bringing the contributions of this district up to the necessary quota. Upright, strictly honorable in every respect, a man of action and determination, Mr. Weinschrott not only has made a success of his undertakings, but has carried his community with him, and is one of the recognized leaders in this part of Fallon County.

G. M. West— Belle C West

CHARLES M. WEST. The student of history cannot help but be impressed with the fact that war no matter when it is waged is very similar. While during the World war new methods of warfare were introduced, the underlying principles were the same as those of the great conflict in our own country when brother was arrayed against brother, section aginst section, and in each the identical high patriotism and personal sacrifice command reverent admiration. One of the veterans of the last mentioned conflict who is still spared to his family and country is Charles M. West, now living in honorable retirement at Kalispell after a busy life. He was born at Raymond Centre, New Hampshire, April 2, 1846, a son of Nathaniel D. and Mary (Giles) West, and the youngest of six children, and the only survivor.

Growing up in a good home, Charles M. West was sent to the local schools, and had laid his plans for a useful and happy life when the war clouds, long gathering burst upon his country. With others he formed a company at West Newberry, Massachusetts, for a three months' service, which then was regarded as the likely length of the war. He went by train to Boston, Massachusetts, and his first night's experience as a soldier was gained while camping in historic old Nathaniel Hall. Next morning, boy fashion, he started out to see the town, and crossed to the Charleston Navy Yard, where his brother Franklin was employed as chief engineer. Surprised at the sight of his brother, Franklin West told him that men, not boys, were needed at the front and took measures to have the venturesome lad sent back home.

This, of course, was discouraging to the patriotic boy, but he did not relinquish his determination to go to war, and when another brother, William West, made a visit home in 1862 he accompanied him back to his own home in Wisconsin and enlisted from that state on June 11, 1864, at Prairie du Sac, in Company K, Twenty-third Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, for three years, and was mustered into the service at Madison, Wisconsin. Mr. West was sent to New Orleans, Louisiana, where he joined his regiment in time to start on the expedition up the Red River under Colonel Guppey and General Banks, and participated in numerous battles, including that of Sabine Crossroads, Kane River and Alexander. He assisted in erecting the famous dam over the Red River. General Bailey conceived the project of building this dam with the idea of bringing the iron-clad gunboats down the river in high water from the point where they had stranded. Until he proposed this plan it was intended to blow them up to prevent their falling into the hands of the enemy. Some doubted the feasibility of this plan, but he was allowed to carry it out and was successful. For his efforts he was rewarded by promotion to the rank of brigadier general. After the building of the dam Mr. West's regiment made a 500 miles march down the Missisippi River, skirmishing all the way, subsisting principally on hardtack, and not much of that, and coffee, and many of the soldiers died from exposure and lack of proper food. The regiment went on to Fort Gaines, Alabama, and was at Fort Morgan when it surrendered. From there it went to Mosquito Point, where Mr. West was taken sick and was returned to the hospital at New Orleans, but as he was unconscious all of the time he has no recollection of the trip. When sufficiently recovered he obtained a ninety day furlough and paid his brother William a visit in Wisconsin, and then rejoined his regiment at Helena, Arkansas, from whence the regiment was sent to Dolphin Island and from there to Spanish Fort, participating in a hardly fought engagement there and at Fort Blakeley. Mr. West was there wounded by a piece of shell, the explosion of which killed sixteen soldiers. In passing the shell went over the shoulder of an officer who had just stopped to pick up a portion of his equipment that had dropped, and thus escaped. The regiment then crossed the bay to Mobile, and from there Mr. West was transferred to Brownville, Texas, and made a part of Company B, Thirty-fifth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and remained with it doing camp duty. On March 15, 1866, Mr. West was mustered out at Madison, Wisconsin, and discharged. It was while at Mobile that he and his regiment received the disheartening news of the death of the beloved president.

His military service completed Mr. West went to his brother William's home and was engaged in farming until 1868. On October 22, 1868, he was married to Miss Belle Hunter, born near Meadville, Pennsylvania, who, when sixteen years old had removed to Iowa with her parents, William and Nancy (Lantz) Hunter. Of their family of ten children Mrs. West was the third in order of birth. She was educated in the public schools of Crawford County, Pennsylvania. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. West went to Clinton, Iowa, where he was engaged in work as an engineer and for thirty years continued to operate stationary engines in lumber and flour mills at various points. Leaving Clinton, Mr. West went to Kansas, and two years later to Cedar Springs, Michigan, and was also at Perry, Michigan. For nine years he was engaged with the flour-mill interests of Michigan and then went to Barton County, Missouri, where he remained for ten years, his next move being to North Dakota, where he proved up a homestead and became the first postmaster at Reno that state. Mr. West then located at Kalispell, where he built a home, but sold it in 1908, having previously sold his ranch. He went to Missouri on a visit in 1909 and in the following year, 1910, built his present home. In 1915 he went to live with a widowed daughter in Missouri, but in 1919 came back to Kalispell, to his present home.

Mr. and Mrs. West became the parents of eight children, namely: Nora Viola; Edgar Guy; Rena Belle; William N.; Freeman Percy; Clair; Nellie, who died at the age of seven months; and Maple Naomi, who was named Maple because her father planted a maple tree on the day of her birth. Nora Viola married Clay Leaming, a veteran of the war between the North and South, and a native of Indiana. He was a man of fine character, who became county judge of Jasper County and a resident of Carthage, Missouri. Judge and Mrs. Leaming became the parents of five sons, Henry Clay, George Monroe, Perry West, Ried and Lester Lee. Judge Leaming died leaving a widow and five children. Edgar West married Lilly Nellis, and he is now an engineer at Roundup, Montana. Rena Belle married Alexander McCallum, and they have two children, Margaret Isabel and Anna Mae. William N. West married Nora Bright, and they have one child, Nancy Lee Belle. He is a farmer of Jasper County, Missouri, living near Carthage. Freeman Percy West married Iva Dell Myers, and they have two children, Charles Edward and Francis. He is a resident of Seattle, Washington. Clair West married Ethel McCloughlin, and they have two children, May E. and Gladys Belle. Mr. West is a lumber contractor of Pablo, Montana. Maple Naomi married Charles W. Benton, of Kalispell, and they have two children, Minnie Gertrude and Marvin Russell.

An interesting incident in the life of Mr. West occurred in 1908, when he paid a visit to his brothers in his old home in New Hampshire after they had been separated for nearly half a century. The three brothers were all veterans of the war, and in addition to Charles M. West were Franklin and William West. Franklin West was an engineer at Norfolk, Virginia, at the outbreak of the war, and was detained by the Confederates, who gave him his choice between enlisting in the southern army or going to prison. A loyal patriot, he went to prison, but through his Masonic connections was liberated, General Butler making his affairs a personal matter. However, he lost all his property, but at last managed to get across the line into Union territory, and there enlisted in defense of his country. The brothers enjoyed their re-union and the photograph of the group was published in the local papers at that time.

Charles M. West is also a Mason, and he also belongs to the Odd Fellows and to the Grand Army of the Republic. Mrs. West is a member of the Seventh Day Advent Christian Church. Mr. West is very liberal in his political views, preferring to cast his vote for the man rather than to be bound down by party ties. A man of the highest moral character, he has ordered his life according to the following rule:

"Do all the good you can to all the people you can in every way you can."

WENDELL COTTON, M. D. One of the prominent members of the medical profession of Rosebud County, Doctor Cotton is a senior member of the firm Cotton & Haywood, physicians and surgeons at Forsyth. He has been in active practice for eight years, and performed the duties of an army surgeon during a portion of the World war.

Doctor Cotton was born at Sheridan, Wyoming, October 29, 1887. His father, Thomas M. Cotton, was a native of Pennsylvania, acquired a liberal college education, and became an able lawyer and one of the pioneers in his profession at Sheridan, Wyoming. He moved to Sheridan from Fort Collins, Colorado. He did his first practice in the territorial bar of Wyoming. He achieved a dignified place as a lawyer, also as a factor in local and state republican politics, and established the Sheridan Post, now one of the leading republican papers of Northern Wyoming. He gained much prominence for a man of his years, since he died when only about thirty-seven years of age, in 1892. Thomas M. Cotton married at Peru, Indiana, Ella Hiatt, a native of that section of Indiana and of an old Quaker family. She is now the wife of Herman Henschke, of Sheridan.

Doctor Cotton, who was the only son of his parents, was educated in the public schools of Sheridan. He was only five years of age when his father died, and he also helped earn his living in spare time as a grocery clerk. After completing high school work he spent a year and a half in the Nebraska Wesleyan University and two years in the scientific department of DePauw University at Greencastle, Indiana. With a liberal college education he entered the medical school of Northwestern University, at Chicago, where he was graduated in June, 1912.

Doctor Cotton then returned to his native town of Sheridan, but soon removed to Ashland, Montana, where he conducted a drug business in addition to his practice. He was also designated by the Government as agency physician and surgeon on the Northern Cheyenne Reservation. Moving to Forsyth in 1917, Doctor Cotton formed his present partnership with Doctor Haywood, and the firm handle a large and profitable private practice and are also local surgeons for the railways.

Doctor Cotton made his first effort to enter the war in 1917, but was rejected on account of physical defect. When this defect was overcome he was accepted for active duty June 1, 1918, at Camp Lewis, Washington. He was assigned to the Base Hospital in the section of skin and genito-urinary diseases, and later transferred to Base Hospital No. 162 for overseas duty. The armistice was signed before his unit left Camp Lewis, and he was finally discharged there June 1, 1919. Before resuming private practice at Forsyth Doctor Cotton took post-graduate work in the Mayo clinic at Rochester, Minnesota, and in the Cook County Hospital at Chicago.

Doctor Cotton is an active member of the Forsyth Chamber of Commerce, and is a republican, having cast his first presidential vote for Mr. Taft. He is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and is a member of Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena.

At Forsyth, June 2, 1917, Doctor Cotton married Miss Ruth B. Cain, of Broadus, Montana. She was born at Elroy, Wisconsin, and was educated in the schools of that town. Prior to her marriage she was in the postoffice at Ashland, Montana. Doctor and Mrs. Cotton have two children, Beverly and Wendell Thomas.

CHARLES B. TABER came to Montana territory nearly forty years ago as an engineer with the original surveyors of the Northern Pacific Railway, and out of his long experience has acquired a most minute and extended knowledge of Montana from the standpoint of a civil engineer, and is probably the leading authority on irrigation projects in the Yellowstone Valley.

Mr. Taber, for many years a resident of Forsyth, was born at New Bedford, Massachusetts, January 20, 1860. His Americanism is the product of nearly three centuries of residence. His first American ancestor was Thomas Taber, who settled at Plymouth Colony in 1623. His grandfather, Joseph Taber, followed the industry characteristic of most of the early generations, farming. He married Phoebe Ashley. They had five sons, Stephen, Jacob, Phineas, Abram and Marcus W. In the early years of the nineteenth century more whaling vessels were outfitted and called their home port New Bedford than any other point along the American coast. The whaling industry was supreme at New Bedford, and it was perhaps only natural that all these five sons of Joseph Taber should become captains of whaling vessels.

Capt. Marcus W. Taber made his first voyage about 1834 and continued to follow the sea for about thirty-five years, eventually retiring and living out his life at New Bedford, where he died in 1903, at the age of eighty-four. Capt. Marcus W. Taber married Olive C. Ashley. Her father, Jefferson Ashley, was born in the New Bedford locality, and farmed a landed estate where many generations of the family had lived. This property had descended without change of title from the time of the old Plymouth Colony. An abstract of the property in recent years showed that no incumbrance had ever been recorded against it. Olive C. Ashley was one of three daughters, the others being Lovica W. and Mrs. Elizabeth Winslow. Mrs. Marcus Taber is still living at New Bedford. She is the mother of two sons, Charles B. and Edward G. Edward G. is likewise a civil engineer, now a resident of Spokane, Washington, and for a third of a century has been chief engineer of D. C. Corbin's operations, and throughout that period identified with the far West.

Charles B. Taber grew up in New Bedford, acquired a high school education, and later completed his education in Boston. For about a year he had regular field practice with the city engineer of New Bedford, and then left his native city to come West to enter the service of the Northern Pacific Railway Company as one of the engineers of the survey of the main line. He joined the party at Glendive as instrument man on location, and was associated with the work of construction all the way from Glendive to Yellowstone National Park.

Mr. Taber, who arrived in the Yellowstone Valley in 1881, left the railroad when the survey reached the National Park and became a settler and homesteader on the Rosebud, in what was then Custer County. From 1883 until 1889 he ran an increasing herd of horses and cattle with headquarters twelve miles southeast of Forsyth. However, he did not discontinue his profession altogether, since he was county surveyor of Custer County. At that time this county included a vast territory subsequently subdivided into seven counties. In intervals of his ranch work he also resumed engineering with railway companies, once in Washington and Oregon for the O. R. and N. Company, and again in location in construction for the Northern Pacific in Manitoba.

Leaving his ranch and moving to Forsyth, he resumed his profession as a civil engineer, and became identified with the pioneer irrigation project, and was engineer for nearly all the small systems. In 1905 he started the Cartersville Project, the first big irrigation effort in Rosebud County, and witnessed its completion within two years. The next large project, begun immediately after the Cartersville, was that of Pease Bottom, and it also was finished without delay. He built the Two Leggins Canal which irrigates the Lower Big Horn Valley below Hardin, following which he revised and extended the Yellowstone Project and the Hammond Canal, which, commenced twenty years ago, have been improved and extended from time to time. These canals and systems provide irrigation for all the available valley lands that can be watered by gravity flow, and thus Mr. Taber has had a big part and a big work in making this region of the Yellowstone Valley serviceable for agriculture.

Being county surveyor of Custer County when Rosebud County was created, he became the first surveyor of the new county, and has filled that office most of the years since, only two others having held it. Mr. Taber is one of the advisory board of the engineers of the Yellowstone Irrigation Association, an organization formed in the winter of 1919-20, with headquarters at Livingston, for the purpose of taking care of the water supply and promoting irrigation along the Yellowstone and in Eastern Montana. Through his long experience he is frequently called into consultation upon matters affecting engineering projects over the state.

Mr. Taber was elected the first mayor of Forsyth. He is one of the influential republicans of Rosebud County, and his antecedents were old whigs and became original republicans in Massachusetts. Mr. Taber cast his first vote in Montana in 1892 while with the engineering camp near Glendive.

At Glendive, June 30, 1889, he married Miss Emma Choisser, daughter of William Choisser, a venerable retired rancher of Forsyth and sister of the late Jo E. Choisser, a prominent business man of Rosebud County. Mr. and Mrs. Taber have one daughter, Jessie, who was born at Forsyth and completed her education in Bruno Hall at Spokane.

Hon. John E. Edwards, president of the Bank of Commerce of Forsyth, and who continuously for thirteen years has sat in the Montana Senate as representative of Rosebud County, has many of the best distinctions associated with personal leadership in business and politics in the state of Montana, where he has lived for more than thirty years, in fact having come here the same year and shortly prior to the admission of Montana to the Union.

So far as ancestry counts, a worthy and useful life might properly have been predicted for him at the beginning. He is a member of the Edwards family that has been conspicuously identified with New England history from the earliest colonial period. In later generations the Edwards family has achieved much military distinction. His father, Gen. Oliver Edwards, was reared in Springfield, Massachusetts. He had a Yankee genius for mechanics, and was an inventor of no mean ability. When a young man he was sent South to New Orleans to erect a sugar factory in Louisiana. After completing that work he returned North and for a time lived in Warsaw, Illinois, where he built a foundry and where it was his good fortune to find his wife, Anna E. Johnston. Her father, John E. Johnston, was born in the north of Ireland, located as a young man at Warsaw, Illinois, and for many years was one of the wealthy residents of that community. With the outbreak of the Civil war Oliver Edwards returned to Springfield, Massachusetts, and entered the service of the Union as a private. He rose through the various grades to captain, and after helping organize the Thirty-seventh Massachusetts Infantry at Springfield and surrounding cities he was commissioned its colonel by the governor of Massachusetts. He became one of the distinguished Civil war leaders, and eventually received the rank of brevet major-general and with the close of the war was made a colonel in the regular army, but soon resigned. A nephew of Gen. Oliver Edwards is Maj.-Gen. Clarence R. Edwards, who graduated from West Point in 1883, and has had a long and distinguished service in the regular army, having been in the Philippines, and early in 1917 was called from his command of the Department of the Northeast to lead the Twenty-sixth Division in the American Expeditionary Forces in France.

After leaving the army Gen. Oliver Edwards became general manager of the Florence Sewing Machine Works at Florence, Massachusetts. He remained there eight years, and then returned to Warsaw, Illinois, for the purpose of living a retired life. In 1880, however, he was persuaded to accept the general management of the Gardner Gun Company of London, England, manufacturing a type of machine gun tor the British navy. He was abroad engaged in that work for two years, and then returned to Warsaw, Illinois, and lived quietly until his death in 1904, at the age of sixty-nine. His widow died in Warsaw in January, 1920. There were two children, John E. and Mrs. S. E. Matzke of Warsaw.

John E. Edwards acquired an early training and education that equipped him to take his place as a man of action in the West. He was born at Warsaw, Illinois, July 17, 1866, attended the common schools of his native town and graduated from high school and completed his education at Hanover College in Hanover, Indiana. At the age of seventeen he went out to Colorado, and immediately began his experience on the ranch and range of the West. After a year or so his work took him to Wheeler County in the Texas Panhandle. That section was then the unrivaled center of the great cattle industry of the Southwest. In Wheeler County was the only court jurisdiction to serve seventeen unorganized counties of the Texas Panhandle. Mr.

Edwards joined the Texas Land and Cattle Company, operating under the old "laurel leaf" brand, and became a foreman of the company at the age of twenty. During his life on the southwestern range and also in Montana he came to know many conspicuous men of that period and industry. One of them in whose service he was in Texas was L. W. Stacey, a prominent capitalist and Montana citizen today at Miles City. He also knew Henry Peays, the county commissioner of Powder River County, Montana, and they had come up the trail to the North together. In Montana he worked on the roundup with Frank Murphy, the old Texan of the Mizpah. After leaving Texas he became acquainted with James Dahlman, the noted Nebraska democrat and famous mayor of Omaha.

It was in 1899 that Mr. Edwards made his trip over the northern trail from Texas, accompanying L. W. Stacey's outfit, which made its first stop on Powder River. He then went to work for the Niobrara Cattle Company, which soon sold its stock to Thomas Cruse, the distinguished Montana rancher. This was the original N bar outfit, with headquarters and range chiefly in Fergus County. Mr. Edwards joined the Cruse organization in the spring of 1890, and was with them for nine years, in charge of the Cruse outfit, which was one of the big cattle concerns of the state, having on the range at different times about twenty-five thousand head of cattle besides a hundred thousand sheep.

Mr. Edwards left the Cruse organization to take the agency of the Crow Indians for the purpose of obtaining the consent of the tribe to the opening of a million and a quarter acres of land, the last large slice cut off the reservation. During his three years as agent he acquired the consent of the Indians to this cession, and then resigned and settled at Forsyth.

Mr. Edwards has been identified with the town of Forsyth since July, 1902. At the request of Secretary of the Interior Hitchcock he was appointed by President Roosevelt the secretary's personal representative in the Indian field with jurisdiction over the Indian Reservation of the Northwest, but after a year resigned this office. Besides his position as agent and as special representative of the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Edwards had another important connection with the development of the Crow Reservation, in the matter of irrigation. He is a practical authority on irrigation in Montana. He was chiefly instrumental in the building of a system affecting twelve thousand acres of the Yellowstone Valley in Elsworth County. His next project was the Two Leggins Canal on Big Horn River in Big Horn County, which reclaimed twenty-eight thousand acres. While agent of the Crows he performed some irrigation construction work, and had done a similar service in Fergus County.

With his removal to Forsyth Mr. Edwards found his chief interests in banking and merchandising. He was one of the partners in the Richardson Mercantile Company as an associate of E. A. Richardson. At the same time he became one of the organizers of the Bank of Commerce, and for a number of years has been its president. Senator Edwards built the electric lighting plant of Forsyth & Hardin. He is a director of the Treasure State Bank of Hysham, a director of the Bank of Ashland, and is president and managing director of the Gazette Printing Company of Billings.

During the World war Senator Edwards was an original member of the Montana Council of Defense and continuosly active in promoting the war program of the state. A republican by inheritance as well as by choice, he cast his first national ballot in 1888 for Benjamin Harrison. At that time he was in Texas and his was the only republican vote cast in his precinct of Wheeler County. So far as his busy career as a Montana stockman permitted he was a worker for his party and good government during all the years of his residence here. He served as chairman of the Republican State Central Committee in 1912 and 1914. Senator Edwards has been a member of the State Senate since January, 1907, and in point of continuous service is one of the senior members of that body. He was elected for Rosebud County and has been re-elected every four years since. His first service was in the Tenth General Assembly, presided over by Lieutenant Governor Norris, and he has served under the republican Lieutenant Governor Allen and under the present incumbent, Lieutenant Governor McDowell. Much of the time he has been floor leader of his party, and for five terms was president pro tem. He was in the Senate while United States senators were still elected by the Legislature and cast three ballots for candidates for that office, once supporting the successful candidate. Obeying the popular mandate expressed at the primaries, he helped elect T. J. Walsh to the Senate.

In Fergus County, November 15, 1892, Senator Edwards married Miss Julia Anderson. Her father, Reese Anderson, was one of the prominent pioneers of Montana, coming from Kentucky. Mrs. Edwards was born at Deer Lodge, Montana, January 17, 1869, one of a family of five daughters and two sons. She was educated in Montana schools, and she and Senator Edwards have two daughters, Annie, Mrs. Fletcher S. Woolston, of Forsyth, and Miss Eunice I., who finished her education in Leland Stanford University in California.

WALTER E. CLARKE, manager of the Commercial Hotel of Forsyth, is a veteran railroad man, a former county official of Rosebud County, and has otherwise been prominent in the citizenship of Forsyth for nearly a quarter of a century.

He was born at Waunakee, Wisconsin, October 15, 1870, son of James and Harriet (Taylor) Clarke. His parents were born in England and as children were brought to the United States and were married in Wisconsin. His father spent all his active career as a merchant and early established his home and place of business at Waunakee. He lived there until his death on his seventy-fourth birthday, October 24, 1919. The widowed mother is still living there, and her children are: Annie, wife of William T. Riley, of Madison, Wisconsin; Walter E.; Harry T., who succeeded his father in business at Waunakee; Jessie M., wife of Ray Brown, of Lodi, Wisconsin; and Leon B., of Madison, Wisconsin.

The public school of Waunakee gave Walter E. Clarke his early education. He also gained a practical business experience in his father's store, and learned telegraphy in the local office of the Northwestern Railway Company. His first regular assignment to duty by the company was as operator at Capron, Illinois, and for two and a half years he was on duty at different points along the system. He then gave up railroad work and for a time lived in his home community in Wisconsin, and from there in August, 1895, he came to Montana and readily found a place for his skill as a telegraph operator with the Northern Pacific Railway at Forsyth. He resigned in 1898 and for the following year was in the barber business. When he went back to railroading he entered the operating service as a brakeman and in 1902 was promoted to conductor, and for twelve years had runs both as a freight and passenger conductor with headquarters at Forsyth.

In the meantime Mr. Clarke had become widely known as one of the popular citizens of Rosebud County, and his qualifications made him eligible as a candidate for public office. In November, 1914, he was elected on the republican ticket as county auditor, being the first chosen incumbent of that office in the county. After five months he was appointed county clerk to succeed R. J. Cole, and was regularly elected clerk in 1916. His official term was concluded in January, 1919, and soon afterward he took the management of the Commercial Hotel and has brought a large degree of prestige to that institution.

In 1919 Mr. Clarke was elected an alderman of Forsyth and was chosen again in 1920 and is one of the influential members of the administration of Mayor Cornwell. During the war in addition to the routine duties of county clerk he gave much of his time as a member of the local Draft Board. He is a member of the Order of Railway Conductors, and has taken his Masonic degrees in the Forsyth Lodge.

At Forsyth, September 21, 1905, Mr. Clarke married Miss Ida Marcyes. She was born in Minnesota but has lived in Montana since infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Clarke have one son, Hiram James, born July 8, 1906.

The late Hiram R. Marcyes, father of Mrs. Clarke, was one of the earliest settlers and business men of Forsyth. He was born in the Pine Tree State of Maine, but in early life went to the Northwestern frontier of Minnesota, and from that state entered the Union army as regimental band leader of the Fourth Minnesota Infantry. In 1883 he became a merchant at Forsyth, Montana, conducting one of the first places of business in the new town. Later he sold his stock to the Richardson Mercantile Company, and then employed his capital in building the Commercial Hotel, and had an active part in its management, though he also had property interests. He became widely known over the section of Montana now known as Rosebud County, and in 1898 was elected to the Legislature. While he was not a campaign orator, he always exercised a strong influence among his fellow citizens and gained a dignified record in the Legislature. He was a Master Mason and his church support was given the Methodists. He was a republican and had a long record as a Grand Army man, attending many encampments. Hiram R. Marcyes died in March, 1913. He married Louisa Loffelmacher, a native of Minnesota, who died before her husband. Their children were: Claude O., a ranchman of Rosebud County who married Estelle Miller; Ida M., Mrs. Clarke; Eva, wife of Doctor Alexander, of Forsyth; Grace E., Mrs. W. B. Dean, of Forsyth; and Olive F., wife of Frank Harding, of Forsyth.

PARK J. BUNKER. Banking and active connections with other business interests, a keen and public-spirited participation in public affairs, have brought a gratifying accumulation of prestige and esteem to Park J. Bunker, one of the leading men of affairs of Forsyth, where he is cashier of the First National Bank.

Mr. Bunker, who has known Montana for the past fifteen years, was born in the Town of Woodstock, McHenry County, Illinois, February 16, 1882. He belongs to prominent pioneer families of that rich section of Northern Illinois. His grandfather, George K. Bunker, was a native of Pennsylvania, and came West and passed around the southern end of Lake Michigan when Chicago was a city in anticipation rather than in reality. He went on west from Chicago into McHenry County, and was living there when what is now the main line of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway was built west from Chicago to the Mississippi River. With the exception of his wife he was the oldest resident of McHenry County when he died in 1905, at the age of eighty-one. He married Miss Martha Cottle, who survived him five years, to the age of eighty-six. They had two children, Frank M. and Mrs. Charles B. Wright, the latter of Woodstock.

Frank M. Bunker, father of the Forsyth banker, was born in McHenry County, and spent a long and active career in that section of Illinois. His chief interest was as a merchant, but he also served as a public official of his City of Woodstock, and was known as a man who made much success of all his undertakings. He was never affiliated either with church or fraternity and in politics voted as a republican. He died in April, 1918, at the age of sixty-two. Frank M. Bunker married Elizabeth Johnson, a native of Woodstock. Her father, Doctor Johnson, was one of the pioneer physicians of Northern Illinois, and with his brother Joseph laid out the Town of Woodstock, and gave the rest of his life to the practice of medicine in that community. Doctor Johnson had two children, Mrs. Bunker and a son, Park Johnson. The latter disappeared while serving as a railway mail clerk out of Chicago. Elizabeth Johnson was only an infant when her mother died, and she married after the death of her father.

Park J. Bunker was educated in the grammar and high schools of Woodstock and at the age of twenty-two graduated from Beloit College of Wisconsin. After completing his education he gained a knowledge of practical banking as an employe of the Merchants National Bank at St. Paul. He was with that institution about eighteen months and in September, 1905, came to Montana and employed his knowledge of banking to good purpose in assisting to start the Bank of Commerce of Forsyth, which he served as assistant cashier and as acting cashier. In the spring of 1907 he left the bank, and was identified with Edwards & Burke, railroad contractors at Bozeman, until the next spring. Then returning to Forsyth he was engaged in ranching and in handling real estate for a year. From 1909 to 1911 he had charge of the office of the W. B. Jordan & Sons Company of Miles City. In June, 1911, he became a merchant at Wibaux, but sold his interests in that section of Eastern Montana in October, 1914, and returned to his old Illinois home at Woodstock, where he looked after the affairs of his father, then in his declining years, and also some interests of his own.

In September, 1916, after an absence from the state of nearly two years, Mr. Bunker returned to Montana and since then has been a resident of Forsyth. He was president and manager of the Rosebud Abstract Company, later had the management of the electric light plant, but resigned and in 1918 became cashier of the First National Bank as successor of C. A. Westfall.

Mr. Bunker served as the first city treasurer of Forsyth and filled out the unexpired term of Alderman Northway when the latter became mayor. He has been a working member of the Chamber of Commerce and has given his aid to every movement for the general prosperity of the city. Especially creditable was his influence and work during war times as a member of each Liberty Loan committee, and he contributed in an important way to the splendid record credited to the First National Bank in the sale of Government securities. Since voting for Mr. Taft in 1908 he has been identified with the republican party. He is affiliated with the Lodge, Chapter and Knight Templar Commandery of Masons at Forsyth, and with the Lodge of Elks at Miles City.

Mr. Bunker married Miss Una Albertson at Wibaux, Montana, August 4, 1914. Her father was an early settler and farmer at Albion, Iowa, where he spent his last years and where Mrs. Bunker was born. She was educated in high school and subsequently graduated from the State University Hospital of Iowa City, as a trained nurse. She was next to the youngest in a family of eight children, whose names were Charles, Eva, Edna, Cyrus, Mary, Pearl, Una and Salome. The two children of Mr. and Mrs. Bunker are Francis M. and Mary Elizabeth.

AUGUST J. FREEMAN, who for the past five years has presided as judge of the Justice Court and of the Police Court of Forsyth, has rendered a service commending him to the people of that locality and distinguishing him among the worthiest and most useful citizens of the community.

Judge Freeman, who has been a Montanan for two decades, was born in the southern part of Sweden, near Christianstad, September 24, 1863. His people have been identified with the South of Sweden for generation after generation, and he is of pure Swedish stock. He is the youngest of the ten children of John and Anna (Jepson) Freeman. He has a brother, Otto, who is a miner and a resident of Wallace, Idaho. His father, John Freeman, came to the United States during the California gold days, being accompanied by a brother, who established himself in this country permanently. However, John returned to Sweden and lived out his life in the old country, following the vocation of farming.

August Freeman for six years of his early life served as a cadet in the artillery of the Swedish army, and while in the service acquired a practical and rather liberal education. Soon after his honorable discharge from the army he left home and came to America, taking the boat at Malmo for Denmark, crossing the North Sea to Hull, England, thence to Liverpool, and by a steamship of the White Star line coming to New York. He possessed a very modest amount of money when he reached this country and his first experiences were as a farm hand for a New York Yankee near Glens Falls. The wage of $15 a month seemed very attractive as compared with his standard of wages in the old world. He remained on the New York farm about a year, and then went on West to Michigan and for two years was a lumber jack in the woods of the Northern Peninsula, at still advanced wages over what he had been paid on the farm. In the meantime he was diligently perfecting his knowledge of English, and from the rough and arduous life of a lumber camp became a traveling salesman for a cigar house of Chicago. For ten years he traveled as a cigar salesman, covering all the northern states and British Columbia and many of the southern states. He had real ability as a salesman, was a hard worker, and altogether the experience was of much value to him financially and in other ways.

On leaving the road Mr. Freeman located at Benton Harbor, Michigan, and there established his first cigar factory. While there he also met and married his wife. Leaving Michigan, he came out to the Rocky Mountains in 1898, and for two years conducted a factory at Wallace, Idaho. Selling this business he came to Montana in 1900, and for about fifteen years gave his exclusive time and attention to his cigar factory at Miles City.

Judge Freeman has been a resident of Forsyth since 1915. For a time he resumed his business as a cigar manufacturer, but was soon appointed by the Board of County Commissioners as judge of the Justice Court. It was a selection entirely nonpartisan and based on his evident qualifications for the post and for his unalloyed citizenship, and the wisdom with which he has discharged his responsibilities is reflected in the subsequent elections that confirm him in the offices of justice and police judge.

He acquired American naturalization in Chicago, but cast his first presidential vote at Iron Mountain, Michigan, for James G. Blaine in 1884. He has always been a republican in national matters, but has frequently voted for men of the opposing party in local elections. Several years ago he was republican nominee for representative from Custer County, being defeated by only five votes. His first and only official service has been in his present office. He is also probation officer of the Forsyth schools.

June 24, 1895, Judge Freeman married Miss Ina Pearl Stilwell. She was born at Schoolcraft, Michigan, acquired a liberal education, and remained at home until her marriage. She is a daughter of George and Urillia (Elsworth) Stilwell. Her father was a Michigan soldier with the Twenty-second Regiment of Infantry, and spent his business career as a cabinent maker and painter. Mrs. Freeman's mother was in early life a teacher. Mrs. Freeman has always been interested in literary matters and the advancement of young people. At Forsyth she was one of the active spirits in the Woman's Club, and recently was a leader in the establishment of a free public library. She was appointed librarian in 1920 by the county commissioners, and is now serving in that capacity. During the war much of her time was spent in the quarters of the local Red Cross Chapter. She is a member and active in the Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church. Judge and Mrs. Freeman have two daughters: Arlyn, who is the wife of Wiley Duncan and lives in California; and Miss Virginia, a pupil in the high school of Forsyth.

ERNEST WOOLSTON ever since coming to Montana has given practically all his time and energies to merchandising, the line of work and service in which his career has found its best outlet from early youth to the present. Mr. Woolston is one of the leading business men and citizens of Forsyth, where he is active head of the Woolston Dry Goods Company.

He was born of an old American colonial family on a farm near Beverly, New Jersey, January 13, 1883. For generation after generation the Woolstons have lived in Burlington County, tracing their ancestry from three English brothers who came there in colonial days. One of these brothers was "Bud" Woolston, and Ernest Woolston is of that line. Isaac M. Woolston served as a soldier in the Civil war throughout that struggle, and established the carriage business at Beverly which, with modifications due to the advent of the automobile, is still carried on. Isaac M. Woolston, who died in 1901, at the age of seventy-six, married Miss Mary Jane Perkins, a descendant of Lord Sutton of England. She died in 1899, at the age of seventy-one. Her children comprised four sons and four daughters. Of these Eleazer Woolston was the fourth child and was born at Beverly, New Jersey, and has given all the energies of his mature career to the business of carriage manufacture, though in recent years the facilities of his factory have been devoted to the manufacture of automobile bodies. He is still living at the age of sixty-six. Eleazer Woolston married Rebecca A. Van Sciver, of Holland Dutch ancestry, and daughter of a Jersey farmer of substantial means. The children of Eleazer Woolston and wife are Ernest, Arthur and Miss May, the last two still living at Beverly.

Ernest Woolston after completing his education in the Beverly High School spent two years in a local drug store, acquiring a knowledge of business that has proved of value to him since he came to Montana. He came to the Northwest in 1900 to enter the service of E. A. Richardson, one of the widely known business men and citizens of Eastern Montana. For six years he was with Mr. Richardson at Crow Agency and at other points, and in 1906 moved to Forsyth and joined the Richardson Mercantile Company as a clerk and later, as manager of the dry goods and clothing department. When the Richardson Mercantile Company went out of business, Mr. Woolston took over the dry goods and the Woolston Dry Goods Company has become one of the prominent mercantile houses of Rosebud County.

So far as a busy merchant can he has contributed of his time to community matters, and served two years as president of the Forsyth Chamber of Commerce. He was a worker in the various Liberty Loan campaigns and in the Red Cross Chapter. His only fraternity is the Elks Lodge. He has voted as a republican, having cast his first presidential ballot for Colonel Roosevelt in 1904.

At Madeira, Ohio, July 25, 1916, Mr. Woolston married Miss Mary H. Morrill, who was born in that locality April 21, 1891. Her father, William S. Morrill, was for many years connected with the general offices of the Big Four Railway Company at Cincinnati. Mrs. Woolston has two brothers, Horace and Elliott, both living at Burgin, Kentucky. She is a graduate of Miami University of Ohio, and had lived in Montana for several years before her marriage. She came out to the state as supervisor of music in the Forsyth schools, and had held that position three years, when she married. She has been an active factor in the Woman's Club of Forsyth and was a member of the Red Cross during the war. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Woolston is Marjorie, born October 30, 1918.

George A. Baker, M. D., is one of the recent additions to the medical profession of Hardin, but already he has made his ability felt and is recognized as one of the skilled and dependable physicians and surgeons of the Big Horn Valley. He was born at Bowen, Illinois, on June 18, 1879, a son of George D. Baker, a merchant tailor, who died in 1884. Dr. George A. Baker has a brother, Dr. David A. Baker, of Jordan, Montana, whose life history is given elsewhere in this work, and with whom he was associated in the building of the Twin Butte Hospital.

Dr. George A. Baker secured his literary education in the Bowen High School, and he began to be a wage-earner on neighborhood farms. Later he went to Pocatello, Idaho, and entered the shops of the Oregon Short Line Railroad as a machinist's helper, then became a fireman and finally locomotive engineer on the extra list. After two years and eight months with this company Doctor Baker returned home and began the study of medicine at Keokuk, Iowa, in the College of Physicians and Surgeons. As he had to work his way through school, the following summer he became a brakeman for the Wabash Railroad, and with the money thus obtained returned to college that fall. The subsequent summer he returned to the Oregon Short Line as freight brakeman between Lima and Butte, and again resumed his medical studies in the fall. By this time he had made sufficient progress in medicine to enable him to take charge of his brother's practice at Wabasha, Minnesota. In the fall of that year he and his brother shipped a threshing outfit to Monango, North Dakota, Dr. George A. Baker operating it for six weeks, and then once more went back to school, and was graduated therefrom on May 26, 1908. Since then Doctor Baker has taken a number of courses at various schools at Chicago.

Having completed his preparations for a professional career, Doctor Baker went to Bowman, North Dakota, and was engaged in a general practice at that point until July 1, 1909. He then came to Montana and established himself at Ekalaka, where he remained until in September, 1917, and then entered the Medical Reserve Corps, with the rank of first lieutenant.

Joining the army, Doctor Baker went to Fort Riley, Kansas, to the Officers Training Camp, and after two months there was ordered to New York for overseas service, sailing for Liverpool, England, on the transport Massatalbian on June 12, 1918, and landed at Liverpool on the 24th of that month. Three days later he sailed from Southampton for Cherbourg, France, and arrived there the next day. On July 2d he arrived in casual camp just south of Paris, and on July 4th was assigned to the Thirteenth Engineers, ordered to Fleury, and went on duty at Rompont as lieutenant in the medical corps for the Sanitary Commission and troops between Vienne La Ville and Verdun and Souilly. He remained with that assignment until September 1st, when he was transferred to charge of the hospital and infirmary at Sommesous and of from 250 to 1,200 men, and the personnel of the railroad from Sommesous to Fleury. On November 1st he was ordered to Dun S-Meuse, and there received orders to report at Sedan as soon as the allied troops entered the city. Doctor Baker was ordered back to Sommesous on December 26th, and remained with the Thirteenth Engineers until he returned home. He left that point on March 17, 1919, eleven days after he had been promoted to the rank of captain, and sailed from Marseilles, France, on an Italian transport. Doctor Baker landed at Hoboken in April, was mustered out of the service at Camp Grant on May 13th, and reached Montana on May 17th. He immediately came to Hardin and entered upon a general practice. A strong believer in the American Legion, Doctor Baker belongs to the local organization.

On October 11, 1911, Doctor Baker was married at Miles City, Montana, to Miss Blanche Beasley, born at Ekalaka, Montana, in 1893, a daughter of Royal H. and Inez (Foster) Beasley. Mrs. Beasley is a daughter of Samuel I. Foster. Coming to Montana as a young man, Mr. Beasley was engaged in raising horses and mules on a ranch near Ekalaka, and died in 1910, leaving two children, Mrs. Baker and Hurley Beasley. Mrs. Beasley was later married to a Mr. Cleveland of Ekalaka, Montana. Doctor and Mrs. Baker have three children, Maxine, Susie Gale and George, Jr. Doctor Baker is a Master Mason, and belongs to the Heather Hill Masonic Club, an organization formed of Masons in France.

Calvin W. Pemberton, M. D. The first physician to locate at Hysham, Doctor Pemberton has had a busy professional career covering a period of sixteen years, eleven years in Montana. He is a fine type of the modern physician, capable, devoted to his profession, kindly and interested in his community, and has a large circle of friends and well wishers in this state.

Doctor Pemberton came to Montana from Illinois, and was born in Saline County of that state, February 22, 1871. He is a son of the venerable Matthew W. Pemberton of Galatia, Illinois. A native of Tennessee, in which state he grew to manhood, Matthew Pemberton then moved to Illinois, and as a pioneer homesteaded in Hamilton County, that state, under the "bit act." He grew up in a home of devout parents, early joined the church, and spent a long life in its service. As a young man he began preaching, and he held regular pastorates until he was superannuated. On the occasion of his ninety-sixth birthday the community insisted that he preach again, and he consented and delivered a memorable sermon on April 25, 1920. He is an Odd Fellow and a lifelong republican. Rev. Mr. Pemberton married Margaret Tate, a native of Tennessee. She died at Galatia, Illinois, in 1899, the mother of thirteen children, of whom Doctor Pemberton is the youngest. The survivors of this numerous Rooseveltian family besides Doctor Pemberton are Lorenzo T., of Forsyth, Montana; Mrs. Delilah Humphrey, of Galatia, Illinois; Eliza Ann, wife of Albert Smith, of Galatia; Columbus C., of Hamilton County, Illinois; Henry W., of Kirkwood, Missouri; Mollie R., wife of B. E. Edwards, of Grinnell, Iowa; Mrs. Jennie L. Malone, of Galatia; and George H., living near Galatia.

Calvin W. Pemberton spent his boyhood days at Galatia, attended the public schools, took a business college course at Sedalia, Missouri, and began the study of medicine with Doctors Carr and Johnson at Galatia. Having considerable progress to his credit, he then entered the old Marion Sims Beaumont Medical School at St. Louis, now the medical department of St. Louis University, and completed his course and received his degree in 1903. Doctor Pemberton returned to his home town of Galatia to begin practice, and left a well established practice there when he came to Montana in 1909. In September of that year he began practice in Rosebud County, being physician for the Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation. After eighteen months he transferred his home to the new community of Hysham, and is now the oldest practicing physician in the county in point of residence. With the responsibilities of a large private practice he has also found time to act in a public capacity, being surgeon for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and serving a temporary appointment as county health officer. Though past military age, he was a member of the Medical Reserve Corps during the World war.

Doctor Pemberton is a liberal and public-spirited citizen. In 1916 he built the first modern hotel at Hysham, the Eureka Hotel, a twelve-room house with steam heat and electric light. It was the first hotel with those modern facilities in the county. On coming to Hysham he entered a homestead three miles southeast, fulfilled his obligation to the Government and still owns the property. He was the first president of the Hysham Commercial Club. He is a member of the American Medical Association.

At Galatia, Illinois, September 18, 1889, Doctor Pemberton married Miss Jennie L. Webber, who was born in the same community, a daughter of Joseph R. and Rachel (Karnes) Webber. Her father, a native of Illinois, whose ancestry came from one of the Rhine provinces of Germany, has spent his life as a merchant, miller, farmer and tobacco dealer and is still a busy business man at Galatia. His children were: Mrs. Etta W. Pemberton, of Kirkwood, Missouri; Mrs. Jennie L. Pemberton; Mrs. F. L. Parks, of Galatia; and Dick O., of Galatia.

Doctor and Mrs. Pemberton have three children, Joseph C., Gladys W. and Rachel Josephine. The son volunteered and was in the Medical Hospital Corps in France, being connected with Base Hospital No. 97. He is now assistant superintendent of the institution for the feeble minded at Norwalk, California. Joseph Pemberton married Helen McKee, of Chicago. The daughter Gladys is the wife of D. G. Roney, of Hysham, and has a daughter, Mary Jane. Rachel Josephine is still pursuing her studies as a member of the class of 1922 in the Hysham High School.

Leonard V. Jenkins. The commercial history of the Town of Hysham revolves around Leonard V. Jenkins as its central figure. In point of service he is the oldest merchant, is the present mayor of the municipality, and during ten years of residence has found many opportunities to exercise his influence for good and advancement.

Mr. Jenkins is of southern birth and ancestry, having been born in Henderson County, North Carolina, May 21, 1882. His grandfather, Marion Jenkins, was a blacksmith by trade and served in the Confederate army during the war between the states. He died in Swain County, North Carolina. His sons were William J., Erastus P., Julius, Enoch and Joseph. Erastus P. Jenkins, father of the Montana merchant, was a native of North Carolina, but died from an accident in Southern Mississippi in 1919, at the age of sixty-three. He married Miss Lovada E. Cole, who was born in Henderson County, North Carolina, her mother being a member of the Bradley family of that state. She is still living at the age of sixty-three. She is the mother of four children: Houston T., of Baxterville, Mississippi; Leonard V.; Lloyd, of Baxterville; and Walter E., of Bozeman, Montana.

Leonard V. Jenkins at the age of eight years accompanied the family to Madison County, North Carolina, and he grew up in the Village of Hot Springs. His education was supplied by the public schools and by the superior advantages of Dorland Institute. However, at the age of fourteen he was doing his part toward the support of the family, and continued this contribution until he had passed his majority. During this time he bought and paid for a home for his parents. He also acquired a good business training, beginning as driver of a delivery wagon in Hot Springs, then was clerk in the store, and having in the meantime shown good capacity and diligence and willingness the company then sent him to Mississippi to take charge of a lumber commissary. He managed the commissary, also worked as log scaler, and accepted other responsibilities which tried his judgment and his nerve.

Mr. Jenkins remained in Mississippi about eighteen months and on December 21, 1906, came to Montana, first locating at Laurel. On arriving here he made a careful inventory of his assets, which aggregated $340.40. This sum, with some more he borrowed, he invested in Laurel town lots as a speculation, and in a brief time had his capital and something more besides. A local banker also gave him the opportunity to become interested in a lumber business, the banker furnishing the capital. He took charge of the yard, and his former experience in North Carolina and Mississippi stood him in good stead and he made the business profitable both to himself and his banker. While at Laurel he acquired the capital of $2,800 he brought with him to Hysham.

Hysham when he arrived contained a lumber yard, blacksmith shop and small store. He bought the exclusive general store and opened for business March 1, 1910. His first business house was a frame building 24 by 50 feet. Subsequently he built a brick structure 30 by 60 feet, with full basement, and a frame warehouse 24 by 36 feet in the rear. Mr. Jenkins carries on an extensive business in general merchandising and has made it profitable through giving it his almost exclusive attention and good judgment.

The store he built is not his only contribution to the improvement of Hysham, since he also put up a modern five-room cottage. He is a director of the First National Bank, has for several years been an interested worker in behalf of good schools, serving on the school board, and is now in his first term as mayor. To the credit of his administration are a municipal light and water plant and sewer system. Mr. Jenkins is a republican in national politics and fraternally has been affiliated with the Odd Fellows for several years and recently became a Master Mason. He was associated with other public-spirited and patriotic members of the community in prosecuting war work, and besides owning the limit in Thrift Stamps he was a generous purchaser of other war securities. He served as a member of the Council of Defense of Treasure County. Mr. Jenkins was also one of the local citizens who favored and actively interested themselves in behalf of the creation of Treasure County.

At Billings, Montana, September 26, 1908, about eighteen months before he came to Hysham, Mr. Jenkins married Miss Pearl Lunsford. She was born in Illinois, June 6, 1885, and was one of the three children of her father, her only surviving sister being Mrs. J. N. Scarborough of Benton, Illinois. Her mother is now Mrs. Martha L. Kilpatrick, and the Kilpatrick family settled at Laurel, Montana, about a quarter of a century ago. Mrs. Jenkins has two half brothers and two half sisters living at Laurel. Three children were born into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jenkins: Howard L., born in 1910; Leslie V., born in 1912; and Martha Elizabeth, born in July, 1918.

JOHN D. CLARK, clerk of the District Court of Treasure County, is an old time Montana citizen, having come to the territory ten years before Montana was admitted to the Union. For many years he was a mining superintendent, is still interested in mining, but for the past ten years has given his chief attention to other lines of business and public affairs.

Mr. Clark represents an old New York State family and was born in the City of Rochester, February 21, 1858. His father, John Clark, spent all his life in the Empire State, chiefly as a farmer in Genesee County. He married Margaret Doyle, who was born in Northern New York. John and Margaret Clark both died after their son John came to Montana. They had three sons and three daughters: Mary, who died in Ontario, Canada, as Mrs. John Curtain; Annie, a resident of Ontario; Maggie, who is married and living in Detroit, Michigan; John D.; Charles and Mack, in British Columbia.

John D. Clark acquired a high school education at Rochester, and also attended the Munsy Normal School in Munsy, Pennsylvania. Thus equipped, he became a teacher in Pennsylvania, and following a brief experience in that vocation he went to the oil fields in the western part of the state and was employed in drilling operations. His interests thus being established in the production of mineral resources, he was encouraged by the favorable reports of mineral deposits in Montana to come to the Northwest. The direct encouragement was afforded by a friend, and he arrived in Montana over the route of the Northern Pacific while it was being constructed. Its terminus was then Glendive, and from there he went overland to Helena.

This was in the year 1879. As a carpenter he worked at his trade in Helena about a year, following which he removed to Diamond City, where he had his home and work for nearly thirty years as superintendent and manager of the Confederate Gulch placer mines. This is one of the famous mining properties of Montana. Mr. Clark also became a stockholder in the property. His work was interrupted in 1911 by the flooding of the gulch by a cloudburst and general flood. This deluge so damaged the Confederate property as to render it almost useless. Since then Mr. Clark has had the responsibility of looking after the property and at some time mining may be resumed there.

On leaving the Placer mines he went to Carbon County and began farming near Joliet. He was there six years and then came to Hysham in 1916, becoming associated with other men in the county seat of Treasure County. He engaged in the implement business as a member of the firm Gardner & Clark, but a year later sold out and took charge of the ranch of his son, who was helping make the world safe for democracy in France. On leaving the ranch he returned to Hysham, and when the new County of Treasure was created by the Legislature he was named in the bill as first clerk of court. He entered upon his official duties April 1, 1919, and has rendered such a service in the administration of his duties as in every way to merit the confidence of his numerous friends.

Mr. Clark, cast his first presidential ballot at Rochester, New York, for General Garfield in 1876. Since then he has deviated from party regularity only twice, voting for Bryan in 1896, on the financial issue, and for Woodrow Wilson in 1916, on the war policy. Mr. Clark is a Mason, having joined Diamond City Lodge at White Sulphur Springs.

In Meagher County, Montana, October 3, 1888, Mr. Clark married Miss Viva Tinsley. She and her family were real Montana pioneers. While she was born in Chillicothe, Missouri, she was only six months old when her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Tinsley, came to Montana, settling in Gallatin Valley in 1868. Her father was interested in mining for a time, and then engaged in farming in the Willow Creek country. He was one of the sturdy men of his generation who did the work required of pioneers in Montana. He died in 1902 in Los Angeles, and his widow is now living at Spokane, Washington. Mrs. Clark, who was the oldest among four sons and three daughters, was educated in Townsend. Mr. and Mrs. Clark feel much satisfaction in the record of their children, all of whom have developed special fitness for their places in the world. The oldest, Frank A., a farmer at Joliet, Montana, married Tressa Cooper and has three children, Doris, Alta and Edwin. Walter, the second son, was the soldier representative of the family, spending two years as a member of Company K in the Three Hundred and Sixty-second Infantry. He went overseas in September, 1917, and was early assigned to duty when the Americans took over the Argonne sector, and in the famous battle of Argonne was badly wounded September 20, 1918. Fragments of a shell struck him in the hip and the right leg, and these wounds detained him in the hospital until after the armistice. He was sent home with his command and was discharged sound and well in May, 1919. He is now in charge of the Clark Lumber Company's yard at Wheat Basin, and is also interested in the Bradbrook-Saunders Lumber Company. The oldest daughter, Fay, is her father's deputy in the clerk's office. Ralph, the third son, is associated with the Bradbrook-Saunders Company at Rapelje. The two younger daughters are Ruth and Florence, the latter still in school, while Ruth is a druggist's apprentice at Hysham.

EDWARD A. CORNWELL is a native son of Montana, his father having been a regular soldier at one of the forts in the territory, and afterward connected with the Government service. His own life has been a busy one, engaged in merchandising and for a number of years past as a banker at Forsyth, where he is vice president of the Bank of Commerce.

Mr. Cornwell was born at old Fort Custer, May 25, 1879. His father, John H. Cornwell, was of English ancestry, a native of New York State, where he grew up in Steuben County. He had a limited education and in early life joined the regular army. He saw some active duty in the Southwest and far west during some of the last Indian campaigns, and came up from a post in Texas with the Eleventh Infantry to Montana, where he also saw Indian service. He entered the army as a private, and was discharged as a noncommissioned officer. For several years after leaving the army he was a post trader at old Fort Custer, where he was married. In 1901, leaving Montana, he moved to Yakima, Washington, and spent his last years as a farmer. He died there in 1910, at the age of fifty-eight. His widow, who is still living at Yakima, bore the maiden name of Anna Schoberg. She was born in Minnesota, a daughter of John Schoberg, of Swedish ancestry.

The oldest of eight children, Edward A. Cornwell acquired his early education at Fort Custer in Junction City and Livingston, Montana, graduating from the Livingston High School at the age of sixteen. Soon afterward he was employed in the general store of his uncle, E. A. Richardson, at the Crow Agency, and remained with the firm until 1904, when he was sent to Forsyth as manager of the Richardson Mercantile Company. Leaving there in 1908, he took the management of the W. B. Jordan & Sons Company at Miles City, but in 1911 returned to Forsyth and for the past nine years has been busied with his duties and responsibilities as a banker. He was cashier of the Bank of Commerce and since 1917 has been its vice president.

This bank was established in 1905 as a private institution and has been under a state charter since 1911. Those connected with the private bank were J. E. Edwards, C. M. Bair and E. A. Richardson. Mr. Edwards is president of the Bank of Commerce today, Mr. Cornwell and Mr. Richardson being vice presidents, and R. J. Cole, cashier. The capital has been increased from the original $50,000 to $75,000, and the bank now has a surplus of $40,000.

Mr. Cornwell is also a partner in the firm of Cornwell Brothers, hardware and furniture dealers, and is president of the Rosebud Abstract Company. During the World war he was county chairman of the Liberty Loan organization, member of the County Council of Defense, a member of the executive committee of the Red Cross, and had the satisfaction of seeing Rosebud County surpass every quota for funds.

His only public service of a strictly official character has been as mayor of Forsyth. He was elected to that office in the spring of 1919 as a nonpartisan candidate, succeeding Mayor J. Z. Northway. He has given a competent administration of the municipal affairs, and the chief feature of his term has been the completion of the dyke shutting out the flood waters of the Yellowstone from the town. Mr. Cornwell is a republican, having cast his first presidential vote for William McKinley. He is a member of the various Masonic bodies, including the lodge, chapter and commandery at Forsyth, the council at Miles City, the Scottish Rite Consistory at Livingston and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, and he is also a member of the Lodge of Elks at Miles City.

He has contributed something to the substantial upbuilding of his home town in the attractive residence where he and Mrs. Cornwell live, and also in the business structure occupied by the firm of Cornwell Brothers. On September 12, 1901, while connected with the mercantile firm at Crow Agency, Mr. Cornwell married Miss Edith M. Lewis. She was born at Flint, Michigan, October 24, 1877, daughter of John and Adelaide (Hart) Lewis, who some years later came West, lived at Montrose, Colorado, and in 1895 settled in Montana, at Crow Agency, where her father was superintendent of irrigation. He is now living at Hardin. Mrs. Cornwell is a high school graduate, is a member of the Eastern Star, and was very active in the Red Cross during the World war.

HARRY CORNWELL, member of the firm of Cornwell Brothers, merchants at Forsyth, is one of the young and vigorous business men of the state, has spent nearly all his life in Montana, and has shown a degree of initiative and progressiveness that has made him successful in his own affairs and a valuable factor in his community.

He was born at old Fort Custer, March 7, 1889, youngest son of John H. Cornwell, who came to Montana as a sergeant in the regular army, later was connected with the Indian trading establishment, and finally moved out to Washington and became a farmer. Harry Cornwell has two brothers in Montana, Edward A. and Jack Cornwell, whose careers are referred to herein.

Harry Cornwell lived to the age of eleven at Livingston, Montana, and then accompanied his parents to North Yakima, Washington, where he grew up on his father's farm and finished his education in the public schools. The presence of his brothers and perhaps other motives caused him to return to Montana after finishing his school days, and he acquired his business training as clerk for the Richardson Mercantile Company in Forsyth. He remained with that firm until he joined his brother Edward A. in the partnership of Cornwell Brothers, and they have since conducted a flourishing hardware business. To his business as a merchant Mr. Cornwell has given his best energies, though not at the sacrifice of a public-spirited attitude toward the community. He was an active member of the local committee for the promotion of Liberty Loan sales during the war. He has acquired and built a home at Forsyth, and his home and family are a primary interest with him always. He is a republican voter and cast his first presidential vote at Forsyth for William H. Taft. He is affiliated with the Elks Lodge at Miles City.

At Minneapolis, January 10, 1916, Mr. Cornwell married Miss Frances Philbrick. Her father is Freeman Philbrick, a pioneer of Rosebud County, and one of the prominent sheep men of the state. Mrs. Cornwell finished her education at Bruno Hall, a girls' school at Spokane, Washington, and was married soon after she left there. She and Mr. Cornwell have one son, Howard Freeman, born December 27, 1917.

HARRY M. THOMPSON. Through a number of years Harry M. Thompson has sustained the character and role of an efficient business man and citizen of Forsyth. He is a merchant of that city, also a member of the municipal council, is a native son of Montana, and represents a family that were pioneers in the old territory.

His grandfather was Mitchell Thompson, who was born in Belmont County, Ohio, and spent a long and active life as a farmer. In 1887 he removed to Livingston County, Illinois, and died near the town of Dwight at the age of seventy-eight. He was a Jeffersonian democrat, and that political faith has characterized practically all of his descendants. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church. Mitchell Thompson married Jane Elwood, also a native of Ohio. Both the Elwoods and Thompsons are of old American stock. The Elwoods of Pennsylvania, a prominent family, banquetted members of the Thompson family in September, 1920, and at that time a large number of representatives of both names were present. The children of Mitchell Thompson and wife were: Robert, who died in Salem, Oregon, where he left a family; John, who was a California forty-niner and lived in that state until his death, unmarried; Hugh, who was one of three sons to wear the uniform of a Union soldier during the Civil war, was wounded in the battle of Peach Mountain, and is now living at Dwight, Illinois; Mary, a twin sister of Hugh, became the wife of Arthur Marshall and died in Illinois; William, who went through the war without injury, was discharged at Washington from Sherman's army, and is also living at Dwight, Illinois; and Thomas J., the youngest of the family.

W. H. O'Connell

Margaret F. O'Connell

Thomas J. Thompson is a venerable veteran of the Civil war, a pioneer Montanan, and now living retired at Forsyth. He was born at Barnesville, Belmont County, Ohio, August 31, 1840, and grew to manhood in that county, acquiring a country school education. During the second year of the Civil war he joined a company of Minute Men, and was on guard duty in Virginia, Tennessee and at Erie, Pennsylvania, and remained in the service until the fall of 1865, when, some months after the close of hostilities, he was discharged at Dwight, Illinois. Following the war he became an Illinois farmer, but in 1880 came to Montana. Traveling from Dwight, he left the train at Bismarck, North Dakota, and the stage carried him to Miles City, where he arrived on the 16th of April. After some prospecting he sent for his family, who arrived in June of the same year. They were on the way three weeks, and traveled on the steamboat Terry from Bismarck to Miles City. The first work Thomas J. Thompson did in Miles City was in Broadwater and Hubbell's sawmill on the bank of Tongue River. During the summer of 1880 he took up a ranch on Bull Creek, occupying it with his family until the spring of 1883, when he moved to the mouth of Short Creek near Forsyth. Here he entered the cattle business on a modest scale, but soon became active in politics and in the fall of 1886 was nominated on the democratic ticket for county assessor of old Custer County. He was elected by a majority of 275 votes over the most prominent republican in the county at that time. Subsequently he was twice re-elected, and filled the office until statehood. His jurisdiction as county assessor covered an immense territory, Custer County then extending to Wibaux on the east, to the Missouri River on the north, and to the Little Missouri on the south. At least three times he rode over the entire district, visiting the settled portions, traveling in a buckboard. After retiring from office he moved to Miles City, where for two or three years he was in the dray business. Upon the organization of Rosebud County from old Custer he moved to Forsyth, for a short time conducted a confectionery store, and was then appointed a deputy warden under State Game Warden Scott, and performed the duties of that office continuously for fourteen years, until October, 1919, since which date he has enjoyed a well earned retirement at Forsyth.

Thomas J. Thompson cast his first presidential vote at Barnesville, Ohio, for Stephen A. Douglas in 1860, and wherever possible has never neglected to support the party candidates during the past sixty years. In the spring of 1919 he and his good wife celebrated their golden wedding anniversary, just fifty years after he had married in Belmont County, Ohio, Miss Sarah E. Conden. She was born in Guernsey County, Ohio, in 1843, daughter of John Conden, and she died at Forsyth in January, 1920. She was the mother of three children: Mrs. Ida Northway, of Forsyth; Nellie, who died at Forsyth, the wife of John B. Collins; and Harry M.

Harry M. Thompson was born in that portion of old Custer County now Rosebud County, on December 9, 1883. He finished schooling in Miles City and at the age of fourteen began acquiring a business training there as an employe of the firm of Lakin and Westfall. Three years later he went on the range for the E2 outfit of the Concord Cattle Company, spending about three summers with them, and for a short time with the LO outfit. On leaving the range he came to Forsyth and for several years was clerk in local stores, and then became a partner in the Home Trading Company. With the closing out of that business in February, 1920, he resumed his connection with the commercial life of the community on the 30th of May as head of Thompson-Gowen Company, grocers, conducting one of the leading firms of its kind in Rosebud County.

Mr. Thompson as the son of a rock-ribbed democrat has retained the political allegiance of the family, casting his first presidential vote for Mr. Bryan. He was chosen a member of the board of aldermen of Forsyth in April, 1919, and has been one of the factors in the present administration of Mayor Cornwell. Mr. Thompson is affiliated with the various Masonic bodies, including the Blue Lodge, Chapter and Commandery of Forsyth, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He was married on July 26, 1920, at Terry, Montana, to Edith May Caulk.

W. H. O'Connell. One of the big-hearted and typical westerners who has endeared himself to everyone that knows him is William H. O'Connell of Kalispell, whose activities in ranching have placed him among the prosperous men of his section, just as his many acts of kindness entitle him to place among the desirable citizens of Montana. He was born at Dubuque, Iowa, a son of John and Catherine O'Connell, who located there prior to 1834, but during the Indian troubles which terminated in the Black Hawk war were driven from their home. After peace was declared they returned to Dubuque. John O'Connell was a brave man, and his experiences with the Indians are worthy a place in this volume did space permit their insertion.

Growing up in his native city, W. H. O'Connell attended its schools, and then in the fall of 1895 came west to Butte, Montana, and in 1900 located in Flathead County. He was married in South Dakota to Margaret O'Connor, a daughter of Patrick and Margaret O'Connor. For several years after coming to Flathead County Mr. O'Connell was engaged in buying wheat for the Kalispell flour mills, and did an extensive business. He became so well known to the people of the county that he was elected on the democratic ticket as sheriff of Flathead County, and was re-elected to that office. During his administration some very interesting and exciting events took place, among which perhaps the most important was the robbing of the Great Northern Railroad, known as the Rondo Holdup, when $40,000 were stolen from the safe of the express messenger by two robbers who escaped. They were George Frank Hauser and Charles McDonald. Sheriff O'Connell and his deputy, William Parent, followed these men, tracing them by their lavish expenditure of money, to Bonner's Ferry. There the outlaws boarded a train, and were followed by the fearless sheriff and his deputy, who, awaiting their opportunity, arrested the men when about twenty miles from Spokane, Washington. The men occupied a stateroom and were enjoying themselves by drinking heavily. Sheriff O'Connell knowing that the outlaws were expert gunmen took no chances, but went into the stateroom with a gun in each hand, his deputy similarly armed, accompanying him, and ordered the men to raise their hands. It needed but one look into the determined faces and firmly held guns of the officials to convince the robbers that resistance was not only useless but impossible.

The men had $14,395 on their persons, much of it in the original packages easily identified as part of the "loot," and so no question was raised as to their guilt. The sheriff and his deputy brought the men back to Kalispell for action by the United States authorities. They were indicted and placed in the jail at Helena, from whence they escaped six weeks afterward by cutting through three sets of bars. George Frank Hauser was recaptured about a year later at Barnesville, Minnesota, by Martin Delaney and is now serving a life sentence at Fort Leavenworth, but his partner in crime has never been apprehended and is still at large. It was while Mr. O'Connell was sheriff that the notorious Fred Lebeau was hung for murder.

In addition to being sheriff Mr. O'Connell has been deputy state game warden for years, and in both offices has displayed the courage which has made his name one to be feared by the lawless all over this section of the state. He is a strong supporter of President Wilson and his policies, and has always voted the democratic ticket.

Mr. and Mrs. O'Connell have four children. Leo, who is now ticket agent for the Great Northern Railroad at Kalispell, is a veteran of the great war, serving for seventeen months overseas as chief operator at the First Army Headquarters, which were bombarded several times, but he remained at his post and faithfully transmitted the orders which had to pass through him, making his position a very important one. Charles J., who is also a veteran of this war, served in the navy on freighting transports which carried ammunition overseas, extremely dangerous work, and he also assisted in establishing coaling stations in the Azores, receiving his discharge in January, 1919, after which he returned home to his parents' ranch ten miles outside of Kalispell, where he is now living. Kathryn is a student of the Kalispell High School and John is attending the grammar grade of the district schools.

Mr. O'Connell is exceptionally kind hearted, as the following instance will show, and it is but one of many. One day while calling at the home of a neighbor on some business he was introduced to a young girl from Sweden, crippled for years from infantile paralysis, who had come to the vicinity in hope that she might be benefited by the waters of the famous Hot Springs. The ordinary person would have been contented with a courteous wish for her recovery, but not Mr. O'Connell. With the kindly smile upon his face, he asked in his own genial manner if she had plenty of money to carry her through the course of treatment necessary if she were to hope for a return to health, and finding that her resources were at low ebb he told her to give the matter no more thought, that he would attend to it, which he did by taking up a subscription, heading it so generously that those who followed him were ashamed not to be liberal, and the helpless, crippled girl through his thoughtfulness was enabled to remain at the springs until restored to health.

Many men who today are useful members of society owe their present prosperity to his helping hand when they came to the West, penniless and friendless. Big of heart, he has always found room for one more in his regard, and is never too busy to stretch out the hand of friendship to either stranger or neighbor, as the case may be, who needs his assistance. In all of his good work and charities he is backed by his wife, who is equally popular. It is such people as the O'Connells who restore faith in humanity and bring about a realization that the Golden Rule is not a dead letter but a bright, burning and living thing, actuating the lives and actions of many of the people of this generation, even if the acts of a few sometimes does obscure it and cause the melancholy reflection that the good old days of interdependence of one upon another has forever passed. To such a one, contact with such people as Mr. and Mrs. O'Connell is a revelation and one not easily forgotten.

Col. George Scheetz. Many and varied activities have made the name of Col. George Scheetz an influential and honored one. He is a member of a family which traces descent to the early Quakers of America, and descend in a direct line from a member of the colony of William Penn. His paternal great-grandfather was Frederick Scheetz and his grandfather was Rev. George Scheetz, of the Episcopal denomination, whose old church was in the northern part of the City of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. This Episcopal divine removed west about the time of the rebellion between the North and the South, and died in Chicago, where he was visiting his daughters. Rev. George Scheetz married Maria May Capelle, a daughter of an army surgeon who accompanied General Lafayette to America, and he was a Frenchman and of the Huguenot faith. The only son of this union was Frederick B., and there were four daughters who reared families.

Frederick B. Scheetz was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in 1817, probably in the same house in which his father was also born. He graduated from Bristol College of Philadelphia, and afterward engaged in engineering work on the Chambersburg and Gettysburg Railroad. But about the year 1855 he entered the ministry of the Episcopal Church, giving up his transitory work for the religious field. But many years before this time, in 1839, he had established the Scheetz family in Ralls County, Missouri, making the journey with his young wife from Philadelphia. He spent the final years of his life in that commonwealth, after having served his church faithfully and well. He built up a parish at Monroe and continued as its loved pastor for a generation or more, and moved finally to Kirkwood, where he passed away in death in 1890. His views were southern on the issues of the Civil war, and he gave his youngest son to the Confederate service

The Rev. Frederick B. Scheetz married Henrietta, a daughter of Henry Cruger, a New York man whose father was from Manchester, England. Mrs. Scheetz passed away at Kirkwood, Missouri, the mother of a large family of children, numbering: Henry C., whose home is in Monroe, Missouri; George, the well known Montana resident; Mrs. Charles Purnell, who resides in Minneapolis, Minnesota; Ellen, widow of Heber A. Hough and a resident of St. Louis, Missouri; Elizabeth, wife of B. M. Tracy, of Tacoma, Washington; and Miss Henrietta, who is still living at Kirkwood, Missouri.

Col. George Scheetz was born at the family home in Ralls County, Missouri, September 26, 1842, and his birthplace was near that of the renowned Mark Twain at Florida, Missouri. He attended school at Palmyra in Marion County, and completed his educational training in St. Paul's College at Palmyra, an Episcopal school. There he prepared himself for the profession of surveying, and obtained his first and early day practice in the work under his father, the Rev. Frederick B. Scheetz. In the spring of 1861 he entered the Confederate service, joining Capt. Tom Dobin's company, Colonel Hawkins' regiment. This regiment was made a part of General Green's brigade of the Missouri State Guard, and began active service at Memphis, Tennessee, in the spring of 1862. Mr. Scheetz's military work took him into the battles fought in Alabama, Georgia and Tennessee, including the memorable engagement at Corinth, the siege around Vicksburg and Murfreesboro and also included all the famous battles of the Atlanta campaign. At the close of the war he was with Hood's army, and following the battle of Nashville he served under Gen. Dick Taylor and surrendered at Shreveport, Louisiana, at the close of hostilities. During this long period of service Mr. Scheetz was twice slightly wounded and was captured at Vicksburg and paroled there, but resumed service at Demopolis, Alabama.

After his return home from the war and peace was again restored Colonel Scheetz spent a few years engaged at farm work in Missouri. He started then for Colorado, stopping en route in Texas for a brief time and also at other western points, and during the eight years he spent in Colorado engaged in Government land surveying he made his headquarters at Denver, although his work carried him all over the state. His main work, however, was performed in the eastern part of the commonwealth, and there he also did some preliminary engineering for the Rio Grande Railroad Company on extensions of their line.

From Colorado Colonel Scheetz came into Montana in 1883, and is therefore enrolled among the earliest pioneers of the commonwealth. Montana was yet a territory when he located within its boundaries as a Government surveyor, and he began his work on the Crow Indian Reservation, having charge of sectionizing the reserve. This particular work required a period of eight months, and during the thirty years which followed he continued in the main his connection with the Government in land surveying over the entire state. Two years of this period were spent in surveying the Flat Head Indian Reservation, and while performing this and also other work he maintained his home at Miles City, where he established his headquarters upon the completion of the work of the Crow Indian survey, and he still claims that Eastern Montana metropolis as his home.

From land surveying Colonel Scheetz finally turned his attention to other engineering work, including the Lower Yellowstone reclamation project, surveying it for the State of Montana. He was also the engineer of the Tongue River irrigation project, which brought many thousands of acres of valley land under productive cultivation. He was employed by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company for two years in preliminary and construction work, and also worked on the main line of the road through Montana and on branch lines in North and South Dakota.

During more recent years Colonel Scheetz has been identified with Fallon County, and was in that part of it which is now Carter County when it was divided and Carter County organized. In the bill which created the new division he was named as the county surveyor, and has been continuously elected to that office ever since. But prior to this time, and perhaps for a period of twenty years, he was the official surveyor for Custer County, and it would thus appear that the career of Colonel Scheetz as a surveyor and engineer covers more of the work and history of land surveying in Montana than any other engineer in the state. In addition to his surveying and engineering work for Carter County, he is also quite extensively engaged in ranching near Ekalaka.

While yet at Monroe, Missouri, January 4, 1869, Colonel Scheetz was married to Miss Kate B. Matthews, a daughter of Dr. John B. Matthews. Mrs. Scheetz was born in St. Louis, Missouri, and was educated in Miss Sneed's Academy at Kirkwood. Of the three children born to Colonel and Mrs. Scheetz only one lived to mature years, Mary, who became the wife of A. W. Clinebell and died in 1918 at Broken Bow, Nebraska, leaving three sons and a daughter. Mrs. Scheetz also died at Broken Bow, on the 1st of December, 1918.

As a citizen Colonel Scheetz has ever demonstrated his faith in the future of Montana, and his political activities for the commonwealth's advancement have been done quietly and as a supporter of democratic principles. In years past he was a member of the Patriotic Sons of America and the Fraternal Order of Eagles. He was alive to the work of the Red Cross and other auxiliary organizations during the period of the World war, and has always performed his full share of the work of a patriotic American citizen.

WILLIAM J. SCOTT. With the exception of the first few years of his life William J. Scott of Hardin has been a resident of the United States, and he has been one of the determining factors of Hardin since March, 1907. He was born in County Down, Ireland, on July 21, 1847, a son of John and Mary J. (Rogers) Scott, natives of Ireland, who came to the United States in 1859, locating at Lacrosse, Wisconsin, where he died in 1892, when he was over eighty-six years old. His widow survived him for two years and then died at Lacrosse, both of them having been quiet people engaged in farming all of their active years. Their children were four sons and four daughters, of whom William J. is the only survivor.

William J. Scott attended the public schools of Lacrosse, Wisconsin, and learned the printer's trade in the office of the historic "Brick Pomeroy, owner of the Lacrosse Democrat," at Madison, Wisconsin. Later he was with the "Republican Leader," completing his connection with the printing business at Lacrosse in 1880. While still engaged in newspaper work he went South and for a time conducted a paper at Jacksonport, Arkansas. At that time his health was very poor and he was forced to move about looking for a climate better suited to him, and during the early '70s he was in New Mexico, still continuing in the printing business. Subsequently he returned to Lacrosse and in 1880 was appointed under sheriff of Lacrosse County, later being elected sheriff of that same county, and being connected with that office for seventeen years. While serving as a deputy under his brother in 1884 a lynching occurred as the result of a shooting of a leader of a political procession marching through the streets of Lacrosse, and the assassin was lynched before he could be apprehended and spirited away by the officers of the law. In 1896 Mr. Scott was appointed superintendent of public property for the State of Wisconsin by Governor Schofield, and served for four years. When he retired from office he engaged in general contracting, and continued in that line until he left the state in the spring of 1907.

The first year he was in Montana, Mr. Scott was engaged in looking about him for a suitable location, and finally decided upon Hardin, which at that time had a population of about twenty-five. He embarked in the lumber business, and his was the second yard to be established in the town, and he continued to conduct it until he sold it on June 23, 1917, when he retired permanently.

Brought up in a republican household, Mr. Scott cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln while in the army and stationed at Memphis, Tennessee. He enlisted in the Union army in May, 1864, as a member of Company G, Fortieth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, commanded by Captain Phelps and Colonel Fallows, later Bishop Fallows of Chicago. The company mobilized at Camp Randall, Madison, Wisconsin, and was ordered to Memphis, Tennessee, to relieve some of the old troops from duty. Mr. Scott was made a guard of the trains there carrying supplies to the troops in the field, and he was in that city when it was raided by the Confederate general, N. B. Forrest, and there was danger of its being captured. At the close of the war Mr. Scott was ordered home and was mustered out at Madison, Wisconsin, in 1865, when he returned to civil life.

As a resident of Hardin he took part in the organization of Big Horn County, and was chairman on the committee on organization. He also took a very active part in the incorporation of Hardin as a town, and was elected its second mayor. During his administration the waterworks were established, and many other improvements made. Following the completion of his term of two years as mayor Mr. Scott was elected a member of the city council, and served as such for two years. In 1914 he was a candidate for the State Assembly, but lost on the recount, but was elected to that office two years later, and was re-elected in 1918, in the latter session being chairman of the horticultural committee and a member of the agricultural committee, and assisted in electing Speaker O. W. Belden. During his career in the Assembly he has been more interested in securing appropriate and wise legislation than thrusting himself into public notice as the father of bills. Mr. Scott has contributed of his time and money in advancing the business affairs of Hardin, and is still a stockholder and director of the First National Bank of that city.

In February, 1884, Mr. Scott was united in marriage with Miss Jeanette M. Lang, born in Canada, opposite to Ogdensburg, New York, a daughter of John Lang, who had three sons and three daughters. One of her brothers, Gideon G. Lang, lives at Billings, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Scott became the parents of the following children: John L., Ralph V. and Willard J.

John L. Scott is engaged in the lumber business at Belgrade, Montana. He married Maud Cooksey. Ralph V. Scott, who is now a student in the University of Wisconsin, is a veteran of the great war, serving in the One Hundred and Twenty-first Machine Gun Battalion, in which he enlisted on December 10, 1917, and was assigned to Company C of that organization. He sailed with his command for France on February 10, 1918, and participated in the drives of Alsace sector on May 5 to July 15, 1918; the Marne, July 26th to August 4th; Juvigny and Terny Sorney, August 26th to September 1st, and he was wounded in the foot at the engagement at Chateau Thierry, and was gassed on August 31, 1918. He returned to the United States in February, 1919. At present he is a member of the university football team. Willard J. Scott is engaged in the automobile business at Hardin. He, too, entered the World war, in October, 1918, and was in training at Camp McArthur at the time of the signing of the armistice, and was discharged on November 27, 1918. While these young sons were proving their patriotism in the same manner as did their father and his three brothers during the great conflict between the North and the South, Mr. Scott and the other members of his family were doing all in their power to assist the Government to win the war, for this is one of the 100 per cent American households of the country, whose roots are deeply embedded in the history of this land. It would be impossible for a Scott to be anything but a patriot in the best and highest sense of the word.

Alfred H. Bowman. One of the men who has won his place among the real factors in the development of this region is Alfred H. Bowman, of Hardin. He began his residence in this locality in 1912, and did so as a farmer. His location was adjacent to the new Town of Hardin, and he was a developer and improver of the open domain about the place, and continued to be actively engaged in farming until recently. The domain he developed into a range comprised 800 acres of land. He was one of a half a dozen men with farm land to build a system of irrigation under the name of the Farmer's Ditch Company. This was one of the first efforts made in this region at irrigation, and its purpose was to supply water for 4,000 acres of lands devoted to the demonstration of the adaptability of this neighborhood for the growing of alfalfa, and Mr. Bowman was the first farmer to call attention to this grass on and about his own farm. He was also the first one to experiment with timothy and red clover, both of which he found to develop splendidly, the latter plant growing to a height of five feet and cutting a mammoth crop of hay. As to corn, samples of his crop were exhibited at the Billings Seed Show, as good corn as he ever grew in Missouri or Nebraska, and his exhibit took first prize.

Having disposed of his irrigated ranch, Mr. Bowman turned his attention to fruit raising, and is preparing to plant 100,000 strawberry plants, as he has already made a successful demonstration of this line of business, which satisfies him completely.

While he has of course been deeply immersed with his farming experiments, and in them rendering an invaluable assistance to his fellow citizens, he has otherwise aided in developing other enterprises than his individual ones. The County of Big Horn was organized after he came to it, and he took an active part in forwarding the movement for its creation, was elected a member of the first Board of County Commissioners, and has been its chairman ever since. All of the work done by the county has the imprint of his personality and is the result of his handiwork, and his record as chairman for eight years is an unusual one and one worthy of commendation. The building of roads and bridges has called for executive ability of no usual order, ten miles of gravel being part of the permanent road work completed. Two bridges have been built over the Big Horn, and five over the Little Horn, while two span Tongue River, a somewhat remarkable record for a new county during eight years. The courthouse grounds have been provided by the board, and a permanent jail has been erected at an outlay of $10,000. A bonded indebtedness of $236,000 has been incurred for the road and bridge building campaign, and the board has also furnished seed to all applicants of the county who through the drought have been unable to buy what they needed to put in their crops. This latter outlay has been kept within $10,000, an inconsiderable amount as compared with the cost of similar accommodation in other counties of the state.

Mr. Bowman assisted in organizing the Hardin State Bank, and was elected its first president. Later he disposed of his stock in that bank and became one of the organizers of the Stockman's National Bank, and is still president of it, and also of the Wyola State Bank, the First National Bank of Lodgegrass, of the Saint Xavier State Bank, and is a director of the State Bank at the Crow Agency. He has been president of the Montana State Commissioners' Association for three years, and is still the incumbent of that office.

In his political sentiments Mr. Bowman is a democrat, and his first presidential vote was cast for James B. Weaver of Iowa. He was a delegate from Nebraska to the Chicago Democratic National Convention which nominated William Jennings Bryan, and he had the privilege of hearing the Platte orator make his famous "Crown of Thorns and Cross of Gold" speech. Mr. Bowman has made it a point to support the candidates of his party in national affairs, but locally is more independent.

He is a native of Marshall County, Illinois, and was born April 16, 1857. He was brought up on a farm in Clinton County, Missouri, and spent nineteen years of his life there, receiving his education in both country and town schools, as he attended school in both Hamilton and Lathrop. It was in this region that he began his independent career as a farmer, remaining there until 1884, when he moved to Nebraska and established his home near Lawrence. He hauled the first load of lumber into Lawrence to be used for building purposes. After being engaged for a brief period in farming in that neighborhood he embarked in a lumber business at Lawrence, later expanding his operations so as to include McClure, and he also became a merchant of the latter place, where he continued to operate until he left Nebraska for Montana. While living in Nebraska he began to be active in banking and was president of the First National Bank at Nelson. He was also a member of the Kemper-Bowman-Hillix Company of St. Joseph, Missouri, a live stock commission firm. Combined with his other interests Mr. Bowman was also interested in farming and stock raising during the twenty-four years he lived in Nebraska, and owned one of the finest Poland-China hog ranches ever developed in that state. He closed out his varied interests when he transferred his residence to Montana, and since then has concentrated his holdings in and about Hardin.

Mr. Bowman rightly is numbered among the pioneers of this region, for he saw the site of the county seat of Hardin County before there was a building in it, or a switch laid on the railroad to this point. He witnessed and participated in the first efforts made toward the establishment of a town, although he has only entered actively in the work within recent years. Farming has been his first love, and a longing for the soil will remain with him as long as he lives, for it is inbred. This inherited tendency has urged him on to further achievements in agricultural lines, and he proposes to combine his new venture with an industrial one and is building and installing a fine, modern canning plant and will put up his own fruit.

Mr. Bowman's father was Vincent Bowman and his mother was Elizabeth Calder before her marriage. Vincent Bowman was born in Brown County, Ohio, on January 19, 1831, a son of Vincent Bowman, the latter born in Amherst County, Virginia, on February 6, 1793. Entering Marshall County, Illinois, prior to the building of a railroad in the state, he spent his life there as a farmer, and was one of the pioneers of that region who hauled grain for 100 miles to the then Village of Chicago to market. It was his practice to kill from 50 to 100 hogs at a time, and his product was hauled to Lakin on the Illinois River, where old "Jabe" Fisher, the Boston buyer, would stand, watching the weighing out, crying "hog on—hog off" as each hog was weighed. So accustomed did he grow to this that he did it mechanically, and it is related of him that once while attending a religious service he went to sleep, and being suddenly roused horrified the congregation by shouting at the top of his powerful voice "hog on." The Bowman farm was on Grand Prairie, and a little stream called Sandy Creek meandered close to it. It was on this farm that the elder Vincent Bowman rounded out his career of usefulness, although his death occurred at Hamilton, Missouri, where he had gone with his son in 1865. He lived to be seventy-seven years old. In politics he was a whig, while in religious faith he was a United Brethren. His wife bore the maiden name of Jane McLean, and all of their nine children grew to maturity.

This branch of the Bowman family is one of the original ones in America, and it had its beginning here in the person of Drury Bowman, the great-great-grandfather of Alfred H. Bowman of Hardin. Drury Bowman was a native of Switzerland, who went to England, and there a son, John, was born to him, probably in 1740. John Bowman was married to a woman of German birth, and he brought her with him to Amherst County, Virginia, and the elder Vincent Bowman was one of their children, and was born in that locality.

The younger Vincent Bowman, father of Alfred H. Bowman of Hardin, was given an excellent education for his time, and became a very good penman, never losing his skill in this art, and continuing to be an expert when eighty-three years old. Although a farmer in the main, he also went into lumbering in Missouri, for several years. Adopting his father's religious belief as his own, he became very active in the United Brethren Church. He was a republican from the organization of the party until his death. He and his wife, Elizabeth Calder, had twelve children, of whom the following reached maturity: Alfred H., who is the eldest; Maggie A., who married Frank Estep, of Garden City, Kansas; Mark L., of Lathrop, Missouri; Ida, who is the wife of Reo Elliott, of Lathrop, Missouri; Ellsworth A., who lives at Albuquerque, New Mexico; Frank, who lives at Hamilton, Missouri; Harry E., who is a resident of Hastings, Nebraska; Elizabeth, who is a resident of Vanorin, Illinois, is Mrs. Fletcher Hamilton; and Eva P., who is Mrs. John Stinson, of Cain City, Texas.

Alfred H. Bowman was married at Cameron, Missouri, on January 1, 1880, to Miss Charlotte Estep, a daughter of Joshua and Rhoda (Weller) Estep. Mrs. Bowman was born in Seneca County, Ohio, on January 11, 1854, and was eleven years old when her parents moved to Clinton County, Missouri, and she secured her education in the country schools near Cameron. Her father was born in Maryland and her mother in England, and they both died on their farm near Cameron. Their children were as follows: Richard B., who is a resident of Fairport, Missouri; Mrs. Bowman, who is second in order of birth; Frank, who is a resident of Garden City, Kansas; James, who is a resident of the Cameron locality in Missouri; Fannie, who married John Williams, of Powhattan, Kansas; William, who is of Fresno, California; and Katie, who is Mrs. William Schooler, of Excelsior Springs, Missouri.

Mr. and Mrs. Bowman became the parents of the following children: Clara, who is the wife of Charles Haffner of Wyola, Montana, and has three children, Vincent, Virgil and Eleanor; Elmer, who is chairman of the State Hail Insurance Company of Montana, lives at Helena, married Ruth Scofield, and they have five children, Margaret, Harry, Fred, Laurence and Charlotte; Alvin J., who is a farmer near Huntley, Montana, married Margaret Price, and they have four children, Alfred, Susan, Mary and Margaret; and Carl, who is postmaster of Hardin, Montana, married Mary Calahan, and they have a son, Alfred.

Mr. Bowman was chairman of the Big Horn Council of Defense during the participation of this country in the World war, and carried a good share of the burden of buying bonds and raising funds for the Red Cross and other war work. He was made a Mason at Blue Hills, Nebraska, and passed through the lower lodges in that order while still a resident of Nebraska. He took the Consistory work at Helena, Montana, and he is also a Shriner Mason, belonging to the Temple at Lincoln, Nebraska. The Congregational Church is the favorite one with the Bowman family. The Bowman residence is one of the convenient, homelike ones of Hardin, and in it the family take pleasure in entertaining their numerous friends.

CHARLES C. GUINN, one of the able lawyers of the Big Horn district, is carrying on an important practice at Hardin, and has lived in the state since 1913. He is a native of Fayette County, Illinois, having been born at Vandalia, that state, on August 2, 1884, and there attended school through the high school courses, following which he entered the state normal school at Normal, Illinois, and was graduated therefrom. He then entered the profession of teaching, and in it earned the money to carry him through his law studies in the law department of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, and after completing his studies took the state examination at Ottawa, Illinois, in 1913. He was admitted to the bar of Illinois soon thereafter, and a little later in that same year to the bar of Montana.

Deciding upon Montana as his place of residence Mr. Guinn visited various sections and decided that Hardin possessed excellent openings for the ambitious young man, and so located here permanently, continuing alone until 1919, when he formed a partnership with D. W. Maddox, under the firm name of Guinn & Maddox. He had a little experience in his profession prior to coming to the state as an associate of his father at Vandalia.

Among some of the important legislation with which he has been associated was that of Wiggins versus the Industrial Accident Board of Montana, which attracted considerable attention. The question involved was whether or not injuries caused by "Acts of God" were subject to compensation. Mr. Guinn was counsel for the plaintiff in a suit for damages brought by the mother of young Higgins for his death by lightning while in the employ of Big Horn County. The lower courts rendered judgment in his favor, but this was reversed on question of facts by the Supreme Court, which, however, held that no matter how a death was caused while in the performance of duty by an employe, the employer was liable for compensation for his death. This case settled the question of damages under like circumstances, and can be said to have established a precedent. The firm of Guinn & Maddox assisted in the prosecution of C. C. Blankenship, charged with the theft of several cars of cattle which he shipped from Lodgegrass, Big Horn County, that belonged to several owners. This wholesale theft created a sensation of great moment among the cattlemen. The first trial was a mistrial, and the case is still pending.

Mr. Guinn entered into the spirit of goodfellowship and citizenship upon locating at Hardin, and has since then borne his share of the burdens of politics. Nominated by the democratic party as its candidate for representative to the Legislature in 1914, he was elected by a gratifying majority, took his seat and assisted in making George L. Ramsey speaker. Mr. Guinn was put on the committee on irrigation and waterways, and made its chairman, and he was a member of the committee on live stock. However, he was interested in the legislation with reference to irrigation, such a live issue in this district, as well as that pertaining to the farmers, and helped to frame the present irrigation law which was his own measure. He introduced the bill for the reform of the primary law, amending it from an open to a closed ballot, which was lost by only four votes in the House. This bill contained, as to form of ballot, practically the same provisions as the present primary law. The new county law was enacted at that legislative session, and the prohibition referendum law as well as the workingman's compensation law all went through at that session, and Mr. Guinn supported all of them.

In 1914 Mr. Guinn was made president of the Hardin Chamber of Commerce, and was re-elected in 1915. He is a Master Mason, having been made such at Hardin, and he is also a Knight of Pythias and is past chancellor of the Hardin Lodge of that order. When Hardin was incorporated as a townsite Mr. Guinn became one of the stockholders, and continued as such until quite recently.

Mr. Guinn traces back his ancestry in this typically old American family to Welsh ancestry. His grandfather Simon Guinn moved from Tennessee to Illinois at a very early day and all of his active years were spent in farming. He and his wife had four children and of them Francis M. Guinn was the father of Charles C. Guinn of Hardin.

Francis M. Guinn was born at Vandalia, Illinois, in 1855, and was there reared. He attended Eureka College and prepared himself for the practice of the law while discharging the duties of the Christian Church, was admitted to the bar in 1883, and has continued in a very active practice ever since. For some time he has been one of the eminent men of his calling connected with legislation in connection with the Anti-Saloon League of Illinois. He is a democrat and was the successful candidate of his party to the State Assembly in 1893.

Francis M. Guinn was married to Dora M. Henry, a daughter of Rev. J. O. Henry, a direct descendant of Patrick Henry, and an emigrant into Illinois from Virginia. His father was, with Alexander Campbell, one of the organizers of the Christian Church, and one of its charter members, and when he, too, came to Illinois from Virginia he was one of the pioneer circuit riders and early preachers of that denomination. Through the military service of this grandfather Mrs. Guinn was eligible to membership in the Daughters of the War with Mexico. Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Guinn had the following children: James O., who is a resident of Vandalia; Bessie M., who died as Mrs. Donner in Chicago, Illinois; Charles C., whose name heads this review; Marian, who is the wife of Fred L. Lewis, of Chicago, Illinois; and Dora, who is married and is a resident of Chicago. Mrs. Guinn died when her son C. C. Guinn was still a child, so he had the misfortune of being deprived of her care at a time when he needed it most.

Charles C. Guinn was married at Billings, Montana, on June 6, 1916, to Miss Lillian C. Kopriva, a daughter of Peter P. Kopriva, now of Saint Paul, Minnesota. Mrs. Guinn was born at Faribault, Minnesota, the fourth in a family of eight children. She was educated at Langdon, New York. There are no children of this marriage. During the late war Mr. Guinn was chairman of the local exemption board, and was a member of the legal advisory board. He also belonged to several committees having charge of the selling of liberty bonds and the raising of funds for war work. The armistice was signed before his questionnaire was examined and his classification made, as he came in the second draft.

ETHAN A. HOWELL. The men of the country entrusted with the handling of its finances have been selected because of a special fitness, partly gained from long experience, but largely due to natural qualifications. They are men with broad vision, keen powers of calculation, patient natures, cool judgments and remarkable powers of quick and decisive action. To the people of Big Horn County, Ethan A. Howell, president of the First National Bank of Hardin, does possess all of these general qualifications and others of a more individual character, and they are proud of him, his record in finances, and also of the fact that he is now the oldest continuous resident of the city, as well as its pioneer banker.

Mr. Howell's advent into Hardin and the banking business are co-incidental, and date back to October, 1907. He formed a partnership with J. B. Arnold and established the Bank of Hardin, a private institution, with a capital of $10,000, and this initial attempt has been expanded into the First National Bank, chartered as such in 1908. The capital is $65,000, and there is a surplus of $35,000. The first officials of the bank were G. F. Burla, president; William Bender, vice president; and E. A. Howell, cashier. Changes later took place, Mr. Howell becoming vice president, and F. M. Lipp, cashier. In 1918 Mr. Howell and F. M. Heinrich purchased the interest of Mr. Burla, and Mr. Howell was made its president and Mr. Heinrich, vice president.

Mr. Howell has also been interested in the development of irrigated and dry farming lands. Some years ago he assisted in incorporating the Hardin Townsite Company, which took over the Lincoln Townsite Company, and he is still interested in the company, and he is secretary and treasurer of it. His real concern for the locality in which he lives is now being shown in the efforts he is making to attract to it outside capital for the development of the vast natural resources and the securing of a permanent prosperity which in his judgment will develop as a result of increased population.

From the standpoint of politics Mr. Howell has shown his interest by voting to support good men for office, although in national matters he generally affiliates with the republican party Older members of his family were of a different political faith, but he could not agree with them on the question of protection for American industries. He is one of the charter members of Saint John Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, is a member of Billings Consistory, and of Algeria Shrine at Helena, Montana. For many years he has been treasurer of the Hardin Congregational Church, and is one of its charter members.

Mr Howell was born at Mexico, Missouri, on April 24, 1882. He was reared in his native city and attended its schools until within a short time of his graduation. His entry into the business world came as an employe of the First National Bank of that city in 1901, and with the exception of about two weeks he has been engaged in that line of endeavor continuously ever since. He went from the bank at Mexico to the old First National at Billings, Montana, and from there to Hardin. When he came to Montana he arrived without capital, and his rise has come without any outside influence, as the logical outcome of his own efforts. In erecting the third residence at Hardin, Mr. Howell gave practical proof of his faith in the place and his determination to make it his permanent home.

Mr. Howell is a son of John W. Howell, of Mexico, Missouri, who is a native of that state, and is now about seventy years old. He is a son of a Kentucky settler who moved to Lincoln County, Missouri, and located near Troy, Missouri, where his son, John W. was reared. He has been very actively engaged in a real estate and insurance business at Mexico for many years. John W. Howell married Nannie Garrard, a daughter of James Douglas and Jennie (Hull) Garrard, of the Kentucky Garrards from whom sprung Governor Garrard of Kentucky. Mrs. Howell died in 1910, as the mother of four children who reached maturity, namely: Ethan A., who is the eldest; Lucile, who is a resident of Kansas City, Missouri: Henry W., who is assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Hardin; and Helen, who is a teacher in the public schools of Miami, Oklahoma.

On June 14, 1905, Mr. Howell was united in marriage at Mexico, Missouri, to Miss Sallie Blythe, a daughter of Mrs. Bettie Blythe, a member of one of the old families of that community. Mrs. Howell was born near that city, was educated at Hardin College and was married not long after she completed her education. She is the elder of two daughters, her sister being Miss Mary Eva Blythe, an instructor in the Iowa State Universtiy at Iowa City, Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Howell have two daughters, Eloise Garrard and Elizabeth.

CARL RANKIN. The office of clerk and recorder of Big Horn County is presided over by Carl Rankin, one of the most efficient men in his line in this part of the state, and he has been connected with Hardin since its birth. He came into the neighborhood early enough to help stake out the town. which was done in May, 1907, and he became the local land agent for the Lincoln Land Company. that had title to the town site. Mr. Rankin remained in charge of the affairs of this company until August, 1009, at which time he was called to the general offices of the company at Lincoln, Nebraska, and continued there until in February, 1912, when he went to Logan County, Nebraska, and took charge of the Loop Valley Land Company at Stapleton, staking out that town and serving his company as its agent at that point until April, 1914, when he purchased the Stapleton Enterprise, a weekly newspaper, and published it until March, 1916, when he disposed of it and returned to his former home at Hardin.

Resuming his connection with the county seat of Big Horn County, Mr. Rankin engaged with A. L. Mitchell, president of the Hardin Townsite Company, as office manager, continuing as such until January 1, 1919, when he bought the insurance and bond business from Mr. Mitchell, and still conducts it under the name of the Rankin Insurance Office. On May 4, 1919, Mr. Rankin was appointed county clerk and recorder to succeed R. P. Ross, and assumed its duties on May 12 following. He was eminently fitted for the duties of this office, for he had an unusually thorough training in work of this nature, as in addition to his connection with townsite organization and development he had also been connected, under the careful supervision of his father, with the survey of the Crow Reservation during its allotment, having come to Montana in July, 1901, for that purpose, and when that important work was completed he was engaged in civil engineering and surveying on the reservation until he came to Hardin.

Carl Rankin came to Montana from Lawrence, Kansas, where he was born on November 28, 1879, a son of John K. Rankin, one of the real pioneers of Kansas and a man whose personal record is interwoven with the history of Douglas County and Lawrence, Kansas. He was born at Thorntown, Indiana, and secured his limited education in that state, which he left several years before he reached his majority. The family was left without a male head when his father died, and his widowed mother took her children into Tennessee some years prior to the war between the sections, but later returned north and took them into Kansas in 1854, when it was still a territory.

John K. Rankin became an Indian trader as a member of the old firm of Rankin & Watts, with stores at Pawnee and Quenemo. He was engaged in merchandising, first with the Indians and later with the white settlers who flocked to the Sunflower State. In 1873 he sold his mercantile interests and went into the banking business at Lawrence under the name of the Douglas County Savings Bank. The panic of that year resulted in the failure of his bank, and he lost the savings of a life time and was forced to begin life over again.

In the early '80s John K. Rankin was appointed to a position in the pension office at Washington, and was occupied with its duties for a few years. In 1888 he was appointed United States allotting agent for the Government allotting of Indian lands, and he was occupied in alloting the Crow and Flathead lands in Montana until 1909, when he returned to Lawrence, Kansas, and, buying an interest in an ice plant in partnership with J. D. Bowersock, spent the remainder of his life in that city which had been the scene of his former activities.

During the early and stirring days in Kansas John K. Rankin became an active factor in territorial politics, and was associated with its other leaders during the stormy session of the first meeting of the State Legislature, acting as doorkeeper of the Lecompton Legislature. He represented Douglas County in the Lower House of the Assembly, was postmaster of Lawrence, and not only a republican of the strongest type, but a leader in his party in the Second Congressional District. When his country had need of his services he was not found lacking in patriotism of the right kind, and joined the Second Kansas Cavalry, was commissioned a lieutenant, and began his field service near Springfield, Missouri, in the Battle of Wilson Creek. Later he was sent to join the Army of Tennessee, and at Chickamauga he became a member of General Rosecrans' staff, and remained with him until the close of the war. Following the declaration of peace Mr. Rankin was ordered to Omaha, Nebraska, and placed under the command of General Mitchell, who made a campaign into the plains of the West after the hostile Indians, marching across Nebraska, up the Platte River to Fort Laramie, Wyoming, and back through Kansas and down the smoky Hill River, thus completing the tour at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, where Mr. Rankin was discharged. While he was wearing the uniform of a Union soldier Quantrell's band of bushwhackers raided Lawrence on August 21, 1863, and the sons of this brave soldier were obliged to fight their way out of the invaded city, and by hiding in a corn field saved their lives.

John K. Rankin was a Presbyterian, always active in church work, and inherited his religious views, for he came from a family of Scotch Presbyterians, and one of his brothers entered the ministry of that church. With the election of Grover Cleveland to the presidency Mr. Rankin's plans were changed, but with customary vigor he read law, was admitted to the bar in 1894 and practiced that profession for several years, when the return of the republicans to power enabled him to resume his work in land allotment. His first wife bore the maiden name of Laura Phinney, and they had two children: Robert C., who is now a business man of Lawrence; and Herbert, who died in the Philippines while in charge of the hospital of the Sixth United States Cavalry. The second wife of John K. Rankin was formerly Miss Augusta Fischer, a daughter of Carl Fischer, and a native of Czersk, East Prussia. Mr. Rankin died on October 29, 1914, leaving as the children of his second marriage: Carl, whose name heads this review; Anna, who married Roy M. Cross, of Salt Lake City, Utah; Alice, who is Mrs. Earl H. Gafford, of San Antonio, Texas; and Gretchen, who is married and lives at Salina, Kansas.

Carl Rankin was married at Lawrence, Kansas, on March 3, 1904, to Miss Bessie Eaton, a daughter of Henry Eaton. Mrs. Rankin was born in Lake County, Ohio, near Paynesville, from whence the family moved to Rooks, Kansas, and later, when she was a child, moved to Douglas County. She was educated in the country schools and those of Lawrence. Mr. Eaton was a Union soldier from Ohio, and both in that state and Kansas was engaged in farming. His death occurred in Douglas County, leaving the following children: Charles, who lost his life in a railroad wreck while engineer on the Chicago & Alton Railroad; Dora, who is Mrs. B. C. Jewett, of Lawrence, Kansas; Lina, who married Jesse Wilson, of Lawrence; and Mrs. Rankin, who was born December 7, 1884. Mr. and Mrs. Rankin have two sons: John Knox and Carl Eaton.

During the late war Mr. Rankin was secretary of the Liberty Loan Committee of Hardin and Big Horn County, and participated in all of the various war activities, while his wife was equally efficient in forwarding the work of the Red Cross, both personally and as a member of the executive board of the local chapter. Mr. Rankin is a Master Mason. He and his wife are active workers and members of the Congregational Church.

FRANKLIN D. TANNER, county attorney of Big Horn County, and one of the alert and fearless young lawyers of this part of the state, has taken a convincing part in the history of Hardin and the development of the prestige and dignity of his calling in this part of the state. He came to Hardin in October, 1912, from Spencer, Medina County, Ohio, and since that time he has taken a forceful part in public affairs.

Mr. Tanner was born at Spencer, Ohio, on October 5, 1887, and there went to school and later to the Northern Ohio University at Ada, was graduated from its legal department in 1912, and immediately thereafter was admitted to the bar. Until the fall of that year he assisted his brother in some engineering work connected with the construction of pavement, and then left his old home for Montana.

He came into the Treasure State without any acquaintance with its people, so that all that he has since accomplished has been of his own initiative.

When he reached Billings he looked about and found the outlook at Hardin a promising one, and so came here and has seen no reason to regret his decision in its favor. He opened his office at Hardin about three months before the organization of Big Horn County, and his first case was tried in the old county. His first case in the new county was in defense of a man charged with a cattle theft, and his client was convicted and later paroled. While his practice is a general one, he has defended a number charged with an infraction of the law. Prior to his election to the office of county attorney, Mr. Tanner was city attorney of Hardin for four years, and has been one of the most energetic prosecutors this region has known, and it may be that his reputation for relentless justice to all evil-doers may have something to do with the fact that the annals of the new county have not been stained with a capital offense. He was elected county attorney in November, 1918, although he had already filled out the unexpired term of Julian Terrett, who resigned in September, 1917, to enter the army. Working in harmony with the sheriff, Mr. Tanner has been and is one of the most effective officials in the campaign against the lawless elements, and he and the sheriff have captured and secured the conviction of noted bootleggers transporting liquor into Montana from Wyoming, and have been the means of breaking up the wholesale traffic in illicit liquors through Big Horn County.

The magnitude of the Blankenship and McKinley cattle case attracted state-wide attention, the personal popularity of the criminals giving it added interest. The thieves received payment for 81 head of 158 head shipped, and the chief conspirator, Blankenship, was discovered at the stockyards in St. Joseph, Missouri, after a search had been made for him during more than a month. He was captured at Warwick, New York, by Gene Van Wert, and his case and that of his partner are pending in the court.

The Tanner family is an old one in the United States, and originated in England, from whence the American founder came to the colony of Massachusetts, and from that rock-bound New England Coast its members have spread out westward over the country.

The father of Franklin D. Tanner is William R. Tanner, a native of Medina County, Ohio, and a son of James Tanner. James Tanner was born in New York state, where he was reared and educated. During the pioneer period of Medina County he drove to it from New York with an ox team, bought land and there lived out his days. James Tanner married Emily Bleakman, and they had two daughters and four sons, among them being Prof. Henry T. Tanner, who after completing his service in the Union army became the owner of the Forest City Business College in Ohio.

William R. Tanner grew up in the wooded country of Medina County, although that region had taken on much of civilization and improvement by the time he came on the scene of action. The youngest in the family, he was allowed to spend more time in the country schools than the other members of the family, and taught school for a number of years, becoming an instructor in the high school at Chatham, Ohio, but during his later years he has been occupied with agricultural pursuits.

The maiden name of the wife of William R. Tanner was Meta Howe, and she is a daughter of Orsemus Howe, a native of New York state who moved to Medina County, Ohio, and became one of its farmers. During the war between the sections he served in the Union army for three years. William R. and Meta Tanner became the parents of the following children: Arthur, who is in the city mail service at Medina, Ohio; Fremont, who is a civil engineer at Warren, Ohio; Raymond, who is engaged in farming in the vicinity of Medina; Bonna, who is Mrs. Allen Shoup, of Cleveland, Ohio; Clarence, who died while in training at Camp Taylor, Kentucky; Bertha, who is the wife of Fred Nixon, of Sharon, Ohio; and Franklin D., whose name heads this review.

Franklin D. Tanner was married at Medina, Ohio, on March 31, 1913, by Reverend Fritch, a Congregational minister formerly stationed at Billings, Montana, to Ruth Kennedy, a daughter of Charles and Myra (Wheeler) Kennedy, and she was born at Medina, Ohio, as was her father before her. The Kennedy family belong to the agricultural class. Mrs. Tanner was one in a family of five sons and two daughters, the survivors being: Willard, who is a farmer of the vicinity of Medina, Ohio; Leah, who is a teacher of Cleveland, Ohio; Lois, who is the wife of Walter Clark, a farmer in the vicinity of Medina; Rufus, who is a veterinary surgeon of Bucyrus, Ohio, and Mrs. Tanner. Laylin, who was the youngest, died when he was fourteen years old. Mr. and Mrs. Tanner have a daughter, Laverna Ruth.

Mr. Tanner belongs to St. John Lodge No. 92, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Hardin; to Hardin Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is a member of both the Woodmen of the World and the Modern Woodmen of America. During the World war he was a member of the Legal Advisory Board of Big Horn County, was one of the registrars of the county for the selective draft, and belonged to the "Four Minute" Men.

Clarence F. Gillette. The legal profession at Hardin has as its pioneer Clarence F. Gillette, one of the leading exponents and supporters of the dignity of the law in this part of the state. When he added his presence to what was then, on October 17, 1911, the village of Hardin there were not to exceed 300 people on the townsite. He could not then secure an office, and so commenced his practice in his bedroom, which was in a building on the present site of the M. & M. Building on Main Street. His first client was the firm of Ralph McComb & Brother, and his first case was a Justice Court, one in which suit was brought to recover wages of $1.50. Mr. Gillette practiced alone until November 12, 1912, when Franklin D. Tanner joined the scattered and limited population, and they were then the only representatives of their calling until the creation of Hardin as the county seat of the new county brought others here. With the organization of Big Horn County Mr. Gillette was elected the first county attorney, and took office in January, 1913, The first case filed in the county was that of the State of Montana versus John MacDonald, a grand larceny case, and, prosecuting it, the new county attorney secured a verdict of guilty. After the termination of his two-year term Mr. Gillette left the office with the record of having filed fourteen informations, dismissed one case, and secured thirteen convictions, none of which were capital offenses, and it is a matter of congratulation that no such offense has yet been committed in Big Horn County.

In March, 1916, Mr. Gillette formed his first and only partnership, when he associated himself with T. H. Burke, under the name of Gillette & Burke. This was a strong combination and the firm made a reputation as trial lawyers in the county, but it was dissolved in October, 1919, since which time

Mr. Gillette has continued alone. He took active steps toward the organization of the Big Horn County Bar Association, of which he is president. He was in the City Council of Hardin for two years, and was then made city attorney for the second time, having previously held the office, and is now its incumbent.

Mr. Gillette came in the second draft during the World war, had filled out his questionnaire, and was ready to mail it when the signing of the armistice put an end to hostilities. During the period this country was in the war Mr. Gillette was a member of the Legal Advisory Board of Big Horn County, one of the "Four Minute" speakers, and a committeman on all of the Liberty Loan drives, while Mrs. Gillette was equally active as a Red Cross worker, and headed the committee composed of both men and women which held a Red Cross Carnival in May, 1918, which netted more than $3,000.

A strong republican, Mr. Gillette cast his first presidential vote at St. Joseph, Missouri, for a candidate of that party. He was reared in the vicinity of St. Joseph, receiving his literary training in the schools of that city. He read law in the offices of Wm. Dobbins and Judge Reaus, two of the leading attorneys of St. Joseph, and he spent two years in the former's office, acquiring a practical knowledge of law and included a test upon the constitution of Montana and the code of civil procedure of the state.

Mr. Gillette is a son of Harvey J. Gillette, an ex-Union soldier now living at Leavenworth, Kansas, but he was an early settler of Grand Island, Nebraska, and built the first brick hotel of the place, for many years making his business that of conducting hotels, completing his operations as such at St. Joseph, Missouri. He was born in Illinois in 1838, and a brother of his became one of the extensive operators at the Chicago Stock Yards as a packer. Leaving home as a child, Harvey J. Gillette drifted about the country, learning both the coopering and wheelwright trades, and he also served as a locomotive engineer, but finally expanded into the hotel business at Grand Island and in it found his life work. During the war between the states he enlisted in an Illinois regiment and served for three years, when he was shot in the foot while on a scouting expedition, and still carries that ball today.

Harvey J. Gillette was married to Lorinda Cramer, a native of Noble County, Indiana, and a member of an old New England family. The children born of this marriage were as follows: Charles A., who is president of the Gillette Custom Canning Factory at Auburn, Indiana; Norman Edgar, who is in charge of the construction work of Park College at Parkville, Missouri; Edna, who is Mrs. Brown, of Denver, Colorado; Frank H., who is a traveling salesman of California; Clarence F., whose name heads this review; and Addie, who is Mrs. Percy Walton, of Denver, Colorado.

Clarence F. Gillette was married at St. Joseph, Missouri, on December 31, 1908, to Miss Myrtle A. DeMar, born in Buchanan County, Missouri, and reared at Amazonia, that county. Mrs. Gillette is the youngest of four daughters and two sons born to her father, John DeMar, an ex-Union soldier. Mr. and Mrs. Gillette have two daughters, Ruth L. and Thelma M.

Mr. Gillette has proved that he had faith in the future of Hardin by erecting an eight-apartment house, and another one of four apartments, both of brick and thoroughly modern, and his five-room frame residence. He organized and is the father of the Hardin Building & Loan Association, and as secretary conducted its affairs for a time. He is one of the charter members of the Hardin Chamber of Commerce. When the Chambers of Commerce of Sheridan, Billings and Hardin appointed a reservation committee, composed of three men from each commercial body, to bring about an opening of the Crow Reservation Mr. Gillette was named as one of the committee from Hardin, and belonged to the party which escorted Senator Meyers and Congressmen Stout and Evans over the Reserve at different times, and he compiled the data at the Crow Agency for the speech made by Senator Walsh in an appeal to Congress for the opening of the Reservation to settlers. He redrafted for the Indians several of the proposed bills to remove objectionable features in them, and the "opening bill" has recently passed both Houses of Congress, and is in conference.

In the work for creation of Big Horn County Mr. Gillette was the prime mover and was made chairman of the committee organized to secure favorable action, but resigned it and took up the onerous duties of secretary, and carried on the clerical and legal work, looking toward its accomplishment, as well as the legal work for the commissioners of Rosebud County in connection therewith. Big Horn County was the first to be created under the general law of the state with reference to new counties, and the petition asking for its creation was prepared by Mr. Gillette.

DANIEL KNAPP. It is always interesting to come into contact with one of the first settlers of any locality, and particularly so in the case of one who has played such a conspicuous part in the upbuilding of the community or region as Daniel Knapp, one of the prominent characters of the Missouri Valley at Oswego.

Mr. Knapp, who has been identified with Montana since the decade of the '70s, has been in the great western country since early manhood. He was born in the City of Muelbach, Rheinfalz, Germany, May 15, 1849, fifth of the six children of Philip and Philipine (Drumm) Knapp. He was educated in the popular schools of Germany, and on April 6, 1869, without friends or relative, he sailed from Bremen to New York. He had no friends in Cincinnati, his first destination, and for several months he remained there, working on farms and in other occupations. Soon afterward he went out to Sioux City, Iowa, and found work with a cousin in the meat business, gaining a practical knowledge of the butcher's trade.

Leaving Sioux City early in 1871, Mr. Knapp came into the real West, stopping at the Cheyenne Indian Agency below Bismarck, and was employed as cook and butcher for the agency until 1872. The next several years he spent at Bismarck and vicinity as a wage earner, and in 1876 first entered the territory of Montana, making the trip on horseback from Fort Buford to Poplar. The post traders Leighton and Jordan had employed him as a buffalo hunter, and he remained at Poplar during the winter. His outfit used in his hunting expeditions followed him from the Black Hills country, and when he finished his contract with Leighton and Jordan he returned to Bismarck, North Dakota, sending his furs and hides east to market. The fall of 1877 found him again in Poplar, though he was not engaged in any permanent business for several years. During the winter of 1880 he conducted a restaurant, and in the years 1881-82-83 hunted buffalo south of the Missouri River in what fast disappearing he killed great numbers of them, and his hides were marketed with a buyer who established a temporary base on the Missouri. Some of the meat he dried and disposed of to the post trader.

Mr. Knapp then returned to Fort Buford and in the employ of the regular contractor helped supply beef for the soldiers there. In 1886 he returned to Poplar and again followed the business of supplying the soldiers at the post with beef until 1893. For several years following he ranched ten miles east of Wolf Point, and in 1896 identified himself with the Oswego community as Indian trader and merchant. He opened a little stock of goods in a log building, and for a quarter of a century has been in business as the leading merchant of this section of Valley County.

When he first came here Oswego was part of a region attached to Chouteau County for judicial purposes. When the new county was created it was called Dawson, and still later Valley County was clipped from Dawson. Prior to his location at Oswego Mr. Knapp had learned the Sioux language, and uses it as fluently as the natives of the tribe. As a boy he of course acquired the German tongue, but has long been out of practice in that language.

His store was the first opened in Oswego and inaugurated the commercial enterprise of the town. He was in business alone there for twenty years, and besides his store he afforded a depository for funds for his customers, and has been postmaster of the village since 1900. As a stockholder he helped establish the Farmers and Merchants Bank, since changed to the First National Bank, of which he is still a director.

Mr. Knapp acquired American citizenship at Fort Benton, Montana, and gave his first presidential vote to Mr. Cleveland in 1892. He has taken considerable interest in politics, has supported the democratic ticket in national elections, but has never thought of an office for himself. He was reared in the Lutheran Church.

Mr. Knapp has been twice married, and his wives were Indian women. His two living children are by his first wife. Minnie is the wife of Q. P. McClemmy, of Oswego, and their children are Pearl, Abbie, Montana, Bennie, Lucy and Stella. The other daughter, Philipine, is the wife of William McClemmy, of Poplar, and they have five children, Katie, Daniel, Tollie, Willis and John. Thus Mr. Knapp has eleven grandchildren. For his present wife he married at Oswego, March 20, 1900, Mrs. Josephine Premore. She was born at Wolf Point in 1864, and is a daughter of Broken Arm, a full-blood Sioux.

ROBERT P. ROSS, assistant cashier of the Stockmen's National Bank of Hardin, is one of the well-known and highly respected men of Big Horn County, whose advent into this locality dates back to 1912, when he came to this point to assume the duties of assistant agent at Hardin for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, with which corporation he had been connected for a number of years, and his assignment to Hardin was his second one in Montana. Mr. Ross remained with the railroad for two years, and then resigned on his election to the office of clerk and recorder of Big Horn County. He entered upon the responsibilities of that office on January 1, 1914, succeeding Fred E. Miller. So capable a man did he prove himself that he was twice re-elected, and finally resigned in order to accept his present position, which he entered on May 1, 1919. He was elected on the democratic ticket and has given that party his support since casting his first presidential ballot for William Jennings Bryan in 1896 at Crow Agency, Montana.

Mr. Ross has also identified himself with the Hardin Abstract Company, the Hardin Townsite Company, the Pine Ridge Oil Company, of which he is a director and treasurer, and until quite recently he was one of the directors of the Hardin State Bank, and is still director of the Saint Xavier State Bank and the Stockmen's National Bank of Hardin.

The birth of Mr. Ross occurred in Des Moines County, Iowa, July 7, 1877, and he lived there for twenty years, during that time receiving a public school education, and was graduated from the Mediapolis High School. Following that, in order to gain a working knowledge of business, he became a clerk in a mercantile establishment at Mediapolis. Mr. Ross then came further West and spent a year in the Indian service at the Crow Agency, Montana, as clerk of the superintendent of schools. While he was there he began working for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, learned telegraphy at the station, and was appointed the agent of the road at that point. After two years at Crow Agency he was transferred to Basin, Wyoming, where he spent six years, and was then returned to Montana and was placed in the station at Hardin. At that time there were only about 700 people in the village, and the business section was represented by a short and narrow lane of wooden buildings up Main Street.

The father of Robert P. Ross was Hector Ross, and he married Mary C. Davey, of Ohio. Both the Ross and Davey families are of English origin and long established in America, the latter dating back to the Colonial epoch. Hector Ross was born in Ontario, Canada, and came to the United States when he was nineteen years old, learning the milling trade. With the outbreak of the war between the North and the South Hector Ross enlisted in the Union army, and served in an Illinois infantry regiment, re-enlisted when his first term expired and remained in the army until the close of hostilities, rising to be a company officer, and passing through without wounds or capture. He became a member of the Grand Army of the Republic at Kossuth, Iowa, to which locality he went from Chicago after the war, and was engaged in milling there until 1897, when he was appointed miller at the Crow Agency for the Government, and died while a resident there, in 1904, when sixty-three years old, but his widow survives him and makes her home at Hardin. Their children were as follows: Annabel, who has been chief clerk for the Brown-Abbott & Somson law firm of Winona, Minnesota, for many years; Ida May, who is the wife of Frank C. Davey, of New London, Iowa; Marie, who married Clyde E. Lewis, of Crow Agency, Montana; Robert P., whose name heads this review; Jesse D., who is a member of a surveying outfit employed at the Crow Agency; and Clifford A., who died in the service during the late war while at Camp Dodge, Iowa.

Robert P. Ross was married at Crow Agency, Montana, on November 12, 1903, to Miss Marie L. Server, born in Yellowstone County, Montana, on February 1, 1887, a daughter of Frederick E. and Anna Gretchell Server, the former of whom was a hotel proprietor at Custer, Montana, and later at Crow Agency, and died in the latter place. For many years he was a soldier in the regular army. Mrs. Server survives him and makes her home at Forsyth, Montana. Mrs. Ross has a brother, Philip

E. Server, who lives at Miles City, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Ross have three children: Robert S., Orville F., and Cecil H.

During this country's participation in the late war Mr. Ross was secretary of the local Exemption Board, being appointed as such by Governor Stewart, and among his other duties reported the examination of 1,600 young men who came under the selective draft. He continued to discharge the duties of his office until all of the work was cleared up and he was able to submit his final report to Provost Marshal General Crowder.

HORATIO S. JOSSELYN, who has been identified with the town of Baker throughout the period of his residence in Montana, was born at Bridgewater, Vermont, May 13, 1863, a son of Calvin T. and Ellen A. (Walker) Josselyn, the father born at Bridgewater, March 16, 1836, and the mother at Aetna, New Hampshire, September 9, 1839.

Calvin T. Josselyn was reared as a farmer but was given a liberal educational training and became a teacher. He followed that profession more or less throughout his life, became prominent in the local politics of Windsor County, and twice represented his district in the Legislature as a democrat. He also served as a selectman of his town and as supervisor of highways. Before the inauguration of the Civil war he served as captain of a company of Home Guards, and he made three attempts to enter the army, but each time the attempt was frustrated by his father and his release secured. Josiah Josselyn, his father, was from the South, had acquired his wealth there and was a southern sympathizer, and the sentiments expressed by this southern patriot finally became so seditious that he was visited by two loyal northern men, who gave him just twenty-four hours to paint the stars and stripes over his carriage house door, with the word "Union" above them, or be hanged to the pine tree in the corner of the yard. After deliberating over the matter he decided to do the painting, and this incident became widely known over that section of the country.

This Josiah Josselyn was born in Bridgewater, Vermont, August 3, 1799, and was reared there, but early in his life he went South and engaged in merchandising. On returning to the North he located at Boston, Massachusetts, where he continued merchandising until he retired from business and returned to Bridgewater to spend the remainder of his life as a farmer and fur dealer. He owned the first coonskin coat and the first coonskin laprobe ever made. The death of Josiah Josselyn occurred at Bridgewater when he had attained the age of ninety-four years. He married in his early life Ann Topliff, whose father was the first man to clear land on the south side of the Ottaqueschee River. He was a farmer on a large scale, and at one time was the owner of more than 10,000 acres. He lived to the unusual age of 110 years. Josiah and Ann Josselyn became the parents of but two sons, the older being Andrew J., who spent his life on the old Josselyn farm at Bridgewater.

Calvin T. Josselyn, the younger son, was married at Bridgewater, Vermont, October 6, 1859. He passed away on his sixty-fourth birthday, but is still survived by his widow, whose life's span has covered four score years and whose home is still at Bridgewater. Their children numbered the following: Iney May, wife of Abner H. Morse, of Bozeman, Montana; Horatio S., of Baker; Chandos F., of Bridgewater, Vermont; Ann A., who married Charles B. Wedden, also of Bridgewater; Charles J., who is carrying on the work of the Josselyn home farm; and Ellen A., the wife of George Vose, of Claremont, New Hampshire.

During his youth Horatio S. Josselyn missed even the advantages of a common school training. He was not in the schoolroom after his ninth year, but instead he labored on the home farm, and although the lad was not kept in school he had the advantages derived from an educated father. When he had reached the age of sixteen he left his native town and spent three succeeding years as a farm employe at Weathersfield, going from there to Brattleboro and securing employment in a jewelry store for a year, and during the following three years was engaged in the manufacture of carriages and sleighs at South Londonderry, Vermont, the business having then been destroyed by fire. Returning to Brattleboro, Mr. Josselyn entered the service of J. A. Church, a contractor and builder, as a mill man in getting out the stock used by the company. A year was spent there, and he had the thrilling experience of being the last man in the boiler room before the five-ton boiler blew up and destroyed the factory. He was standing with his hands on the engineer's shoulders when a piece of timber eight feet long passed between them and landed between the feet of two other men, but fortunately no one was injured.

From this factory Mr. Josselyn entered the service of the Estay Organ Company at Brattleboro, again filling the position of mill man in getting out stock, and eleven years were spent with this company. It was at this juncture that Mr. Josselyn returned to farming, and a year later was offered and accepted the superintendence of the county farm of Windham County. His two years there so demonstrated his ability as a manager of such affairs that he was chosen as superintendent of the Odd Fellows Home at Ludlow, Vermont, and in this home Kenneth Josselyn, his only son, was born, he having been the only male child ever born in that Odd Fellows home. Mr. Josselyn spent three years in that position and then returned to the Estay Organ Company for another year, moved then to Burlington, Vermont, and was a shoe salesman for two years. He then left his native state and made his way to Montreal, Canada, where for a year he was in the employ of the Canadian Pacific Railroad Company, and from Montreal went to the state of Iowa and spent five years engaged in farming in Muscatine County. Since that time he has been a resident of Montana, arriving in this state in September, 1908.

Mr. Josselyn at once entered a homestead adjoining the townsite of Baker, and lived in a cabin on his claim while proving it up. His farming activities during this time corresponded to truck gardening, and he was also employed in the lumber yards of Baker. A cemetery was later laid out on his land, a plot of fifteen acres of his homestead having been given to that purpose. On the 10th of October, 1918, gas was found on his land, and this well is now furnishing gas fuel for Baker.

Mr. Josselyn was one of the first justices of the peace of the town, continuing in the office two years. Although reared under strong democratic influences, he began voting as a republican, casting his first presidential ballot for James G. Blaine, and has continued with the ranks of that party.

On the 11th of February, 1893, he became a member of the Odd Fellows' fraternity and was initiated into Wantastiquet Lodge No. 5, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at Brattleboro, Vermont. He now belongs to all the branches of Odd Fellowship, and about the time he joined the order he also became a member of Oasis Encampment No. 5 and of Dennis Rebekah Lodge No. 1. In 1914, he joined Canton Custer No. 6, of Ekalaka, and has several times represented his lodge in the Grand Lodge. In the Subordinate Lodge he has passed all the chairs, and for many years has been secretary of Baker Lodge No. 92. On the 22d of February, 1898, Mr. Josselyn also joined the Masonic Order, becoming a member of Brattleboro Lodge No. 102, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and was the organizer of Sandstone Lodge No. 74, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Baker. During three years he served Sandstone Lodge as its secretary, and is its present master. In the fall of 1908 he took the Royal Arch degrees in Liberty Chapter No. 79 at West Liberty, Iowa, attained membership in the Council of Royal and Select Masters, Verites Council No. 6 at Miles City in December, 1916, and since 1911 has been representative to the Grand Lodge of Masons and the Eastern Star every year. He is secretary of Lake City Rebekah Lodge No. 83, and also of Charity Chapter No. 60, Order of Eastern Star of Baker.

Mr. Josselyn was first married at South Hero, Vermont, September 9, 1896, to Ellen Wadsworth, who bore him one son, Kenneth Gill. For his second wife Mr. Josselyn chose Mrs. Helen Wells Neill, and they were married at Billings, Montana, October 20, 1919. Mrs. Josselyn was born at Spirit Lake, Iowa, was given a high school and musical training, and is proficient on both the piano and pipe organ. She has devoted much time to pipe organ work in the churches where she has lived.

Mrs. Josselyn has also become interested in fraternal work. She joined the Rebekahs in Montana, to which state she had moved with her parents in childhood, and she grew to mature years in Helena, where she has been a member of Vera Lodge of the Rebekahs for many years and for fifteen years has been a degree captain of the lodge. After serving the lodge as president she was elected grand secretary of the Rebekah Assembly of the state, and has filled that high office since 1905. By her first marriage to Robert Neill she became the mother of two sons, Frank D. and Arthur W., the older in college at Bozeman and the younger a sophomore in the high school at Helena. Mr. Neill was a well-known business man of Helena, and was a Past Grand Master of the Odd Fellows Order.

George M. Daugherty. The name of George M. Daugherty is borne by an individual who is serving creditably and conscientiously in the position of postmaster of the thriving community of Baker, and who has been identified with Fallon County, this state, since 1908. He came here to take advantage of the opportunity of acquiring free land and to contribute something substantial toward the development of the county as well as to improve his own situation. He has succeeded admirably along both lines, and is today accounted one of his locality's substantial and valuable citizens.

George M. Daugherty came to Montana from Minneapolis, Minnesota, where he had passed some twelve years as a hotel man. He began his independent career in Kandyohi County, that state, as a teacher, having gone there from South Bend, Indiana, his native place, where he finished the high school with graduation at the age of eighteen years, in 1891, his birth having occurred December 9, 1873. Later he spent two years in the Indiana State University at Bloomington, and after teaching for about four years drifted out of the work and into other fields until he became a hotel man at Minneapolis. He was a law student for some time, but circumstances prevented his pursuit of that profession until admission to the bar, and he eventually chose other lines of endeavor.

The father of George M. Daugherty was James Daugherty, born near Mechanicsburg, Pennsylvania, who moved to Ohio as a boy and was married at Canton, that state, where he was superintendent of a woolen mill. When he divorced himself from that line of work he took up farming near South Bend, Indiana. During the Civil war he served as a captain of the Home Guards, and as a democrat was elected sheriff of St. Joseph County, Indiana, of which county he was later elected a member of the board of county commissioners. James Daugherty married Ann Stauffer, who was born in Pennsylvania, of Pennsylvania Dutch parentage, and passed away in 1908, at the age of eighty years. Their issue comprised: Dr. C. A. Daugherty, who died at South Bend, Indiana, in 1918; Mrs. J. S. Andrews, of Paynesville, Minnesota; Mrs. W. D. Andrews, of Minneapolis; Mrs. Iden Romig, of South Bend; and George M.

The paternal grandfather of George M. Daugherty was the founder of the family in the United States and immigrated from Ireland as a young man, settling near Mechanicsburg, Pennsylvania. In his native land he was an instructor, teaching mathematics in a small college. His children included: Mrs. Mary Varier, of Indiana; James, the father of George M.; and George, who passed away without marriage.

When he came to Montana George M. Daugherty entered his homestead six miles east of Baker and erected a claim shack. Into this he moved the personal effects brought with him in a car, and here he began to make his home in a frame structure twenty-eight feet square, covered with rubberoid and finished inside with paper and tar-papered outside. Later shingles were placed on the roof and the house was ceiled, rendering it a comfortable abiding place for the family during the few years which they occupied it.

Undertaking the serious work of improving his homestead and the "additional" land he took, Mr. Daugherty built fences and cross-fences, and brought 140 acres under cultivation, which he devoted to the growing of grain. His stock at the beginning was the team which he brought with him, but he gathered together a few cattle with the passage of years, which lent a permanence to his presence and added a profit to his efforts that nothing else could. With what cash capital he came into this state is not relevant here, but his reward for coming can be measured by the proceeds of his sale when he decided to move to Baker, a sale which netted him practically as much cash as he brought with him, in addition to which he had still his land and improvements.

While a new settler and on his claim a movement was started for the building of a schoolhouse, in which Mr. Daugherty joined, and the neighbors came together and erected a little frame structure in which the first school in what is now District No. 50 was held. The building was comfortably constructed and was the educational center of the community, with Mr. Daugherty for a time as clerk of the board. Mr. Daugherty became a resident of Baker in November, 1913, and about this time the postmaster here died. Having just abandoned farming and being open to an engagement which promised permanence, Mr. Daugherty was urged to become a candidate for postmaster and was officially appointed January 27, 1914, as the successor of the late R. B. Pearce, the first merchant to erect a store at Baker. The Baker office belonged in the third class when Mr. Daugherty took charge of it, but its receipts during his administration have placed it among the second class offices. Two star routes emanate from here: One to Webster, and the other to Ekalaka daily by the way of Willard.

George M. Daugherty was married at Minneapolis, Minnesota, in December, 1906, and the only child of his household is Beatrice, who is a clerk in her father's office. Mr. Daugherty chose to be a democrat when he entered politics, and his first presidential vote was cast for Mr. Bryan in 1896. He continued to support the Nebraska statesman through his presidential ambitions and added his endorsement to the candidacies of each party nominee since. He served as chairman of the Fallon County Democratic Central Committee, and as a promoter of the interests of his county joined his fellow-men in the move which led to the formation of the county. He is Past Master of Sandstone Blue Lodge of the Masonic fraternity, and has represented his lodge in some of the sessions of the Grand Lodge of the state.

WILLIAM O'LAUGHLIN, who is the originator of the grain and elevator interests at Baker, erected the first elevator at this point in 1910, but disposed of it to the farmers in 1915. Later he re-engaged in this line of business, having elevators at Terry as well as Baker, and operates under the name of the Milwaukee Elevator Company. Mr. O'Laughlin has also developed considerable reputation as a wheat grower, and owns and operates a very valuable ranch in the vicinity of Baker.

The birth of William O'Laughlin occurred on March 6, 1882, in Wright County, Minnesota. He is a son of Martin O'Laughlin, who was born at Davenport, Iowa, in 1853, but was taken in 1859 by his parents to Wright County, Minnesota. There he was reared, and subsequently was married to Anna Hamilton, a daughter of John Hamilton, who came to Minnesota from Rhode Island. John Hamilton was a farmer and ex-Union soldier. Martin O'Laughlin espoused democracy in his political views, being a regular "dyed-in-the-wool" democrat, and served Maple Lake as postmaster through both of the Cleveland administrations, and in addition to this service was elected commissioner of Wright County. He passed away in 1916, but his widow survives and is a resident of Terry, Montana. Martin O'Laughlin and his wife became the parents of the following children: Mrs. J. F. Gamber, of Terry, Montana; John, of Maple Lake, Minnesota; William; and Raymond, of Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Growing up in Wright County, William O'Laughlin attended its schools, completing the high school course at Maple Lake. When he was about twenty years old he entered the grain business at Maple Lake, but subsequently went to North Dakota, where he was engaged in the same line of business. In 1908 he came to Montana and homesteaded near Terry, living upon his claim for two years in order to prove it up. He planted a few acres of wheat on his land and harvested a crop of eighteen bushels to the acre when his neighbors were only averaging ten bushels an acre. His residence was a primitive shack, 12x16 feet, containing only one room, shingled and tar-papered on the outside. His stock comprised horses, and his shelter for them was correspondingly crude, but answered the purpose and was quite as good as those of his neighbors.

He had come to Montana with the intention of going into the grain business, but took advantage of the opportunity offered for securing land at a low rate. After he had proved up his claim he proceeded to carry out his original plans, and, as before stated, erected his elevator at Baker and shipped his first car of grain in 1910. After disposing of his plant in 1915 Mr. O'Laughlin turned his attention to ranching and stock raising in the vicinity of Baker, and has been so uniformly successful that during the drought year of 1919 his 400 acres planted to wheat yielded 1,146 bushels, the banner yield of the neighborhood.

William O'Laughlin has carried his share of the burden of Baker's welfare, and is now a member of the City Council, having already served for two years. During the several campaigns waged to effect the organization of Fallon County and the location of the county seat at Baker, Mr. O'Laughlin was one of the active factors in securing these advantages. Although he cast his initial presidential ballot for Colonel Roosevelt in 1904, he has since been a democrat. He is fully versed in the grain business of the West, for in addition to the period he was engaged in this line at Maple Lake and Baker he spent six years, from 1902 to 1908, at Fullerton, Sterling and Driscoll, North Dakota, all of his time being devoted to handling grain.

On December 16, 1914, Mr. O'Laughlin was married at Baker to Miss Darlene Whitver, born at Walnut, Illinois, April 7, 1892, a daughter of Thomas Whitver and his wife, Ella (Fillmore) Whitver. Mrs. O'Laughlin completed her education at the Northwestern University at Evanston, Illinois, and was a teacher in the state of Washington and in Fallon County, Montana, prior to her marriage. She is the eldest of the three children born to her parents, the others being Fillmore and Howard Whitver, of Los Angeles, California, both of whom were soldiers during the World war, serving in France. Howard Whitver was wounded while fighting as a member of the Thirty-third Division, in October, 1918. Later he went with the Army of Occupation into Germany, and did not receive his discharge until in August, 1919. Mr. and Mrs. O'Laughlin have a son, Ralph, who was born May 24, 1918. Their residence, which is of their own construction, and very comfortable and modern, is at the corner of Montana Avenue and Fourth Street, Baker. It is a bungalow of seven rooms, and here Mr. and Mrs. O'Laughlin have created a happy home atmosphere.

PAUL E. HUBBARD, one of the enterprising merchants of Baker, has been a resident of Montana since 1910, and has not only found material prosperity here, but health as well. He was born in Dane County, Wisconsin, on May 6, 1876, a son of Clark H. and Elizabeth Ann (Bowers) Hubbard, and grandson of John Hubbard, who brought his family from Troy, New York, to Cottage Grove, Wisconsin, at a very early date and was there engaged in farming.

Clark H. Hubbard was born at Troy, New York, and was a mere child when his parents moved to Wisconsin. He was taught the elements of farming by his father, and became a farmer himself when he reached man's estate. In 1913 he came to Montana and homesteaded in the vicinity of Baker, but died in 1915, before he had proved up his claim, being at that time seventy-five years old. He was very active in politics, holding county offices in Dane County and attending various republican conventions as a delegate of his party. He and his wife had the following children: Irvin, who lives in Fallon County, Montana; Edward C., who is a farmer of Powder River County, Montana; Mrs. Rose Baldwin, who lives at Belleville, Wisconsin; Paul E., whose name heads this review; Silas J., who died in Wisconsin and left a family now residing near Kilbourn, Dane County, Wisconsin; Florence, who is the widow of Elmer Olson and lives near the parental homestead in Montana; Chelsea R., who lives at Janesville, Wisconsin; and Perry J., who lives at Madison, Wisconsin.

On March 3, 1910, Paul E. Hubbard came to Montana from Brooklyn, Wisconsin, hoping to find a climate better suited to his health than his native state. He homesteaded four and one-half miles northwest of Baker, and as he had more means than the average emigrant was able to make things comfortable for his family, erecting a frame house and the necessary outbuildings. He also stocked his farm and bought machinery with which he broke the greater portion of his claim, far in excess of the requisite number of acres for proving it up. During the three years he spent on this ranch he put in crops, and harvested from all of them. The final year he took the agency for the Monitor Windmill, and disposed of a carload of them, and his success in this led him to enter the mercantile field. In the spring of 1914, he opened his hardware and agricultural implement store in a building he had just erected at Baker, on Main Street, and put in a stock valued at $1,500. His business has so expanded that he is now carrying a stock ten times as great as his original one, and his trade extends over a wide territory. In 1917 he erected another store, so that he now has two store fronts, and the second story of his new building is occupied as a lodge hall by the Order of Odd Fellows. In addition to his place of business he owns his residence in South Baker, which is one of the most desirable homes in that subdivision, and his ranch, which now comprises in addition to his original Government entry a section which he later purchased. He also owns a half section of ranch land five miles east of Baker.

On February 1, 1899, Mr. Hubbard was united in marriage to Florence May Cresson, born at Edgerton, Wisconsin, on October 25, 1877, a daughter of Robert Cresson and his wife, Mary (Chalmers) Cresson. Robert Cresson was born in New York City, entered the Union army from that state, and before the war was over had risen to the rank of colonel. Following his discharge from the army he settled in Wisconsin, and there rounded out his life as a farmer. Mrs. Hubbard was the only child of her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard have the following children: Bessie, who was born January 21, 1900; Pauline, who was born in January, 1915; Darline, who was born in August, 1916; and Jeanette, who was born in April, 1918.

Lewellyn Price. Among the business men of Baker, one who has been connected with merchandising at this place since 1910 is Lewellyn Price, who has been a resident of Montana since March of that year. He came here with some mercantile experience gained at Oshkosh, Wisconsin, in which region he was born January 7, 1869, a member of a family which settled at an early date in the Oshkosh community. His father, David Price, went there as a settler just after the close of the Civil war from South Wales, where he was born, and where he was first employed as a coal miner. Although he had limited educational advantages in his youth, through persevering study he educated himself for the ministry and for some time preached the Methodist faith of the Wesleyan body in Wisconsin. By some of his friends it was said that he "was too honest to preach," and he finally gave up his religious labors and applied himself whole-heartedly to the cultivation and development of his farm, upon which his death occurred in 1909, when he was seventy-two years of age. He married Mary Jones, who was born in the same locality as her husband and who died at the age of eighty-six years in 1917. There were eight children born to them, four sons and four daughters, the seven alive being: William F., of White Tail, Montana; Richard, of Fessenden, North Dakota; Lewellyn, of this review; Mrs. Sarah Clendenning, of Spokane, Washington; Arthur, of Fessenden, North Dakota; Mrs. Wallace Roberts, of Oshkosh, Wisconsin; and Mabel, now Mrs. George Kuskee, of Fessenden.

The training of Lewellyn Price in his youth was of a rural character, and the farm knew him until he was eighteen years of age, his school advantages being those securable in the country. After he left the home place to take up independent life he roamed about North Dakota, Minnesota and Michigan, and in the last-named state, at Escanaba, went into railroading on the Northwestern Railway and for three years was thus occupied. He was ready for promotion from fireman to engineer when the panic of 1893 came and he lost his position, and subsequently closed his roaming from home by a trip to the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago. He then returned to Oshkosh and soon afterward went to work as a clerk in a general store at Van-Dyne, Wisconsin, where he spent two years, then being sent to Foster City, northern peninsula of Michigan, as manager of the mercantile interests of the Morgan Sash, Door and Blind Company, remaining with them there for ten years. He became a stockholder in the company when it incorporated, but when he left that region in 1907 he disposed of his interests, returned to Oshkosh, and remained there connected with mercantile affairs until he decided to come to Montana.

Mr. Price came to Baker to establish himself in the hardware and furniture business, having prospected several towns for a location and decided on the future metropolis of Fallon County. His beginning consisted of a $3,000 stock of merchandise, in addition to which he owned the building and lot, the site of his present store. The firm name was the L. Price Company, which did business as such until 1917, when the business was incorporated, and the capital stock is now $50,000, with Mr. Price as president; Thomas L. Owen, vice president; and Edward Hansen, secretary.

Mr. Price has served Baker in some of its public affairs being now on the school board and a member of the town council. He was president of the Commercial Club for some years and is its vice president now. He was chairman of the American Red Cross for Fallon County during the World war, and everything asked for by the organization was raised and provided. He was likewise chairman of the United War Drive and more than doubled its quota to be raised. He affiliated with the republican party and has been regular in his political conduct.

Mr. Price was married at Foster City, Michigan, in June, 1898, to Miss Eva Owen, a daughter of Thomas L. Owen, of Ironwood, Michigan, who married Jennie Lloyd. Mr. Owen, who was a carpenter and builder, was a native of Pennsylvania, but spent the greater part of his life in Wisconsin. The Owen children of his household were: Mrs. Price, born in March, 1877; Catherine, the wife of A. J. Pinkerton, of Waupaca, Wisconsin; and Thomas L., who is associated as vice president with the L. Price Company of Baker. Thomas L. Owen volunteered for service in the World war in July, 1917, was trained for a time at Camp Lewis and Camp Cody, and later entered the officers' training camp at Leon Springs, Texas, and was commissioned a second lieutenant. He went overseas as a first lieutenant of Camp Colt Tank Corps and after training service in France was expecting active fighting when the armistice was signed. He was detailed for further service in France after his company sailed for home and visited many French points before he himself returned. He returned to the United States May 1, 1919, and was given his honorable discharge at Camp Meade, Maryland, and reached Baker May 27th.

Mr. and Mrs. Price have a daughter, Jeanette, who is attending the State University at Missoula, Montana, and a son, Lewellyn, Jr., who is a pupil in the primary grades. Mr. Price is a Master Mason and has passed the chairs in Blue Lodge No. 84, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Baker.

AL HANSEN, one of the substantial business men of Baker, owns and conducts the only title and abstract office in Fallon County. He was born at Racine, Wisconsin, on April 29, 1886, a son of Christ Hansen, a native of Denmark. Christ Hansen came to the United States in the '70s, and was engaged in work as a common laborer, losing his life in a railroad wreck which occurred in North Dakota. He married Sophie Petersen, who survives him and lives at Baker. They had six children, as follows: Soren, who is living in Colorado; Louie, who is living in Minneapolis, Minnesota; Al, whose name heads this review; Rosa, who is the wife of Jacob Petersen, of North Dakota; Edward, who is in the employ of the L. Price Company of Baker; and Lillie, who also resides at Baker. Edward Hansen served during the World war as a member of the Twenty-third Engineers, and was overseas for fifteen months, participating in the great campaigns on the front which resulted in the defeat of the enemy and the signing of the armistice.

While the public schools contributed somewhat to Mr. Hansen's knowledge, he is practically self-educated. Until he was nineteen years old he lived under the parental roof, but at that time left home and began traveling through Western Canada and the northwestern part of his own country, earning his way by working at different jobs as he found them, and gaining a very valuable experience which he has since turned to good account.

Mr. Hansen arrived at Baker on February 24, 1915, and began working for George W. Farr of Miles City, owner of the Security Abstract and Title Company, with whom he remained for two years. As he had already had some experience in abstracting, Mr. Hansen was able to carry on his duties very successfully and lay aside some money, and in 1917 bought the Baker branch of the business, organizing the Equity Abstract and Title Company, a corporation capitalized at $10,000, with F. R. Kisow of Ekalaka, Thomas M. Murn of Terry, and Al Hansen of Baker, as the stockholders. In August, 1918, Mr. Hansen purchased the records and business of the Fallon County Abstract Company and gained control of the abstract business of the county. About this time he purchased the Carter County Abstract and Title Company and conducted an abstract business at Ekalaka until November 1, 1919, when he disposed of that business to the Nelsteads. The records of Fallon County are all complete on the books of the Equity Abstract and Title Company, and practically all of this work has been done under the supervision of Mr. Hansen. In addition to his abstract business Mr. Hansen conducts a general law business at Baker. For some years he had been studying law, pursuing his studies by himself, and in March, 1920, applied for admission to the bar of Montana and was admitted.

On June 6, 1918, Mr. Hansen was married at Miles City, Montana, to Miss Louisa Tetzman, a daughter of William F. Tetzman. She was born at Dubuque, Iowa, on December 9, 1891, and was reared at Minneapolis, Minnesota, to which city her parents moved when she was a child, and where they now reside. The Tetzmans originated in Germany, but the family was established in the United States several generations ago. Mr. and Mrs. Hansen have no children. Mr. Hansen has always been a republican, casting his first presidential vote for William Howard Taft in 1908. He has served Baker as police magistrate, and displayed an intimate knowledge of the law in his decisions, the majority of which have been sustained by the higher courts. Very ambitious, he has steadily advanced not only in a material sense, but also intellectually. A close student, he is never contented until he has investigated a subject and learned all that he could about it, so that today he is one of the best posted men of his city, and an authority upon many subjects.

CHARLES JACOB RUSSELL, county clerk of Fallon County, identified himself first with this locality and Montana in January, 1910. He is a contribution as a settler from Iowa and was born in Marshall County, that state, October 13, 1889. His father, Harry Russell, was a native of East Hampton, Massachusetts, and was reared at Waterloo, Iowa, where he engaged in the mill and elevator business with his father, Wellington Russell. He went next to Northwestern Iowa, where he engaged in the lumber and grain business at Sibley, and at present is a retired business man of that place. He had acquired a liberal education in his youth and is a republican in politics. He was married at Marshalltown, Iowa, to Sarah Williams, a daughter of Jacob Williams, an Illinois settler to Iowa and a farmer, but not a soldier of the Civil war, as was Wellington Russell. To Mr. and Mrs. Russell there were born the following children: Mrs. B. M. Strother, of Hubbard, Iowa; Harry M., of Bruce, South Dakota; Charles Jacob; and Robert W., also of Baker.

Charles Jacob Russell grew up in Nobles County, Minnesota, where he received his public school education, and after his graduation from the Sibley High School at the age of seventeen years he learned the watchmaker's trade at Stone's School of Watchmaking, St. Paul, Minnesota. When his trade was completed he moved to Marmath, North Dakota, and took a position in the watch inspection office of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, where he spent a year, and then came to Baker and opened a jewelry and watch repairing establishment. In 1915 he purchased a half interest in the Baker Drug Company, and continued to be identified with the drug and jewelry lines until 1917, when he changed business and took up real estate and insurance, which he continued until appointed county clerk in March, 1919.

Mr. Russell was present at Baker during the county division fight, in which he took a most active part. When it was seen that not sufficient signers to the county petition for county division asking for the creation of Fallon County had been obtained he rode on horseback through deep snow and during a temperature of twenty below zero into communities which had not been fully represented and secured the number of names needed to go before the commissioners of Custer County. An election was accordingly called as a result, and the election showed that Fallon County was entitled to become a municipality. It required six days for Mr. Russell to make this trip, and the exposure which he endured marks him as a real factor in the birth of Fallon County.

Charles J. Russell grew up under republican teachings and cast his first presidential ballot in support of the Grand Old Party candidate. President Taft heired this ballot and each successive party candidate has fared likewise. Mr. Russell was appointed county clerk by the commissioners of Fallon County. He had been city clerk of Baker formerly, and is an alderman at this time.

Mr. Russell was married at Miles City, Montana, January 20, 1915, to Miss Cleopatra Walls, daughter of a North Dakota farmer. Mrs. Russell was born at Wheaton, Minnesota, where her father had homesteaded, October 6, 1893, and is the youngest of six children. She and her husband are the parents of two children: Charlotte A. and Bryant W. Mr. Russell is a Mason and an Odd Fellow, a member of the Blue Lodge and Chapter of the former order and of the Subordinate and Encampment of the latter, in which he is also Past Grand. His home is his contribution to Baker's growth.

Albert Edward Williamson came to Montana in the spring of 1906 as a member of a surveying party for the Milwaukee Railway while that system was being planned through the Northwest. He subsequently homesteaded in Prairie County, and was the first and has been the only county clerk of that county.

Mr. Williamson, who is a resident of Terry, was born at Oxford Junction, Iowa, February 24, 1887. His grandfather was an Englishman, and after coming to America served as a master mechanic with the Milwaukee Railroad in the early history of that line. He was the father of three children: Edward D.; James, who died leaving a family at Cedar Rapids, Iowa; and Anna, widow of Charles E. Gault, living at Dubuque, Iowa.

Edward D. Williamson, father of County Clerk Williamson, was of the second generation of the family to serve the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway, and has been an employe of that company since he was thirteen years of age. He was born in New York state in October, 1854, and was a boy in school when his father died. At the age of thirteen he began learning the trade of machinist in the Milwaukee shops at Oxford Junction, Iowa, and as a veteran in the service of that company is now a resident of Milwaukee. He married Julia S. Hatch, who was born at Dyersville, Iowa, a daughter of George R. Hatch. They have two children: Fred T., of Newark, New Jersey, and Albert E.

Albert E. Williamson grew up in Milwaukee, was educated in the public schools, completed the course in the West Division High School of that city, and subsequently attended the University of Wisconsin at Madison. He left the university in his freshman year and was first employed as a clerk in the office of the general storekeeper of the Milwaukee Railway. He left that position to join a surveying party as office man, and reached Montana in June, 1906. He was with the railroad men in Custer County, but soon afterward joined the Government survey as head chainman with the party surveying and sectionizing what is now Fallon County.

After two summers in that work he entered a homestead in what is now Prairie County, his claim being six miles north of Mildred. His frame cabin that he built was his first home in Montana. He was able to buy a team, and while occupying his claim in the winter worked for several years on stock ranches in the summer seasons. He "bached" on his claim and after 1910 began experimenting in agriculture, planting grain for the most part, and has a record of some harvest every successive year. He made his farm his home for three years, proved up, and still owns it. He now combines live stock with agriculture.

Mr. Williamson was actively identified with the movement for the creation of Prairie County and was the choice of the people for the first county clerk, being elected without opposition. He opened his office in the Terry Club Rooms, and his entire equipment consisted of a fountain pen, and his first official act was the filing of a deed to himself. He was chosen to succeed himself in the next election without opposition, and in 1918 was also a unanimous choice, and he is now completing three terms of unqualified good service to the people of the county.

Mr. Williamson is a republican and is an active member of the Masonic fraternity, being an officer of Terry Lodge, a member of the Royal Arch Chapter at Terry, the Council and Knight Templar Commandery at Glendive, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena.

November 11, 1911, at Spokane, Washington, Mr. Williamson married Miss Meta S. Krueger. She was born at Freeport, Illinois, July 1, 1888, daughter of Frank B. and Lena (Kunz) Krueger. Her father was a native of Germany and spent his active life as a cigar salesman and is now living retired at Spokane. He was the father of two children, the only son being Dan B., of Spokane. Mrs. Williamson after leaving high school attended a business college at Freeport, Illinois, and was a stenographer in that city when she met Mr. Williamson. To their marriage has been born one daughter, Hope Almeta.

Henry J. Kramer came to Montana as a cowboy, and all his subsequent interests were identified with stock raising and ranching until a few years ago he retired to a comfortable home and to comparative leisure in the Town of Terry.

Mr. Kramer, who is one of the best known among the old time Montana stockmen, was born in the City of Chicago, March 19, 1864. His father, Frank Kramer, was born at Bodenheim, Germany, came to America at the age of seventeen, and as a cooper followed his trade at Elgin, Illinois, several years. Later he established a German newspaper, The Deutsche Zeitung, and was its editor and proprietor when he died in 1905, at the age of sixty-five. He became a man of influence in Elgin, served one term as alderman and was a democrat in politics. His wife was Carrie Markel, a native of Illinois, and daughter of an Illinois farmer. She survived her husband some years. Their family consisted of the following children: John, of Elgin; Henry J.; R. B. H. and William, of Elgin; Katie E., employed by the Milwaukee Railway and a resident of Elgin; Martha, Mrs. Ed Dolph, of Elgin; Carrie, wife of William Kerr, of Elgin; and Elsie, Mrs. Newton Taylor of Elgin.

Henry J. Kramer was three years of age when his parents moved to Elgin and he obtained his education in the common schools of the butter town. As a boy he drove a dray for his father. He left Elgin and home surroundings about the time he reached his majority, and had just enough capital to get him to Texas, where he joined the Mabry Cattle Company. He possessed the physical development and will to easily adapt himself to the rugged and arduous life of a plainsman and cowboy, and was soon given more than ordinary responsibilities by his employers. In August, 1885, he left the Goodnight Ranch in Texas and started north, driving a herd of cattle for the Mabry

Cattle Company to their Montana ranch on the north side of Yellowstone River, where the village of Circle is today. The cattle trail which he followed crossed the southwest corner of Kansas, followed north along the line of Kansas and Colorado into Western Nebraska, thence into Wyoming, and through "Puptown," Montana, now Ekalaka. Mr. Kramer remained a year in the employ of the Mabry outfit, after coming to Montana and then went with the Mendenhall Cattle Company, owned by C. B. Mendenhall. The Mendenhalls also operated on the "north side," and he was with them five years.

After six years in Montana Mr. Kramer found himself possessed of a bunch of horses, which he had accumulated preparatory to an independent business. Going to a location a mile southeast of Fallon, he entered a homestead, and was soon running his stock over the public domain. As a bachelor he lived in a two room log house, and soon afterward married and took his bride to that home, and she relieved him of domestic administration. On that ranch Mr. and Mrs. Kramer lived until they retired to their modern bungalow home in Terry in 1916.

At Fallon Mr. Kramer developed an important horse and cattle ranch. Besides shipping his own stock he was appointed to the responsibilites of head shipper for the XIT Cattle Company for several years. This company was the largest cattle company in Montana, and thousands of their cattle went to the Chicago market every year. Fallon was noted then for being the largest stock shipping point in the world, 50,000 cattle and 500,000 sheep annually being the record of that place.

When Mr. Kramer located at Fallon his nearest neighbor outside the village was ten to fifteen miles away. It could hardly be said he had any occupation outside of working his stock on the range. With a few spare hours he attempted gardening and farming on a small scale, but without irrigation had little success. Even grass failed to grow in quantities for cutting hay. Mr. Kramer's stock brand was the "S half diamond," and he carried it through his entire ranching experience. A few stock still run on his ranch, though he has reduced his stock interests to a minimum since 1912, and that winter took his first real rest in Southern California after more than a quarter of a century of continuous activity in Montana.

When he located in that region Fallon contained the stockyards and the section house, and he recalls that the next institution was a saloon, followed by a store, and gradually a community of 150 people established themselves there. Since then two grain elevators have come in and several stores have been added, the elevators handling the grain grown back from the railroad in the more fertile and reliable spots of the region. Mr. Kramer has been a stockholder in the Montana State Bank of Fallon since it was established in 1911, and helped to get the first school for the locality, serving as a member of its board. While practically retired from business, he has call for much of his time in his duties as a county commissioner. He was chosen a member of the first board of commissioners of Prairie County, and in 1918 was elected for a six-year term. He is a colleague on the board of commissioners of Fluss and Hamlin.

When Mr. Kramer sought a companion for his ranch home in Montana he went back to his home town of Elgin and married Miss Jennie Shields, daughter of Peter and Catherine (Toner) Shields. Her parents were married in Dublin, Ireland, and coming to the United States established their home in DuPage County, Illinois, in 1849. In that region, now directly tributary to the City of Chicago, they obtained land at $3 an acre, and spent the rest of their lives as farmers near Bartlett. Her father died there at the age of sixty-five, and her mother, who was born October 30, 1823, is still living at the venerable age of ninety-six. In the Shields family were the following children: James, of Elgin; Peter and Arthur, both of whom died when young men; Alfred and Albert, twin brothers, the former at Bartlett, Illinois, and the latter in Chicago; Daniel who died unmarried; and Mrs. Kramer, the youngest, who was born April 12, 1868. Mr. and Mrs. Kramer have no children. She was a director of the knitting department of the Red Cross at Terry during the World war and Mr. Kramer supplied some of the patriotic energy to the sale of Liberty Bonds, and was rewarded by the Government with a roll of honor certificate for his work. The Kramers built their modern home as a part of the town's development.

GEORGE J. BUERGI. As a general thing a man who displays decided talent and achieves success in one or other of the learned professions, especially that of the ministry, does not turn with profitable results to a business career, and yet after all there is no legitimate reason why he should not do so. The same characteristics which enabled him to establish and build up churches, placing them on sound foundations and making them self-supporting, would make him a success in ventures of a more material kind. At any rate George J. Buergi has accomplished this very thing, and after some years of manifoldly active service in the Congregational ministry, has developed into a prosperous merchant and man of affairs at Plevna.

George J. Buergi was born at Rheinfelden, Canton of Aargau, Switzerland, on September 26, 1880, a son of Henry Gustav and Ursula (Bruehlman) Buergi, the former of whom, a hotelkeeper, dying when thirty-one years old, and the latter living and making her home at Rheinfelden. Their children were as follows: Henry Gustav, who died in Switzerland; George J., whose name heads this review; and Mina, who is the wife of Ernest Gutman, of Rheinfelden, Switzerland.

George J. Buergi attended the public schools for six years and then for three years was a student of a high school. He then left home and went to work in a hotel at Montreux on Lake Geneva, a regular resort. From then on until he engaged in the work of the Young Men's Christian Association he was with hotels at Geneva, Basle, Zurich and Heidelberg, and then returned to Montreux. When he was seventeen years old he went to England to learn the English language and improve his health, having already learned French in Switzerland. In order to accomplish this he took service in a private family, but later resumed hotel work again with a hotel at Eastbourne, England, and was subsequently employed in a hotel at Cromer, England.

Returning to Switzerland, he served for fourteen weeks in the army, as required by law, and then took a leave of absence rather than accept the draft for the officers school, and went back to England. Following this he became secretary of the German branch of the Young Men's Christian Association in the West End of London, and held that position for three years, and during that period resolved to prepare himself for the ministry.

Coming to the United States, Mr. Buergi took the regular theological course at the Chicago Theological Seminary, and was graduated therefrom in 1908 with the degree of Bachelor of Divinity, and was ordained at Emington, Illinois. From there he subsequently came to Montana. Mr. Buergi's work in the seminary was unusually efficient and commendable. All his life he has been noted for accomplishing what he set out to do, and he determined to take the regular course, and was accepted. By dint of hard work and exhaustive study he not only qualified, but took high honors and was awarded a scholarship in his class, to the great surprise and delight of his preceptors. Among the men composing the faculty was Rev. Frank W. Gunsaulus, the eminent Chicago preacher and lecturer, who kept his eye upon the young Swiss student, to whom he offered great encouragement, and no one was more elated over Mr. Buergi's conquest of his difficulties.

Mr. Buergi came to Montana on May 23, 1909, as a Congregational minister, and founded congregations at Baker, Ismahy and Westmore, continuing his ministerial work even after his health had broken down completely and he was forced to live in the open. He had homesteaded and when obliged to give up the work for which he had so carefully fitted himself, he settled on his farm and was engaged in conducting it until March, 1914, when he moved to Plevna, which then contained about forty inhabitants, erected a building, and started its first newspaper, naming it the Plevna Herald, and making it an independent organ, devoted to local interests. Mr. Buergi did not meet with much encouragement from his fellow citizens when he opened this venture, for they did not believe it would be a successful one, but time has proven that he was right, and after conducting this paper for about three years he leased the plant and turned his attention to handling real estate and selling insurance and conducting his farm. He has also been a justice of the peace and has meted out justice fairly and impartially for several years.

Always interested in his farm, he has added to his original homestead until he now has five quarter sections of deeded land and leases another section. On two quarter sections he has suitable buildings, and 400 acres are under cultivation. His farm is stocked with a good grade of cattle, horses and hogs, and with the exception of the drought year of 1919 has not failed to produce sufficient produce to carry his stock. Mr. Buergi was the prime mover in the organization of the first farm loan association in Eastern Montana, the Plevna National Farm Loan Association, of which he is the secretary and treasurer and which has become very popular, and has come to the relief of the farmers with cheap money to the extent of $200,000, placed in this immediate vicinity.

On September 1, 1919, Mr. Buergi embarked in a grocery business, with the idea of helping out during the short crop and light business condition of the country, and his store is one of the busiest places in Plevna.

When Mr. Buergi came to Montana he did so on borrowed capital, having obtained a loan of $100. He was without resources with the exception of a frail pair of hands and his fertile brain. Broken in health, empty of purse, exhausted by over study and work, he came into the state as a last chance to build up his strength. Of its bountifulness Montana has given in no small measure to Mr. Buergi, but had he not known how to put these gifts to good use it is doubtful if they would have done him any good. Many others are offered all that he has gained, and were not able, or willing, to take advantages of the opportunities. His church work at Baker and other points gave him a meager living for a short time, but he soon saw that if he hoped for any betterment in his health he must make a total change, and so he and his family bravely put up with many hardships and endured untold privations until the homestead began to show the results of hard work and excellent care.

The pioneer home of the Buergi family was a frame one 14 by 26 feet, and was built of lumber Mr. Buergi bought on the installment plan, and he acquired an almost wornout team on the same terms. His harness and wagon and simple implements were also bought on time. The land was broken by him with a walking plow. When he first tried to use it he could not make it go into the ground, and after a day and a half of hard work sought advice from one of his more experienced neighbors, only to discover that it needed sharpening. When he had taken it to the local blacksmith and had it properly sharpened he found he had an excellent implement, and one with which he was able to make good progress.

Having been reared to a city life, the simplest farm operation was unknown to him, so that in the beginning he was very much hampered by his natural ignorance of agricultural work. However, the same persistence which enabled him to overcome an intellectual handicap brought him through the difficulties of farming, and now it would be difficult to find anyone in Fallon County, or out of it for that matter, who is better informed on these questions than Mr. Buergi. In time, in order to make a little extra money, he took that plow of his and turned the sod of his neighbors' farms. Realizing the necessity for better machinery, he invested in a binder the second year, and helped to earn the money for it by using it in his neighbors' grain fields. During the first winter he bought sixty head of sheep, but the coyotes and hard winter left him only ten by spring. His first milch cow, bought on time, died in a few months. He then bought another, and she proved a good investment and more than paid for herself. There is a wonderful contrast between those pioneer conditions and the ones now prevailing at the comfortable modern nine-room residence of the family at Plevna, which is furnished with all modern conveniences, including a furnace in the full basement, and running water. It is one of the best residences at Plevna.

Mr. Buergi was married at Benson, Minnesota, the same spring in which he was graduated from the seminary and ordained to the ministry, to Miss Laura Theodorson, born at Benson, a daughter of Gilbert and Anna (Larson) Theodorson, natives of Norway and farming people of Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Buergi have one son, Henry George.

Mr. Buergi became a citizen of the United States through the process of naturalization and received his papers at Miles City, Montana, in 1913, and since then he has been an adherent of the democratic party. He belongs to the Brotherhood of American Yeomen, and is district manager for Carter, Fallon, Wibaux, Dawson and Prairie counties, and secretary and organizer of the Plevna lodge.

Although he no longer officiates as a clergyman, Mr. Buergi has not lost his sense of personal responsibility for the moral welfare of others, and at all times exerts an uplifting influence in his community. Having experienced so many hardships himself, he is very sympathetic to others similarly situated, and without doubt does much more for the unfortunate than will ever be made public, for he prefers not to let one hand know the good deeds of the other.

Ray L. Kampf has done a worthy part in the development of the region of Prairie County through a period of nearly a quarter of a century. For a number of years he has been in the lumber business at Terry, being manager of the local business of the Dunham Lumber Company.

Mr. Kampf was born in Tazewell County, Illinois,

April 21, 1876. His father, William H. Kampf, now a retired farmer at Armington, Illinois, was born in Tazewell County in 1846, and was a youthful soldier during the closing months of the Civil war. As a member of the Seventh Illinois Infantry he was appointed one of General Logan's body guards. He went through his army service unscathed, but his brother Marion was killed at the battle of Altoona.

William H. Kampf was a merchant for a short time after the war, but otherwise has been a farmer. His life as a citizen has been given to private deeds, he is a republican voter, and a member of the Christian Church. He married Elizabeth Gwinn, who was born in Ohio, and as a child was brought to Illinois by her widowed mother. She died in 1887, the mother of two children: Ray and Lulu J., the latter the wife of Dick Haullstein of Armington, Illinois.

When Ray L. Kampf was six years of age his parents moved to Spink County, South Dakota, and he lived on a farm in that section of the northwestern frontier to the age of eleven. He attended his first school there in a country district. After the death of his mother the father returned with his family to Illinois, and in Logan County of that state Ray L. Kampf grew up, attended the graded schools at Minier, but going to work as a wage earner at thirteen. All his experience before coming to Montana was as a farm hand.

At the age of eighteen, in Logan County, Illinois, on December 10, 1894, Mr. Kampf married Miss Estella J. Miller, who was born in that county December 19, 1875. She was educated in the country schools of Illinois. Her father, A. A. Miller, also a native of Illinois, died there at the age of fifty, was a radical republican in politics, and served Logan County as county commissioner. He was a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Miller married Rhoda Graves, whose father was a Federal soldier and was killed in battle. A. A. Miller and wife had eight children, five reaching mature years, and Mrs. Kampf and all the others live at Atlanta, Illinois, Mrs. William Gresham, Fred, Harry, a carpenter, and Fren, who is Mrs. Harry Baker.

Mr. and Mrs. Kampf on coming to Montana made their first home at Terry. He was soon working as a hand on the ranch of Mr. Burt, an early settler and extensive sheep man of the locality. He worked in the camp, was a tender and at times had charge of a band of sheep. After five or six years of connection with the sheep industry he engaged in the carpenter business. He knew something about tools and as a mechanic he helped to build up Terry both as a journeyman and as a contractor. Among the buildings he helped to construct were the old State Bank Building, the Stith residence, the first church of the town, the Central Hotel and perhaps two dozen residences. After about eight years at his trade Mr. Kampf joined a local company and established the Star Lumber Company at Terry, the yard being opened in 1909 with Mr. Kampf as manager and as secretary and treasurer of the company. Three years later the yard was sold to the Dunham Lumber Company, who retained Mr. Kampf as manager at Terry, and his personal ability has done much to popularize that business throughout Prairie County.

Mr Kampf saw the opportunity in that region for settlers, took a hopeful view of the situation, and entered into the spirit of development as his connection with Terry building indicates. When the first bank was proposed he became one of the stockholders of the State Bank of Terry, and was connected with the institution until he sold his interests in 1918. He is now one of the directors of the Security State Bank of Terry, and has been one of its stockholders since it was organized in 1914. Mr. Kampf also served six years as city treasurer of Terry. He was one of the men who went out and worked for the creation of Prairie County. Mr. Kampf is a republican, and is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. and Mrs. Kampf built their own home in Terry and that home was one of the many patriotic spots in Montana during the World war. They were stamp sellers in their place of business and contributed regularly to the various auxiliary war causes.

Mr. and Mrs. Kampf have three children. Eva is the wife of Ralph Ross, of Terry, and has a family of boys and girls named Laura, Milton R., Wayne W., Jack, Russell and Elizabeth. Adella L., the second of the family, was married to Emil H. Ebersviller, of Columbus, Montana, and has a son, Emil, Jr. Lenore, the youngest of the three daughters, is attending the Terry grade schools.

Claud E. Davison, postmaster of Roundup, and one of the best known men in this part of the state, is also a leader in his party in the county. He was born in Martin County, Minnesota, on his father's farm, March 5, 1881, a son of Bradley A. and Clara J. (Chaffee) Davison. Bradley A. Davison was born in Green County, Wisconsin, in 1854, and his wife was a native of Michigan. They became the parents of four children, of whom Claud E. Davison is the eldest. Growing up in Green County, Bradley A. Davison learned the elements of farming, and put them to practical use later on in life when he entered the agricultural field for himself in Martin County, Minnesota, where he remained until 1911. In that year he went to Chautauqua County, New York, and is now conducting a dairy business in the vicinity of Sherman, that state.

Like his father, Claud E. Davison was reared to agricultural pursuits, and he was sent to the rural schools of Martin County until he was eighteen years old, at which time he went into the office of H. W. Sinclair, who was conducting an abstract and loan business at Fairmont, Minnesota, and remained with him five years. In 1904 he left Mr. Sinclair and then entered the land department of the Northern Pacific Railroad at St. Paul, Minnesota, and held that position for about eighteen months. Going then to Bowman, North Dakota, he engaged in the abstract business, leaving there in 1911 for Roundup, Montana, and here he established the abstract business he is still conducting. While living at Bowman he served as a justice of the peace, being appointed to that office by Governor John Burke, and he was also appointed deputy county auditor, deputy clerk of the District Court, and deputy county treasurer, discharging all of these duties with characteristic fidelity. On March 1, 1917, Mr. Davison was appointed postmaster at Roundup by President Wilson, and is one of the best men in this office the city has ever had. Mr. Davison was made a Mason by Chain Lake Lodge No. 64, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, but demitted and became a member of Unity Lodge No. 76, Roundup, Montana, and he also belongs to Roundup Chapter No. 30, Royal Arch Masons.

On July 2, 1902, Mr. Davison was married to Mamie E. Frazier, born at Fairmont, Martin County, Minnesota, a daughter of Jerome B. and Mary A. (Loomer) Frazier, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Frazier had three children, two daughters and one son, Mrs. Davison being the second child.

Mr. Davison is a man who is noted for his efficiency and initiative and who when confronted by the everyday problems of his office knows just how to solve them in a manner which will give the public good service and yet will conform to governmental regulations. It is his theory that all public offices should be conducted upon the same fundamental principles that pertain to business transactions, and he applies them in a definite and practical manner, thus often times clearing away a lot of red tape which would ordinarily obstruct the rapid conduct of the routine of his office. Both as a citizen and official he stands very high in his community, as he has wherever he has lived.

Hon. Frank T. Kelsey, representative from Custer County in the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Legislatures, and a ranchman of Powder River County, the new county which he was the factor in creating from Custer County, and the fifteenth of Montana, is all but a native of this section of the state, having been a lad of but thirteen years when he came here, and he grew to manhood about and in the vicinity of Stacey. He was born in Franklin County, Kansas, November 11, 1874, a son of Theodore B. Kelsey, and a brother of Arthur R. Kelsey, a ranchman of Powder River County and of S. W. Kelsey, of Red Lodge, Montana, and is the youngest of a family of eight children.

The life of Mr. Kelsey up to the time of the attainment of his majority was largely a rural one. His education in his youth was a most limited one, and from eighteen to twenty-one years he did not attend school at all, but later was a student at the Stanbury (Missouri) Normal School and subsequently pursued a course of two years at the Northern Indiana Normal University, and after completing the teachers' course remained an additional year. Returning home, he embarked in teaching in what is now Rosebud County, but after one year left the school room to devote himself particularly to ranching, having learned this branch of industry under his father. Establishing himself permanently and finally at Moorhead, he started a new ranch property by entering a desert claim and purchasing title in other lands lying on both sides of Powder River, comprising a ranch of about 5,000 acres. He built the proverbial log house as his pioneer home, a two-room affair, floored and properly equipped for comfortable living purposes, and this building is still occupied, although not by Mr. Kelsey, who, after a few years, changed his location to his present home, four miles away, where the chief scenes of his ranch history have been enacted. His strain of cattle, while largely Hereford, contains some of the Angus as well as the Durham, and his marketable stock is shipped to Omaha, although he has also occasionally been on the Chicago market with his product. His brand is the "O + O" on the left ribs, but the "Lazy Y" and the "Lazy O" brands have been used by him as well.

Mr. Kelsey for twelve years carried on civil engineering work and surveying, running land lines and ditch surveying, and was a United States commissioner for the same period, in which land filing constituted his chief work, and he was the first and only United States commissioner south of Miles City. He grew up under republican influence as a boy, cast his maiden presidential vote for Major McKinley, and has supported his party ticket since. His only convention experience was as a delegate to the Custer County Convention of his party. Mr. Kelsey was chosen a member of the Legislature without a campaign either in the primary or the general election, and was chosen first in 1916 and again two years later, the last time with a majority of about 350 votes. He entered the Lower House of the Fifteenth Legislature and was assigned to the committees of agriculture, state lands and education, the important ones of that body, and in the Sixteenth Legislature was on the committees on education, sanitary affairs, new counties and divisions, live stock, and public ranges, irrigation and water rights. In this House his principal achievements were in the creation of Powder River County, in the support of live stock and in farming measures, and 100 per cent of his bills became laws. He supported enthusiastically the new law on beef and hide inspection, the control of bulls on public ranges, the dissolution of irrigation districts, and the revision of the general laws of the state upon the subject of education, and led the fight to preserve the appropriation for live stock preservation.

Mr. Kelsey has served School District No. 7, his home neighborhood, for many years as a director and was instrumental in having the district laid off and organized. By virtue of his office he is a member of the Republican State Central Committee. He was chairman of the Council of Defense of Custer County, took an active part in the Liberty Loan drives, and helped Moorhead win the honor flag in the Third Liberty Loan for the highest per capita subscription for the Ninth Federal Reserve District, $194 plus for every man, woman and child in the district. As chairman of the Council of Defense he led off in the prosecution of all flagrant forms of sedition and saw some traitorous acts punished with prison sentences. Mr. Kelsey is a member of Miles City Lodge No. 538, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is a stockholder and director of the Montana Petroleum Company, and president and a stockholder of the Powder River State Bank at Broadus, and belongs to the Montana Stock Growers' Association.

At Miles City, Montana, August 9, 1900, Mr. Kelsey married Lula B. Miller, a sister of Mrs. Arthur Kelsey. Mrs. Frank T. Kelsey was born near Shenandoah, Iowa, in February, 1881, finished the teachers' course at Shenandoah and taught school in both Nebraska and Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Kelsey are the parents of six children: Vesper, Inez, Willis, Theodore, Rosabell and Frances.

Thomas M. Murn. A native son of Montana, son of a pioneer railroader in this state, Thomas M. Murn, is known throughout the length and breadth of Prairie County and in other sections of the state as a leading lawyer, engaged in practice at Terry since 1915.

His grandparents were Thomas and Catherine (Goldrick) Murn, who came from County Clare, Ireland, living for a time in Quebec, Canada, and soon after the close of the American Civil war moved to the United States and settled on a farm at St. Cloud, Minnesota, where Thomas Murn spent the rest of his life and where he is buried. Of their six children all were born in Ireland except William P. Murn, who was born at Quebec in August, 1864. William P. Murn grew up at St. Cloud, Minnesota, and largely picked up his education. However, he has shown himself a man of intelligence and resourcefulness, and for many years has been in a position of trust with the Northern Pacific Railway Company. He began his railroading career as a section laborer at St. Cloud, and in 1882 came to Montana and located at Glendive. For a number of years past he has had the responsibilities of the office of roadmaster for the Northern Pacific at Glendive. He has given his life to his duties as a railroad man and to his home. In politics his only experience is as a voter, though he was one of the most enthusiastic admirers and partisans of the late Colonel Roosevelt.

At Dickinson, North Dakota, William P. Murn married Miss Anna Reuther. She was born in Bavaria in Southern Germany. Her father was killed while a soldier of his country in the Franco-Prussian war. The widowed mother, Mrs. Margaret Reuther, subsequently brought her family to the United States, the daughter Anna being then about six years of age. Mrs. Anna Murn has one sister, Mrs. A. F. Rilev, of Gladstone, North Dakota.

Thomas M. Murn is the only child of his parents and was born at Glendive, December 7, 1891. He grew up in his native town, finished his high school education there, and his father then sent him East to prepare for the legal profession as a student in Georgetown University at Washington, District of Columbia. He received the degrees LL. B. and LL. M. from that institution, gaining his first diploma in 1913 and his second in the following year. With these qualifications derived from one of the noted law schools of the country and supplemented by a residence in the national capital for several years, Mr. Murn returned to his native state and early in 1915 began practice at Terry, where he tried his first District Court case. His practice has been general, and he has served Terry as its city attorney since he came here. He has been connected on one side or the other with every case tried before the District Court. He is also associated with Al Hansen of Baker in the Equity Abstract and Title Company, who have compiled the abstract records for Fallon and Carter counties.

During the World war Mr. Murn served as a member of the Legal Advisory Board of Prairie County, and enlisted in the Tank Corps and was in special training for that service at Camp Polk at Raleigh, North Carolina. He was there when the armistice was signed, and was discharged from Camp Dodge, Iowa, January 1, 1919. He is the present post adjutant of Prairie Post of the American Legion at Terry. Mr. Murn is affiliated with the Elks and Knights of Columbus, and is a republican, having cast his first presidential vote for Mr. Hughes in 1916.

At Billings, Montana, October 17, 1916, he married Miss Tessie Spurling. She is also a native of Montana, born at Butte in March, 1893, daughter of James E. and Tessie (Mulholand) Spurling. Her father is a prominent railroad man, being general agent of the Northern Pacific at Billings. He was born in Iowa of Irish ancestry. The Spurling children are Ed C., Mrs. J. L. Markham of Billings, Mrs. Murn and Miss Margaret Spurling.

Dan H. Bowman, who is extensively engaged in the stock industry in Custer County, was born in Andrew County, Missouri, March 4, 1863, and his educational training was obtained in the country schools. His father, Benjamin Franklin Bowman, was taken into Northwestern Missouri as a child about 1840, the family moving there from Kentucky in that year, although Casper Bowman, the grandfather of Dan H., had gone into Andrew County as early as 1836. Casper Bowman was born in Bracken County, Kentucky, in 1802, and the histories of representatives of this family are woven into the warp and woof of the establishment of civilization in that section of the country.

After removing to Missouri, Casper Bowman secured land in Andrew County. He lived to the good old age of eighty-eight years. He married Mary Ann Hutchison, who was also born in Bracken County, Kentucky, in 1809. She survived her husband ten years. They became the parents of four sons and five daughters.

Benjamin Franklin Bowman, one of the sons of this hardy pioneer, spent his life as a farmer in Andrew County, Missouri, and vicinity. He was a Union soldier during the Civil war, serving in the infantry in Southern Missouri. He married in his early life Barbara Frances Wood, she with her people coming from Virginia about 1846 and locating in Northwestern Missouri. She was a daughter of William Follis and Barbara (Brumback) Wood, the father a slave owner and planter in Virginia on the Potomac River in his early life. Mrs. Bowman died in Andrew County, after becoming the mother of the following children: Barbara, who became the wife of William Gillam and lives in Colorado; Benjamin, who spent his life in Arkansas and died in that state leaving a family; Mrs. George W. Myers, of Miles City, Montana; William C., a grain farmer near Spokane, Washington; and Dan Hutchison.

From his native state of Missouri, Dan H. Bowman arrived at Miles City, Montana, on the 18th of June, 1882, the Northern Pacific Railway having been completed to that point about that time, and he was then a youth of nineteen and had come to the Northwest to join his sister, Mrs. George W. Myers. The only capital he brought with him was the experience and knowledge he had gained as a farmer in Missouri. His first employment after his arrival was on the Myers Brothers sheep ranch at the mouth of Sheep Creek, and in the following year he was made the ranch foreman. Subsequently associating himself with George W. Myers in the sheep industry, he ranged along Sheep Creek and the Powder River to its mouth, abandoning that region only when the range became overstocked. The partnership with Mr. Myers continued until the disastrous winter of 1886-7, and in the spring of the latter year Mr. Bowman disposed of the few stock left after the terrible losses of the winter, withdrew from the partnership and began work on the cattle range.

As a cowboy he secured employment with the "LO" ranch on the Mizpah, where he spent two years with the noted John M. Holt, the king of the cattle industry of this region at that time and Mr. Bowman from there went to the "4-4" ranch, which had its headquarters on Powder River below the mouth of the Mizpah, and spent a two-year period there. For a year or two following he sheared sheep, and about this time entered a homestead at the mouth of Sheep Creek and established his headquarters there. And about this time also he became the manager of the Merrill and Davidson ranch on the "Divide," about five miles east of Knowlton, where he spent a period of about two years. But in the meantime Mr. Bowman had continued his ranching enterprise on his claim, returning there periodically and building up his own interests.

His next connection was with an entirely new industry, that of manufacturing lumber in this locality. Purchasing a traction engine and a small sawmill, he located them in the canyon along the old trail, about a mile and a half west of Knowlton, where he was engaged in the manufacture of lumber for three years, but during the last year of that period he came down on Sheep Creek and inaugurated the Bowman ranch. He brought with him a small bunch of cattle and the proceeds from the sale of his homestead and other interests and began his career as a cattle man. This was in about the year 1899, and the nucleus of his stock raising industry included about twenty-three cows and a bull. They were of the common strain then prevailing in this region, but five years or so later he added about 350 head from the Hon. J. R. McKay's ranch, and among this herd were a number of bulls of the registered Canadian stock of the Shorthorn strain, the first of that particular breeding it is believed to have been brought into this country.

In 1913 Mr. Bowman formed the Spearhead Stock Company, consisting of himself, his wife and his son, and this firm are the owners of the Bowman ranch and stock interests. The boundaries of the estate have grown from the claim of a half section entered by Mrs. Bowman, and where are located the headquarters of the ranch, to an area of more than 20,000 acres, and the Spearhead brand was adopted as the principal brand for the stock. During many years the concerted energies of Mr. Bowman and his family have been spent upon this property and toward its success as a stock proposition. For a period of twenty years or more Mr. Bowman served as an inspector for the Montana Sheep Growers Association.

He began his political activities as a democratic voter, having perhaps inherited his opinions from his forefathers and the community in which he was reared. But eventually he became dissatisfied with the party, and when Colonel Roosevelt launched the progressive movement Mr. Bowman favored the party and gave it his cordial support. With the closing of this movement and its reunion with the republican party he became a republican, feeling that the cleansing that had long been needed had been accomplished and is of the opinion that the salvation of the country as a liberty-loving and democratic form of government lies therein. In his home community Mr. Bowman was early identified with the movement for the establishment of public schools, and was instrumental in the organization of the first school and furnished the building in which it was held. He also petitioned the setting off of the Knowlton school district and was a member of its school board for a number of years.

Mr. Bowman was married at Seneca Castle, New York, November 22, 1885, to Miss Lillie M. Odell, relative of B. B. Odell, a former governor of New York, and a republican leader of that state. She was born September 1, 1865, a daughter of John and Mary (Brown) Odell. Her paternal grandfather settled in the City of New York, where he was a mechanic, and acquired considerable real estate. He subsequently moved to the northwestern part of the state, and there his son John spent his life. John and Mary Odell were the parents of four children, William, Lillie, Malcom and Mary. The youngest child, Mary, married Adelbert Hull. Mr. and Mrs. Bowman have one son, Elbert Francis, who was born in Custer County, Montana, June 23, 1889, and was reared on the ranch in which he is now a business partner with his father. He is now president of the Spearhead Stock Company. During the period of the World war he volunteered for service and was assigned to the S. A. T. C. (Students Army Training Corps) at the State University, Boulder, Colorado, until the signing of the armistice. On June 12, 1918, in South Park, Minnesota, Elbert F. Bowman was married to Miss Gaylord Clark. She was born in South Park, Minnesota, was given a liberal education, and was principal of the South Park High School of Minnesota when married.

During many years Dan H. Bowman has been a member of the Odd Fellows fraternity, maintaining his membership in Beaver Lodge No. 65, at Ekalaka, Montana.

Daniel W. Slayton, of Lavina, is one of the pioneer ranchers and sheep men of Montana. He was born in Steuben County, New York, November 6, 1862, and spent part of his early life in the State of Virginia. He came to Montana in 1884, forming a partnership with his brother Dalon F. Slayton at White Sulphur Springs. After three years they dissolved partnership. Daniel W. Slayton's interests as a land holder and sheep man grew, and for a number of years he handled the finer grades of wool sheep, numbering thousands. One of his ranches was on Folsom Creek, fifty miles north of Billings. In 1897 he bought the Moser ranch in the same locality, this being the pioneer ranch of this section. In 1901 Mr. Slayton bought the Trask ranch near the Town of Lavina.

In November, 1887, he married Miss Lizzie E. Ellis, a native of Massachusetts. Five children were born to their marriage: Lydia Elizabeth, Daniel Ellis, Albert John, Ernest Gardner and Ruth Catherine.

Michael Gilmore. A real pioneer of Montana, and one who has spent sixty years of his life within the borders of the state, Michael Gilmore came to this region before Montana was even an organized territory and, contrary to the general rule, came from the West. He was born and reared in Oregon, Marion County being his native heath and September 29, 1835, his birth date, and was trained to the ranch business there. His school advantages were slight, as he never attended an organized institution of learning, but taught himself to read and write and to transact business, with the object of becoming a useful citizen.

When Mr. Gilmore left Oregon he went to Fort Walla Walla, Washington, following the Columbia River on horseback to Wallula, and then crossing over to the fort, where he secured a position as a teamster for the Government. Later he carried the mail from Walla Walla over a portion of the road to Fort Benton, but after two years of this work, when the Mullen Company discovered the gold deposits on Gold Creek in 1862, left his mail job and began prospecting on his own account. Mr. Gilmore found some ore but too little to prosper him, and left prospecting there to go over to Bannock. There he secured a mining claim and worked it six months, but as it was poor pay also he joined the Jim Stewart expedition to Tongue River and came down into what is now Custer County. The report being false as to the gold discovery at the mouth of the Tongue River the party returned toward Bannock, but hearing of a big strike in Alder Gulch rushed to that territory and secured claims. Mr. Gilmore worked his claim on the main gulch and also on the Sweeny bar and panned out wealth in profusion, the pans running from $5 to $15 each, but as there was no water there he had to sack his dust and carry it to some water hole to wash it. He mined thus for two years and then, in 1866, went to Butte and spent the summer in mining, but the gold was not good. He then changed his vocation and embarked in the butcher business with Tom Stevens, at a time when the present large City of Butte comprised but a few log buildings and one short street.

Leaving Butte and returning to Gold Creek, Mr. Gilmore started a butcher shop and remained until 1877. It was at this time that the Nez Perce Indians went on the warpath, deserting their Idaho reservation, and came through that region, where they committed numerous murders and depredations. Mr. Gilmore, being familiar with the territory, secured a position as scout from the quartermaster with the United States command, and scouted all summer, taking an active part in the Big Hole fight, an arrow wound scar on his left ear still testifying how close he was to death.

Following this event Mr. Gilmore in 1877 came to Miles City, Montana, and continued his work as scout and interpreter for the Government. He could speak three different Sioux languages in addition to their sign language, and spent two years with the Government in this work. Subsequently he went back to his first love, mining, and for several months was around Deadwood in the Black Hills, but gave up his work there when hearing of General Bradley's expedition, which he joined at Fort Laramie and camped at Stonesville, now Alzada, on the Little Missouri River. The general's troops were scouting over that country after the Sioux, many of whom were captured and taken back to their reservation. He was with General Bradley two years, and when he left him went to Pierre, South Dakota, where he established himself in the meat business. He was married while there, and when he left Pierre went to Nebraska and took up a homestead in Dawes County, upon which he spent ten years as a farmer. When he left Nebraska he returned to Montana and has since been a factor in the development of the state. He entered a desert claim on the Mizpah, and his home has been here now for twenty years. He took up the cattle and horse industry, which he followed extensively for many years, but with the closing of the open range by settlement of the country has fallen back on a measure of farming as a livelihood. Mr. Gilmore is convinced from his acquaintance with this region that it is not intended for farming, and that it is not likely to become a farming region. He believes that God made this country for stock only; silk worms will not thrive here, and other industries practiced in localities wholly different are generally failures.

Mr. Gilmore's sturdy nature comes from an Irish father, Michael Gilmore, and a French mother who was born in Canada. His parents were married in Oregon, where both passed away, and of their seven children he is the only survivor.

Mr. Gilmore married Julia Ada, a native German woman, who was his companion for thirty-two years and died May 3, 1911, at the age of fifty-three. Their children were seven in number and two died in childhood. Those living are: Michael, in the National Army during the World war, serving at Camp Lewis, and now managing his father's ranch, married Louise Vautier; Thomas L., a ranchman on the Little Powder River, who married Lucile Gilland and has a daughter, Sarah Allene; Daniel M., who was a National Army soldier at Camp Lewis, and now on his father's ranch; and Julia Marie. Mr. Gilmore has always voted the democratic ticket. His only public office has been that of school director of District No. 28, an office which has also been held by his eldest son.

Hugh R. Wells. As state chairman of the democratic party the name of Hugh R. Wells is associated with some of the most striking achievements of that party in Montana, and he has helped make a great deal of political history. In his home community of Miles City he is known as a prominent business man, long identified with the ranching industry and also with banking.

He was born in St. Louis, Missouri, in 1872, son of Robert W. Wells and grandson of Jesse Wells, of Jefferson City, Missouri. Robert W. Wells married Alice M. Mosley, a daughter of Judge Mosley, who was Indian agent for the United States at Old Wyandotte, Kansas, when that was a mere village and when his daughter Alice was a small girl. Judge Mosley afterward lived at New Madrid, Missouri. Mrs. Robert W. Wells was a niece of General Parsons of Missouri and was related to the family of the famous Henry Clay. Robert W. Wells spent his boyhood and early manhood at Sacramento, California, but married in Missouri and afterward was in the mining industry and real estate. He died at the age of seventy-eight years at Fort Worth, Texas, where his widow is still living, aged seventy-nine. Their children were: Guy M., of New Mexico; W. R., general livestock agent of the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway at Fort Worth, Texas; Hugh R. of Miles City; Stephen R., salesman for a wholesale mercantile house at Fort Worth; and Mamie, wife of Modrel Yoakum, president of a potash company at Omaha, Nebraska.

When Hugh R. Wells was three years old his parents moved to Texas, and he grew up in Tarrant County and its chief city, Fort Worth. He attended the high school of Fort Worth and a business college, and from early youth his experiences were those of the ranch and range. He has known every phase of the great cattle industry, and was a cowboy when that occupation meant real work, hardship, adventure and danger. After reaching young manhood he entered the employ of the "C" outfit, and later worked for other companies as a cowboy. From the '80s on until he came to Montana he was essentially a cow man. Among the numerous brands used by him was "L bar L." Many of his operations were in the Panhandle country, and he frequently drove stock over the trails to Dodge City, Kansas, and other railroad points.

Mr. Wells came into Montana in the fall of 1900 and was general manager of the "Hat X" ranch, twenty miles north of Miles City. He brought that outfit of cattle and horses from the Pecos River country between Eddy and Roswell, New Mexico, where he had been an independent operator and cattle man for many years. Mr. Wells bought the remnant of the "Hat X" ranch above the Yellowstone and also a large horse ranch under the Brand "T Flora de Luce," raising at first saddle horses and afterward draft horses. His was one of the most important and best known stock outfits of recent years. Mr. Wells is still interested in stock on the Powder River, having a few cattle, horses and sheep below Broadus on that stream.

In recent years he has given much of his time to banking. In 1917 he organized the Miles City National Bank, and was elected its president. His fellow officers are Robert Yokley and C. N. Lukes, vice presidents, and L. K. Hill, cashier. The bank has a capital of $125,000. Mr. Wells is also president of the Montana Horseman's Organization and is former secretary of the Montana Stock Growers' Association.

The fact that Mr. Wells was honored politically when a young man by his associates on the ranch and range speaks highly of his real leadership. When only twenty-one years of age he was elected sheriff of Midland, Upton and Crane counties in Western Texas, served two terms, and was otherwise connected with the democratic party in that state. He brought the same politics to Montana and in 1911 was chosen sheriff of Custer County. After his two year term there followed an interim of two years and he was then again elected, finally retiring from office in 1917. Mr. Wells was elected a representative from Custer County to the Fourteenth Legislature, serving under Speaker George Ramsey. He was the first man from Eastern Montana to be elected chairman of the steering committee in the Legislature. He was also chairman of the livestock committee, vice chairman of the finance committee and a member of other house committees. Governor Norris appointed him a member of the livestock commission and he was made its vice chairman. After his election as state chairman of the democratic party in Montana he was active in the campaigns which elected Governor Stewart and Senators Myers and Walsh. He is the second resident of Eastern Montana to be honored with a state chairmanship. Mr. Wells is also vice president of the State Highway Commission and a member of its executive committee, which launched $3,000,000 worth of permanent road work in the state. His party chairmanship was in a large measure responsible for the greatest democratic majority ever given a presidential candidate in Montana. In 1916 President Wilson received a majority of 34,000, figures that have never been equaled in Montana.

Mr. Wells is one of the oldest members of the Elks Lodge in Miles City, and has contributed much to the influence of that organization. He was one of the members who planned and carried out the construction of the Elks Home. He has represented the lodge in a number of state meetings. He was a charter member of the Odd Fellows Lodge at Midland, Texas.

At West, Texas, Mr. Wells married Miss Laura A. Holt, a daughter of Judge J. O. Holt, a prominent old time Texan who for many years was in the stock business. Judge Holt married a Miss Fannin, a niece of Governor L. S. Ross of Texas. The Holt family of Texas are connected with the noted Holts of Durham, North Carolina, where the name for generations has been prominently identified with cotton milling. Mr. and Mrs. Wells were married in May, 1894, and their children are Hortense Louise, John Oscar and Monta Cato. Hortense finished her education in the Ward-Belmont School for Girls in Nashville, Tennessee. The son, John O., while a student in the University of the South at Sewanee, Tennessee, was one of the thirty-eight boys in the United States selected for West Point Military Academy. He was also recommended for a second lieutenancy by the Students Army Training Corps of Sewanee. He declined the appointment to West Point in favor of the commission offered him by his own university.

EDWARD P. O'BRIEN. An early recognition of the opportunities and responsibilities of life and a laudable ambition to play a creditable part are encouraging facts concerning the younger class of business men in the western country today. Well educated as a rule, many early seek a test of personal independence, and the success that they ultimately achieve is usually well deserved. In this connection mention may be made of one of Montana's prominent young business men, whose activities since leaving school have made him familiar with ranching, lumbering, merchandising and banking, Edward P. O'Brien, who is manager and cashier of the First National Bank of Plevna.

Edward P. O'Brien was born at Hastings, Minnesota, January 31, 1890, the twelfth of a family of thirteen children born to Daniel J. and Mary (Casey) O'Brien. Daniel J. O'Brien was a well educated young man when he came to the United States. He was born in 1840, in County Kilkenny, Ireland. He reached Minnesota in the early days of the Civil war, enlisted as a soldier in the Tenth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry and served through the war with such valor that special honor was given him by his commanding officers. When the war was over he secured Government land in Dakota County, Minnesota, where he followed farming and stockraising for a number of years. He was then elected county treasurer, at which time he retired from his farm and resided at the county seat of Dakota County for the eight years he continued in office locating then in the City of Hastings, where he engaged in the insurance business during the rest of his active life. In politics he was a democrat, and he was a faithful member of the Roman Catholic Church. His death occurred in 1899. At Lakeville, Minnesota, he married Mary Casey, who was born in 1848, at Cold Spring in Putnam County, New York, and now resides at Plevna, Montana.

Edward P. O'Brien attended the public schools at Hastings, Minnesota, and after graduation attended the high school, and completed a commercial course in a business college at Minneapolis. In the fall of 1909 he came to what was then Custer, but is now Fallon County, Montana, and homesteaded, fourteen months later commuting, paying for his land. He then was employed by his brother-in-law in the lumber business at Helena, Montana, remaining there until he had gained a knowledge of that line of work. After his return, in association with his brother R. P. O'Brien, he devoted considerable attention to his farm and ranch, to which the brothers added tracts and embarked in the real estate business at Plevna. Here he also became interested with his brother, R. P. O'Brien, in the hardware business, the firm style being the Plevna Hardware Company. In 1917 Mr. O'Brien sold his hardware interests to his brother, in the meanwhile being one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Plevna, since which time he has devoted his attention to this flourishing institution as manager and cashier. He has demonstrated business qualities of a high order and enjoys the esteem and confidence of his fellow citizens.

On August 24, 1916, Mr. O'Brien was united in marriage to Miss Gertrude E. Kelley, who was born at Sheldon in O'Brien County, Iowa. They have two daughters, Mary Marcella and Agnes Elizabeth. Mr. O'Brien is a member of the Roman Catholic Church, and belongs to the Knights of Columbus.

FRANK MAINS, one of the enterprising young men of Baker, is a member of the Tribune Publishing Company, Incorporated, publishers of the Baker Sentinel, and has been a resident of the county seat since September, 1913. He was born at Defiance, Ohio, March 18, 1880, a son of Frank J. Mains.

Frank J. Mains was born in Ohio in July, 1853, and after attending the public schools of his native state learned the printing trade. Subsequently he bought the Defiance Democrat, first issued as a weekly and later as a daily as well. This was a strongly democratic paper, the organ of the party in that region, and Mr. Mains had as his associates in business Congressman W. D. Hill and State Senator Elmer White of Ohio.

Frank J. Mains was married to Amanda Hartman, a daughter of William Hartman, who belonged to one of the old-established families of Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Mains became the parents of the following children: Frank, whose name heads this review; Hud C., who is a job printer of Aberdeen, South Dakota; Fred, who is a printer at Cleveland, Ohio; Horace M., who is associated with his brother Fred; and Lemuel, who is a machinist at Defiance, Ohio. The grandfather, John Mains, was also born in Ohio, and he spent his entire mature years working as a tailor at Somerset and Defiance, Ohio, dying in the latter city. His wife bore the maiden name of Catherine Irwin, and of the six children born to them Frank J. was the oldest.

Frank Mains attended the public schools of Defiance, Ohio, and learned the printer's trade in the office of the Defiance Democrat, then issued by his father. After he attained to his majority he became secretary of the Crescent-News Company of Defiance, and after two years founded the Mains Printing Company, which he conducted for two years when he sold and came west to Aberdeen, South Dakota. For five years he conducted a job printing business of his own in that city, and then, selling his interests, came to Baker in September, 1913, to become manager of the Baker Sentinel. After several years, during which time he maintained this connection, Mr. Mains retired from it, and in company with Carl R. Pleissner bought the Fallon County Times, then owned by Butte H. Tipton, and in September, 1917, became its manager. In August, 1920, he severed his connections with this medium and became associated with the Tribune Publishing Company in a like capacity.

On September 1, 1912, Mr. Mains was united in marriage with Miss Florence Dowe, a daughter of John F. Dowe, at Defiance, Ohio. Mr. Dowe settled at Defiance at an early day and was first identified with the handling of ship timber. Mrs. Mains is the eldest of his seven children. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Mains are as follows: John F., Margaret Elizabeth and William D.

A democrat by inheritance and conviction, Mr. Mains cast his first presidential vote for Judge Allen D. Parker in 1904. He is a Blue Lodge Mason. A sound, dependable business man, he has won the approval of the people of Baker ever since he first came to the city, and is regarded as one of its constructive citizens. In his capacity of a publisher he has plenty of opportunity to boost Baker, and never fails to do so, being deeply interested in its development in the highest sense of the word.

JAY M. COMSTOCK, manager and stockholder of the Carpenter-Webster Lumber Company of Baker, has been a forceful factor in the business life of this city since April, 1910, when he organized this company and took charge of its operations. In the spring of 1919 the company absorbed by purchase the business and stock of the Morrow Lumber Company, and its yards are now among the largest in this part of Montana. The company is capitalized at $250,000, and its officials are as follows: Charles Webster, president, and C. H. Carpenter, secretary and treasurer, and both are members of the board of directors.

Jay M. Comstock was born at Storm Lake, Iowa, on March 31, 1873, a son of Edgar Comstock, a retired business man of Oregon, Wisconsin. Edgar Comstock was born in Vermont, where he was reared to be a farmer, leaving that state for Wisconsin at an early age. In 1897 he went into the lumber business at Oregon, Wisconsin, and remained in it until his retirement. A strong republican, he was elected on his party ticket to the city council of Oregon. He was married to Anna Main, a daughter of Robert P. Main, a farmer who lived in the vicinity of Oregon, Wisconsin, and an ex-Union soldier. Edgar Comstock and his wife became the parents of the following children: William R., who died at Mobridge, South Dakota, leaving a wife and son; Jay M., whose name heads this review; Ethel M., who is the widow of Roy Richards, of Long Beach, California, and has three sons; Frank C., who resides at Postville, Iowa; and Lenora E., who is the wife of Frank C. Cole, of Elroy, Wisconsin.

Jay M. Comstock spent his childhood and boyhood at Oregon, Wisconsin, and there received a public school education. Entering his father's lumber yards, he acquired a practical experience in the lumber business which has stood him in excellent stead in after life. When he attained his majority he left home and came west to Ramsey County, North Dakota, where he was manager of the yards of the Saint Anthony and Dakota Lumber Company, holding that position for five years. He was then taken sick, and after a period of ill health extending over eighteen months he went to South Dakota and conducted a yard at Stratford for the Imperial Lumber Company for three years.

About this time the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company began extending its road westward, and Mr. Comstock followed in its wake, having in mind the project of homesteading somewhere. He secured his claim adjoining the town site of Marmath, North Dakota, and in conjunction with his brother, William R. Comstock, organized the Comstock Brothers Lumber Company and conducted its yard for two years, during which period he was proving up his land, for which in due time he received his patent. His first home on this land was a frame structure 16 by 24 feet, of two rooms, and in it he sheltered his family while he engaged in business at Marmath. At the expiration of the two years the brother sold their lumber yard to the Carpenter-Webster Lumber Company, an organization they helped to perfect, and Mr. Comstock located permanently at Baker, while his brother continued in charge of the yard at Marmath. In addition to his lumber interests Mr. Comstock is vice president of the First National Bank of Baker, which he assisted in organizing, and he owns a ranch in the vicinity of Baker.

On September 6, 1899, Mr. Comstock was united in marriage with Gertrude Weden at Ladd, Wisconsin. She is one of four daughters born to her parents. Mr. Weden, who was a farmer for a number of years, died in Southern Minnesota, but his widow survives and is now living at Minneapolis, Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Comstock have one daughter, Gertrude R., who was born September 29, 1904. She is now attending school at New Haven, Connecticut.

Mr. Comstock is a republican, and cast his first presidential ballot for William McKinley. He is a member of the Mississippi Valley Lumbermen's Association, and attends its annual meetings. Baker Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, has him as one of its charter members, and he has passed all of its chairs and also belongs to the Encampment, and has sat in the Grand Lodge upon two occasions. Both he and his wife belong to the Rebekahs. A Mason, Mr. Comstock belongs to Sandstone Lodge No. 84, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; was made a Chapter Mason at Miles City, Montana, and also a Knight Templar, and then was made a Noble of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, now belonging to Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He is also a member of the Order of Eastern Star. A man of experience in his line of business, Mr. Comstock is able to conduct it in a manner that reflects credit on himself and yields profit to his company. Having centered his interests at Baker, he is one of the boosters of the city, and can be depended upon to give an active and effective support to all measures looking toward its further advancement.

GEORGE E. HOUGH. Among the business men of Baker who identified themselves with the town in its infancy is Hon. George E. Hough, mayor of the town and founder and builder of the Baker telephone system and exchange. He came into Montana in 1909 and in December of that year cast his lot with this place. The immediate object of his settlement here was to engage in the telephone business, and within six months the exchange was in operation and the people of Baker put into verbal communication with the outside world. The system started operation with thirty-five phones and the plant grew with the forward movement of the town until 1917, when Mr. Hough sold it with 200 phones on the exchange. With the sale of this plant went also the plant at Ismay, Montana, which was installed by Mr. Hough in 1916 and developed into a system with forty phones.

Mr. Hough came to Montana from Stickney, South Dakota, where he installed a telephone plant four years before he parted with it and abandoned the state. The construction of that system marked his first connection with the business and marks also his entry into a successful business life. Prior to this he had proved up on a claim which he drew in the Government lottery of the Rosebud Indian Reservation lands, his claim being but a half mile from the Town of Gregory, South Dakota. When he entered upon the work of complying with the law regarding homesteads there he built a house of frame of one room, and in this maintained bachelor quarters until he married, and this roof sheltered himself and wife until he parted with his land. Two years after he occupied his claim he acquired title to it, and the sale of it provided the capital with which he entered the telephone business.

George E. Hough was the first child born at Hawarden, South Dakota, his natal day being September 28, 1882. His father was James Hough, who immigrated from Indiana to that region about 1871 and spent some ten years as a railroad contractor on different lines of railroads in the Dakotas. He had a contract between Mitchell and Chamberlain, building grade for the Milwaukee company, and another contract between Sioux City and Hawarden for the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad. He subsequently purchased a farm in Cedar County, Nebraska, and cultivated it with his sons for a few years, but moved finally to Minnesota, and at present is a resident of Shakopee, that state. James Hough was born in Indiana in 1857, one of the five children of a native of England who immigrated to the United States, fought as a soldier during the Civil war, and spent the rest of his life in Indiana. James Hough married Margaret Falstroff, daughter of John Falstroff, of German blood, and to this union there were born: Charles, of Minnesota; James, of Wabasha, Minnesota; Daniel, of Tindall, South Dakota; George E., of this notice; Lloyd, of Hutchinson, Minnesota; and Harry, of Shakopee, Minnesota.

George E. Hough's education was acquired in the public schools, and his first important achievement was the proving up of a homestead, his early labors being those connected with work on a farm. The capital from his homestead was the starting factor in his connection with the telephone business, leading him into a channel that gave his career an agreeable flavor among business men. When he first saw Baker it was a hamlet with three stores, a bank, three lumber yards, a hotel and two restaurants, and when South Baker was only a cow pasture separated from the future county seat by a deep and wide draw. Feeling a vital interest in the welfare of the infant city, he became eventually one of its substantial builders. Four dwellings in Baker proper, besides his own residence, a bungalow in beautiful South Baker, have come into being by his investment and under his direction.

Mr. Hough became connected with the government of Baker as a member of the city council in the spring of 1916. He served with colleagues Lewellyn Price, William O'Loughlin and Edward C. Lentz, and resigned to take the mayoralty to fill a vacancy in April, 1919. During his administration the installment of the water works has been accomplished and bonds for the extension of sewers were voted in December, 1919. Since retiring from the operation of the telephone system Mr. Hough has been Baker's sales agent for the Buick and Dodge automobiles. He purchased and converted into a garage the old Baker Opera House, where his salesroom is now maintained.

Mr. Hough was married while proving up on his homestead in South Dakota, July 10, 1905. His wife was formerly Christine Nelson, a daughter of Clemens Nelson, a carpenter and contractor of Danish birth. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson reside at St. Helena, Nebraska, and their surviving children are: Mrs. Kate Jones, of St. Helena; Mrs. Hough; and a son, James, at St. Helena. Mr. and Mrs. Hough have a son, La Verne, who was born August 6, 1907, and is attending school.

EINAR HAMILTON TRANDUM, who has been a resident of Baker since 1910, is contributing to its commercial importance by conducting a first-class grocery, and he also owns a fine ranch property not far from Baker. Mr. Trandum was born at Grand Forks, North Dakota, on May 11, 1892, a son of Marcus E. Trandum.

The birth of Marcus E. Trandum occurred in Norway, but he came to the United States when he was a boy, accompanying his brother Olaf Trandum on the trip. They were without money, but were ambitious and being afforded the wonderful advantages this country has always accorded its people, they succeeded in life. After his arrival in this country he married Helena A. Arnaberg, who died in 1915, when about fifty years of age, her husband dying at the age of fifty-one. They were born on the same day of the same month, June 18th, but a year apart. They had six children, namely: Einer H., whose name heads this review; Pearl K., who lives at Miles City, Montana; Clarence M., who served as a member of the Thirty-second Division in the World war, going to France as one of the first 10,000 men sent abroad, was wounded through the abdomen by a machine gun while taking Fismes, France, on the famous Chateau Thierry drive, still carries the bullet in his liver, and was sent home as a casual after the armistice was signed; Holger M., who was also in the war, as a member of the Second Regiment, Montana National Guard, was sent in the same contingent as his brother to France, and into Germany as a part of the Army of Occupation, being stationed near Coblenz, was returned to the United States in May, 1919, and discharged at Fort D. A. Russell without wounds, and is now on the Trandum ranch; Clara, who is attending school; and Alf, who is the youngest, is also attending school.

Einar H. Trandum attended school in his native city, completing the high school course, and then came in 1908 to Montana, and for two years lived at Miles City, where he was employed by the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad. He and his father then entered homesteads at Webster, Montana, and occupied them for the necessary time to prove them up. Mr. Trandum built the usual claim "shack" on his homestead, broke the land, dug a well, and made the other improvements so as to comply with the Government regulations. This little pioneer shelter has been replaced by a comfortable residence, the outbuildings are modern, and his original claim has been expanded into a ranch of 1,000 acres. From the beginning he has been very successful as a grain producer.

In 1910 Mr. Trandum was appointed deputy treasurer of Fallon County under Emil F. Lentz, serving as such until the retirement of Mr. Lentz, when he was appointed to the vacant office and filled out the unexpired term to the satisfaction of all parties concerned. Mr. Trandum then bought the stock of the old Baker Mercantile Company and since then has conducted a grocery, handling a high grade of goods and earning a reputation as a fair and honorable dealer who can be trusted implicitly. His trade is a large one and extends over Baker and the territory contiguous to it.

On January 14, 1918, Mr. Trandum was married in Minneapolis, Minnesota, to Miss Mildred A. Wagner, born at Ottumwa, Iowa, on January 14, 1897. During her girlhood she lived in Iowa, Texas and South Dakota, and attended the public schools of all three states. Mr. and Mrs. Trandum have two daughters, Helen Ann, who was born on March 5, 1919, and Mildred Lorraine, born May 2, 1920.

On national issues Mr. Trandum votes the democratic ticket, but in local affairs gives his support to the man he deems best suited for the office in question. He belongs to Sandstone Lodge No. 84, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Baker, of which he is now secretary. He is also a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias, and has sat in the Grand Lodge of Montana of that order. Having lived at Baker through the most important years of its existence, Mr. Trandum is naturally interested in its further progress and can be counted upon to support all measures promulgated with that idea in view. Although still a young man, his energy and foresight have brought him a material prosperity many do not acquire in an entire lifetime, and he is rightly numbered among the alert young men of his times who are regarded as so typical of the true spirit of the West.

William J. R. Marston, a ranchman on Powder River in the Powderville community, came into this locality and to Montana in 1898. He was a contribution from England to the United States that same year, and was then a young man aged twenty, having come out at the instigation of W. G. Payne, an uncle, and one of the early English settlers of Custer County. He had been around stock as a boy and fancied the stock industry, in which some of his relatives were engaged, and accordingly came to America with his mind determined as what course he should pursue.

Mr. Marston was born in April, 1878, and went to boarding school in Lincolnshire, England, until twelve years of age, then spending four years in a private school and finally going to a high school at Wiggeston, Leicester, where he studied in the direction of architecture, in the belief that that vocation would be his life work. He next served his apprenticeship at the building trade for 4½ years, but gave up all this to engage in ranching and farming in the United States. He sailed from Liverpool to New York on the steamship Servia on the Cunard Line, bearing chiefly German and Swedish passengers, but on his subsequent return to England took passage on the Lusitania the same year she was launched, and the sinking of which by a German submarine so fired American patriotism and hastened this country's entrance into the great world war some years later. This ship, on Mr. Marston's journey, made a record trip over, being but five days and five hours from dock to dock. Upon his return to New York Mr. Marston went up through Canada from New York City on his journey west, which trip was delayed by the blowing up of the engine, one of the unfortunate trains sometimes found equipped with bad engines, for this one blew up and a freight engine had to be substituted. Coming on west, he crossed into the United States before reaching St. Paul and from there home on the Northern Pacific. Aboard his train a man was either murdered or committed suicide, as he was found in the lavatory with the arteries of both wrists severed and he was dead before discovered. Prior to this two young fellows had been seen drinking with this old German, but both had left the train before the discovery of the tragedy.

Mr. Marston brought some capital with him on his maiden trip, and the first summer that he was on his uncle's ranch worked for his board and clothes for experience. He then bought a third interest in his uncle's ranch and added twenty head of cows to the stock. In June following they borrowed money, pledging all their cattle, and purchased twenty-seven head more, and to tide himself over young Marston helped to put up hay, broke wild horses and did other ranch jobs for a living and to pay expenses. After five years he sold his interest in the ranch stock to his uncle and entered a homestead where his home now is, and established the beginning of his present ranch. That year was a dry one and no hay was cut and, as he had 175 head of cattle, in the winter he borrowed the money and bought out the horses and feed of a small ranchman on the head of Poker Jim Creek, giving $1,000 for it. For a number of years following all went well with him and he prospered by additions to his herd, developed a small ranch, and when he sold his cattle in 1918 and leased his ranch he turned over 276 head at $85 "around," retained his brand "Four Swinging X (4x)." He was in the horse business, too, and sold much of his horseflesh for many years to the United States Government for artillery use. His twenty-one years' experience in Montana has convinced Mr. Marston that farming alone, when carried on so far from market as he is, would prove an uphill and unprofitable business, but with carrying stock along with it to feed the product of the farm this region will always give a good account of itself. His own experience has proven this to him to his satisfaction. Coming as he did with a modest capital, as above noted, in a score of years his independence financially has been achieved.

Mr. Marston first entered a desert tract of land, later bought an isolated tract, a railroad section, and then took an additional homestead, making with his wife's entries and additional property a ranch of 2,080 acres, all deeded land. Mr. Marston's first home upon his ranch was a one-room house of logs with a lean-to, and to this in the course of years have been added rooms until his three-room ranch house resembles the proverbial ranch home of this region. His barns and other improvements of recent years are of logs as well. Recently he began farming, see that a ranchman is compelled to raise something for his stock for winter. In his experience rye has seemed to be an almost "sure crop," and in 1918 his 210 acres of various kinds of grain and millet made an extraordinarily splendid yield, an indication of the fertility of the soil, in a dry year. Fourteen and one-half tons of rye hay were cut from 4½ acres of land, a yield almost unprecedented. He has threshed forty-five bushels to the acre of macaroni wheat, a yield of fifty bushels of oats per acre—his best crop, and the Blue Victor and Rose potatoes under his cultivation have grown to Mammoth proportions, a sample of one potato weighing three pounds.

Until April, 1919, Mr. Marston was a resident of Custer County, but with the creation of Powder River County his ranch fell into the new county and he was commissioned the first constable of his part of the county. He became a citizen of the United States by naturalization, cast his first presidential vote for Colonel Roosevelt, supported Mr. Wilson both times, and is rather independent in politics otherwise.

Mr. Marston is a native of Leicestershire, England, and a son of John R. Marston, a native of that shire, and the brief tenure of whose life was passed as a hotel man. He died in 1885, at the age of twenty-nine years. His wife was Mary Flavell, who is now the wife of James Drake a ranchman below Powderville, Montana. The Marston children were: William J. R., of this notice; Mrs. Madge Fanshaw, wife of Bert Fanshaw, and who died in 1918 in Leicestershire; Percy, a ranchman on Powder River below Powderville; and Walter Douglas, of Anchorage, Alaska. William J. R. Marston was married at Miles City, Montana, November 21, 1916, to Miss Alma E. Bergum, who was born and reared in Dane County, Wisconsin, a daughter of Eric Bergum, a native of Norway and a farmer by vocation. Mrs. Marston was educated at DeForest, Wisconsin, and after her graduation from the high school there was a merchant's clerk at Miles City until her marriage to Mr. Marston. She is one of six children of her parents, including: Nelson, with the Petroleum Oil Company of Haker, Montana; Bessie, the wife of W. H. Hogan, of Powder River; and Miss Jose, of Baker, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Marston have one son, William Eric, born December 17, 1917, who already has given evidence of following in his father's footsteps as a ranchman.

Charles E. Clark. After many years of strenuous endeavor as a ranchman and a promoter of internal development of this region, Charles E. Clark, of Baker, is now enjoying some of the fruits of his labors, although he has not lost any of his interest in his various enterprises. Mr. Clark was born in Tioga County, Pennsylvania, on September 17, 1862, a son of George A. and Rachel (Blanchard) Clark. The latter, a native of Pennsylvania, died in 1870, leaving four children, namely: Herbert, who lives at Baltimore, Maryland; Charles E., whose name heads this review; Susie, who is the widow of Frank Thayer, lives at Kansas City, Missouri; and Fred, who is a stockman on Boxelder Creek, Carter County, Montana. George A. Clark was born in either New York or Pennsylvania, and became a boatman on the Erie Canal, his father owning and operating quite a number of canal boats, but the building of railroads through this region caused George A. Clark to leave the canal and go west to Iowa, where he took up land in Clay County, and proved up his homestead. He has continued to live in Clay County, and is now a venerable gentleman of eighty-four years.

Charles E. Clark was fifteen years old when his father moved to Iowa, and soon thereafter he ran away from home. His schooling was limited to what he obtained as a youth, but he has added to his knowledge by close observation and is a well informed man in every respect.

Although but a lad in years when he left home, Charles E. Clark was strong and willing to work, and when his money gave out and he found himself stranded and winter coming on he did not relinquish his determination to be independent, but went to work hunting and trapping and not only lived well, but saved some $400. He then went on further west to Powder River County, Montana, where he was employed by the Iowa-Montana Live Stock Company, whose headquarters were at Powderville, and rode the range and experienced the hardships of a cowpuncher's life for three years. Mr. Clark then went to the ranch owned by Governor Carey in the vicinity of Cheyenne County, Wyoming, and spent a year. He was also employed by the civil engineering force at Sioux City, Iowa, and was on the city engineering force of that place during the period the first bridge was built over the Missouri River at that point. In 1891 he left Sioux City and returned to Montana.

In the latter year he joined the 101 ranch, now owned by Elijah Mulkey, but then the property of the Standard Cattle Company, and was a cowpuncher and shipper of their beeves. After being with this ranch one season he changed employers, becoming a rancher for C. D. Newberry, whose ranch was about twenty miles west of Ekalaka, remaining with him during three successive summer seasons, during the winters building up a ranch of his own near Chalk Buttes. Out of his wages he had saved enough to buy some stock and his next thought was to provide himself with a place to run his cattle. Eventually he engaged in ranching on his own account, running his cattle under the brand "KLN" around the Buttes for three years, then changing his location to Pennell Creek, now in Fallon County, and there he bought railroad land, built up a permanent ranch, and grazed cattle, horses and sheep for a number of years. As a stockman of this region Mr. Clark made himself widely known because of the extent of his sheep operations. As many as five bands of them roamed the prairies under his brand, and a large herd of cattle and hundreds of horses also yielded him large profits during his highwater mark. Finally he went out of the sheep industry, decreased his cattle holdings of the Hereford strain, and dropped his horse stock down to a few head at the present time. He developed a ranch of six sections and improved his property with a modern ranch residence, all being located seven miles northeast of Plevna, Montana, where Mr. Clark continued to live until in October, 1919, when he moved to Baker.

However, his activities were not confined by any manner of means to his stock ranch. He was one of the original stockholders of the First National Bank of Wibaux and has since continued to be one of its directors. His next venture in banking was as an original stockholder of the Fallon County Bank at Baker, and he is a director of it as well, and also of the Wibaux Cattle Loan Company, which he in conjunction with several other stockmen organized several years ago.

Outside of his business connections Mr. Clark has not cared to participate very actively in the history of this region, aside from taking a good citizen's interest in seeing that his vote was cast for capable men for office. He cast his first presidential vote for Benjamin Harrison in 1892, and for Major McKinley in 1896. Mr. Bryan has never appealed to him, but he was an ardent supporter of Colonel Roosevelt in everything our "Greatest American" ever advocated. Needless to say, he is a republican, and had no sympathy with the slogan "he kept us out of war."

Mr. Clark was made a Mason at Wibaux, Montana, and belongs to Wibaux Lodge No. 81, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. He took the higher degrees of the chapter and commandery and other work at Miles City, and was made a member of the Mystic Shrine at Helena, Montana, on December 5, 1919.

On September 17, 1885, Mr. Clark was married at Sibley, Iowa, to Olive M. Spencer, a daughter of David and Annie (Bivens) Spencer. Mrs. Spencer was born and reared at Baltimore, Maryland, and Mr. Spencer was a native of New York. While living at Sibley Mr. Spencer was engaged in merchandising, but is now living at Sioux City, Iowa. Mrs. Clark was the second child in a family of five born to her parents. She died at Chalk Buttes in 1897, having borne her husband the following children: Cecile, who married Thomas Breen, a ranchman of Fallon County, and is the mother of Nellie, Aleen, "Iky" and Jack; Dulcie, who married Eldon Elliott, of Custer County, has three children; Marie, who is the wife of a Mr. Ferris, of Baker, has two children; and Lula, who is Mrs. J. E. Foster, of Spokane, Washington.

Leading a very busy life, Mr. Clark has not thought of rest until recent years, and it is but a few months since he relaxed his efforts and decided to take life more easily. In former years about the only recreation he had was the few weeks he spent at different times in the western mountains, where he hunted big game. Since June, 1880, he has been interested in Montana, that marking his first entry into the state, and during the more than forty years which have since elapsed he has seen so many changes take place that the whole aspect of this region has changed. Looking back over these years he realizes what a wonderful development has come to his beloved state, and is proud of the part he has been permitted to take in the work, and grateful for the chance which brought him here, for he realizes that his abilities were singularly fitted for the life work he took up, and that in it he achieved a prosperity that might not have been his had he turned them into another channel. All over this region Mr. Clark is known as one of the pioneer cattlemen, and is held in the highest esteem by all his fellow citizens.

CAPT. WADE GOBLE. There is no member of the Montana bar who is held in higher esteem than Capt. Wade Goble of Baker, who has been connected with the jurisprudence of this region since 1915, and has lived in the state since 1911. He was born in Madison County, Nebraska, on July 15, 1889. His boyhood was spent in the vicinity of Norfolk, that state, and he was graduated from the University of Nebraska in 1911, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts.

Being thus prepared by a liberal education to take part in the work of his generation, Mr. Goble decided to commence his career as a homesteader, and consequently came into Montana and entered a half section seven miles north of Baker, on which he erected a regular house instead of the usual "claim shack" of the settler, broke a portion of his land, fenced his claim and lived on it until 1914, making it into a valuable property. He is not inclined to think it suitable for raising crops, although the three successive experiments he made were productive of excellent results, but as the outlay was heavy to secure these he believes the costs would practically wipe out the profit.

Leaving his farm in 1914, Captain Goble came to Baker and prepared himself for the practice of law in his father's law office, and was admitted to the bar before the Supreme Court of Montana at Helena, Montana, on June 30, 1915, although he tried his first cases in a justice court prior to that date. Following his admission to the bar Captain Goble was taken into partnership with his father, the firm being Goble & Goble.

Captain Goble became identified with the Montana National Guard in 1913, when he joined Company E at Miles City on April 1st of that year, and rose to the rank of first lieutenant. On May 3, 1915, he organized Company I at Baker, and was elected its captain. This company was mobilized for service on the Mexican border on June 19, 1916, and was the first company in the state to be mustered into the Federal service. It continued on the border from July 7th until October 9th, and was mustered out of the United States service on November 3d of that year, resuming its status as part of the National Guard.

When the United States entered the World conflict Company I was ordered mobilized on March 26, 1917, at Fort William Henry Harrison, Montana, and during that summer did duty as bridge and tunnel guards in the state. Subsequently it was sent to Charlotte, North Carolina, at the rendezvous of the Forty-first Division, and embarked for France at Hoboken, New Jersey, on December 14, 1917, on the United States steamer Leviathan. The command reached England on December 23d, and after a short stop in England went on to France, reaching that country on December 31st. From LeHavre the command was sent to various places, and about March 12, 1918, the Forty-first was designated as a replacement organization, and Company I, with other units of the same division, was broken up to provide men for the combat divisions.

Captain Goble was sent to the Twenty-third Infantry and was assigned to the command of Company F of that regiment, which was a part of the Second Division of the regular army. After some time spent in the trenches, Captain Goble's first engagement was at Saint Mihiel, where he was in the assault wave for twelve kilometers, between six and seven miles. The prisoners taken by this regiment were of the Four Hundred and Fifty-ninth German Landwehr. Company F took 363 prisoners out of the 3,000 captured. The regiment started its assault at 5:30 A. M. and reached its objective about 11:30 A. M., and was relieved by the Marine Brigade.

The next engagement in which Company F participated was in the Champaigne District with the French Fourth Army, and it was assigned to take an especially difficult ridge, one which the French had themselves attacked three times and been repulsed. The men were facing the third line of the famous "Hindenburg Line," the first two having been taken. The third line offered difficulties which seemed almost unsurmountable, but the regiment attacked the ridge, Blanc Mont, at about 5:30 A. M., and reached its objective, the crest of the ridge, about noon. In this assault Captain Goble was in command of the Second Battalion of the Twenty-third Division, and the casualties were not heavy. At 5:30 P. M. another attack was ordered against the same troops, and they were under a more intense fire and gained a mile and a half before darkness ended the advance, although they were still under fire. The next morning they made an attempt to advance, but were driven back and the Germans counter-attacked that night. The enemy lost about 300 men and 60 machine guns and were unsuccessful. The following afternoon another advance, partially successful, was made by Captain Goble's brigade, and during the struggle he was hit with the fragment of a shell and rendered incapable of further service. The shell exploded almost at his feet and fragments of it went into his face, under his arms and over other parts of his body, but the one which rendered him unfit was the head wound. He was removed to base American Red Cross Hospital No. 1, Paris, France. After spending three weeks in the hospital Captain Goble rejoined his regiment and took part in the last battles of the campaign in the Argonne sector. He was in that fighting from November 1st to November 11th, when the armistice was signed, following which he accompanied the Army of Occupation, either in command of his company or the battalion, to the Rhine at Valendar, about two miles from Coblenz. Captain Goble remained there until the middle of February, 1919, when he was ordered to the judge advocate's department at Paris, and remained on duty there until relieved on July 10th, when he embarked aboard the steamship Northern Pacific at Brest, France, and reached New York City on August 12th. He was discharged at Camp Lewis, Washington, on August 25th, following, and reached Baker on September 12th, at which time he resumed his law practice.

Captain Goble is unmarried. He cast his first presidential vote for William Howard Taft in 1908, and has continued to support the republican principles and candidates ever since. A firm believer in the necessity of making the organization of veterans of the great war a strong one, he was one of the original applicants for the Legion charter for Baker and belongs to Fallon Post No. 35. It will be a long time before the deeds of the American Expeditionary Forces fade in the memory of the American people, or the world. No matter what expediency may dictate with reference to temporary statements on the part of foreign powers, it is an accepted fact that from the entry of the American troops into the front line the tide turned, and the end was inevitable. All are forced to admit that this end came much sooner than the most sanguine hoped for because of the unexampled bravery and heroism of these young men in the American uniform, and future historians will pay them the tribute they have won.

Captain Goble is a son of Webster A. Goble, who has been identified with Baker since 1914, when he entered upon a general law practice, but prior to that he had entered and proved up a claim in Fallon County. Webster A. Goble was born in Henry County, Illinois, on January 28, 1861, a son of Jesse Goble, also born in Illinois and a farmer by occupation. The family originated in Wales, representatives of it coming to this country many years ago and locating in Pennsylvania, from whence a migration was made to Illinois. Jesse Goble married Ervilla Dilts, and they had two sons and one daughter, of whom Webster A. Goble is the second in order of birth.

When a child Webster A. Goble was taken by his parents to Boone County, Iowa, where he was reared amid rural surroundings and taught the dignity of honorable industry and legitimate saving. Leaving home after he attained his majority, he went to Nebraska, and deciding upon a legal career, read law at Beatrice, that state, with a Mr. Brady, and was admitted to the bar, following which he established himself in a general practice at Norfolk, Boyd County, Nebraska. After his son, Captain Goble, came to Montana and took up a claim here, Mr. Goble decided to follow his example, and then, finding conditions favorable, he later entered into practice at Baker, where he still remains. Since the return of Captain Goble from the army the father and son have been engaged in some very important litigation and are recognized as being one of the strongest associations in this part of the state. While still in Iowa Mr. Goble was united in marriage with Miss Fannie Utter, a daughter of John and Anna (Cousins) Utter. They have two sons, namely: Captain Wade and Ward, the latter being engaged in the practice of law at Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

William H. Young, M. D. The substantial results of years of effort intelligently directed by a trained mind are gratifying to one who has devoted his life to carrying out the highest ideals of a certain calling. No man can be greater than his appreciation of the debt he owes the world, and the professional men who rise to the highest positions in the confidence and esteem of their associates and fellow citizens are those who endeavor to aid humanity without undue thought to material prosperity. One of the distinguished medical men of Fallon County, whose career shows marked capability and whose companions in his profession admire and revere him, is Dr. William H. Young of Baker.

Doctor Young was born at Eldora, Iowa, on January 19, 1878, a son of Samuel Young, a retired farmer now residing at Los Angeles, California. Samuel Young was born in County Cork, Ireland, and came to the United States in young manhood. After doing common labor for a time he took up land in Iowa, and also at a later date in North Dakota, completing his active career as a farmer in the last named state. He was married to Ann Hutton, born at Edinburgh, Scotland, who died at Salt Lake City, Utah, in 1900. Their children were as follows: George W., who lives at Park River, North Dakota; James T., who lives at Hydro, Oklahoma; Samuel, who lives at Los Angeles, California; Annie E., who is the wife of R. O. Schroeder, of Los Angeles, California; and Dr. William H., who was the youngest born.

Doctor Young had only the usual country school advantages prior to his entrance at the State University of Grand Forks, North Dakota, but there he took a four years' course and completed his literary training in the university at Salt Lake City, where the family lived for a year. By this time he had decided upon the medical profession, and, going back East, entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Chicago, Illinois, where he took the regulation four years' course and was graduated therefrom in June, 1904, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. At the same time he was attending college Doctor Young acted as intern of St. Mary's Hospital of Chicago. Following his graduation he located at Munich, North Dakota, where he was engaged in a general practice until October, 1909, when he came to the new Town of Baker, and at that time was the only physician, not only of Baker, but the country lying between Terry and the Dakota line. The prospect was not at all alluring when Doctor Young came to Baker, but he did not allow himself to become discouraged. As a beginning he homesteaded in the vicinity of Baker, engaged in what practice there was, and dealt in drugs and druggists' supplies, his business gradually developing into a regular drug store, which was first conducted as the Baker Drug Company, but is now the Hight Drug Company. With the development of Baker Doctor Young's practice and prestige grew, and his skill and experience has received recognition by his appointment to the offices of county physician and health officer of Baker, which he held for five years.

On February 2, 1907, Doctor Young was married at Munich, North Dakota, to Miss Catherine Friesen, born at Manitoba, Canada, on July 3, 1889. There were two children in the Friesen family, Mrs. Young's elder sister being Mrs. Cornelius Epp, of Munich, North Dakota. Doctor and Mrs. Young have the following children: Gloria, Howard, Byron and Creighton. The Young residence on First Street, West, in the Fourth Addition to Baker, is a modern one of Doctor Young's own planning and construction.

Doctor Young is essentially a product of the West, for he was only three months old when his parents moved from Iowa to what was then Dakota, but is now North Dakota, making the trip in approved pioneer fashion, in a covered wagon. The hardships of the wearisome journey were multiplied by his being stricken with scarlet fever, but fortunately he recovered and the little party located in Pembina County at a time when that part of the country was a wilderness, and not only were there no railroads, but the prospect of their being built was but a vague hope. On this pioneer farm, away from city influences, the embryo physician grew up, spending his spare moments until he was eighteen helping his father in the routine work of conducting the homestead. In those early days Doctor Young learned many lessons not taught in any university, and became industrious, thrifty and compassionate, and imbued with a love of home and family. He lays much of his subsequent success to the homely virtues instilled in his youthful mind by his excellent parents, who sought to bring up their children to be useful and desirable citizens of the land their forebears had adopted.

Victor S. Himsl. The "Father of Plevna" is a title which has been bestowed upon Victor S. Himsl as the result of the interest he has manifested in its upbuilding and growth and the leading part he has taken in its industrial activities. He located in the embryo city in 1913. He was a banker at the time, and sought this locality as a proper point in which to resume the business. The little town contained at that time perhaps twenty-five people and three houses, and his initial act was the organization of the First State Bank.

This institution opened for business on the 26th of June, 1914, but from the second day after his arrival Mr. Himsl had been making loans, and he consequently had about $300,000 worth of loans made before the bank opened its doors to the public. The institution was capitalized at $20,000, and it has today a surplus of half the capital stock and it paid 10 per cent dividends the first year, the second year 20 per cent, the following year and each succeeding year 50 per cent, and is therefore regarded as one of the most prosperous banking houses of the state. Its officers contain the following well known names: P. A. Hilbert, of Melrose, Minnesota, president; A. C. Mikalso, of Plevna, vice president; Victor S. Himsl, cashier, and in addition to these officers its board of directors also include Miss A. M. Engels. Mr. Himsl is also a stockholder in the First National Bank of Plevna, the Ekalaka State Bank, and is a stockholder in the West Building and Loan Association of Salt Lake, Utah, in the Midland Trust and Savings Bank of St. Paul and in the Bankers Loan and Mortgage Company of Billings, Montana.

Mr. Himsl was born in far off Austria, at Figen, July 27, 1877, and was brought to the United States by his parents when eight years of age. His father purchased land in Stearns County, Minnesota, in the Township of Avon, and there the Himsl children grew to years of maturity. The head of the family was Alois Himsl, who passed his last years as a farmer, but in his native land was a brewer. The grandfather of Victor S. was Simon Himsl, who served thirty-one years of his life in the army of Austria, participating during that time in the wars of 1848, 1865-6, and died a soldier. His son Alois also performed his military duty to his country, but not as a soldier. He was the only one of his parents' nine children to come to the United States, and he came to this country a broken man financially, and to begin life anew he purchased a small forty-acre farm. In order to provide for his family he worked at the mason's trade while his wife and children grubbed and cleared the little homestead. He in time acquired title to 160 acres, and he then gave up the work of his trade to give his entire time to the farm. During his life there was never a dollar borrowed on the land or on the stock, and at his death Alois Himsl was in comfortable circumstances. He was called to his final reward in 1912, after an industrious and fruitful life of seventy-two years. His family comprised nine sons and six daughters, and those who grew to mature years are: Joseph B., judge of the Probate Court of Stearns County, Minnesota; Louise, who became the wife of Gabriel Garnitchnig, an electrical engineer of St. Joseph, Minnesota; Victor S., the Montana banker; Mary, wife of Michael Zimmer, a farmer in the vicinity of St. Joseph, Minnesota; Hattie, who married John P. Goetten, of Minneapolis, Minnesota; Agnes, the wife of John Zimmer, of St. Joseph; Frank, the owner of the old family homestead in Stearns County; Fred, of Bethune, Saskatchewan, Canada; and Rudolph, a farmer at Bethune.

Victor S. Himsl earned his first money as a school teacher, and the capital thus acquired enabled him to enter St. John's University at Collegeville, Minnesota, where he graduated in the commercial course. From 1899 until 1900 he was bookkeeper for the Preiss & Wimmer Brewing Company in St. Cloud, Minnesota. In 1901 he became cashier of the Bank of Royalton in Morrison County, Minnesota, continuing his residence at that place for five years. In 1905 he had organized the Avon State Bank, near Holdingfort, with which he is still affiliated. In 1907 he organized the Farmers State Bank of Holdingfort. Mr. Himsl went from Holdingfort to Bethune, Saskatchewan, Canada, where during three years he bought and sold lands as a broker and also made loans, and from Bethune he made his way to Montana. Here his name has become prominently linked with the industrial life of the town which he aided so materially in founding, and he has also contributed toward the farming development of this community.

Mr. Himsl erected his home in Plevna, also the building in which he is engaged in banking, has built several other residences in the town and is the owner of other property. But he has kept away from official service, leaving himself free to sympathize and assist with every worthy cause inaugurated for the benefit of the community. He has become one of the large land owners of the region, and has developed and made productive a large estate. He is also the owner of land in Saskatchewan, which is improved and yielding profitable returns.

Although reared under democratic influences at home Mr. Himsl espoused the cause of the republican party, and among his own people is called the "political black sheep of the family." He cast his first presidential vote for Major McKinley, and has never since missed a vote or a good roads meeting, and has never attached his signature to a real estate mortgage. He was reared a Catholic and still maintains that religious faith. He is a member of the Catholic Order of Foresters, a mutual insurance organization, and of the St. Joseph Society, another insurance society. He is a firm believer in life insurance and carries a large policy in an old-line company. During twenty years of a strenuous banking career he never indulged in a vacation, but during more recent years has occasionally devoted a week or so to hunting the big game in the mountains of Montana, and has become quite a success with the gun.

In Stearns County, Minnesota, June 18, 1907, Mr. Himsl was married to Miss Clara C. Engels, who was born in Stearns County, Minnesota, November 1, 1886, a daughter of Mrs. Mary C. Engels, who was born in Dubuque, Iowa. Mrs. Engels was before marriage Miss Mary Heisler, and when she was ten years of age she removed with her parents to Minnesota, in which state her children were all born. There were seven children in the Engels family, namely: Mrs. Kate Yeough, of Opheim, Montana; Mrs. Bertha Weber, of Cold Springs, Montana; Frances, the wife of John Redfield, of Opheim; Mrs. Himsl; Miss Anna, of Plevna, a director and the assistant cashier of the Plevna State Bank; Andrew, of St. Cloud, Minnesota; and Matthew, who is foreman in a shingle mill at Edmund, Washington.

The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Himsl: Alois, Louisie, Matthias and Theocula, twins, Avitus and Rita. The second child, Louisie, died in childhood at Regina, Canada.

KARL HEPPERLE. A stranger traveling over Montana is certain to be impressed with the agricultural abundance of this part of the country, and in their minds the thought may arise that those owning these large ranches have been favored by fortune. As a matter of fact, however, few of those who came to this region during its formative period attained to any measure of success without passing through some very hard times and undergoing hardships the strange traveler who experiences a feeling of envy over the present prosperity would be incapable of sustaining. The progress in this state has been very rapid during the past few years, a great impetus to development being afforded in Eastern Montana by the building of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, which resulted in the establishment of various stations along its route at which the ranchers could market their produce. Before that time, however, conditions were hard, money scarce and markets difficult of access. One of the present prosperous men of Fallon County, Karl Hepperle, who is now conducting a grain elevator at Plevna, and owns a valuable ranch in the vicinity, appreciates all that can be said with reference to the hardships of pioneers here, for he has met and conquered them, and they hold no secrets from him.

Karl Hepperle was born in South Russia on August 28, 1888, a son of Adam and Elizabeth (Klos) Hepperle, natives of Russia, well-to-do farmers still living in that country. Of their seven sons and two daughters Karl is the only one who came to the United States.

He went from Libau, Russia, to Hull, England, thence to Liverpool, England, where he took passage on the ship Cymric bound for Boston, Massachusetts, United States of America, and after landing at that port he made his way to Eureka, South Dakota, without accident. Reaching that point, he hired out for farm work, as he needed work and they needed help, but later he secured employment in the grain elevator at Artas, South Dakota, and while working there he formed the determination to some day own an elevator of his own.

When he landed in this country he knew nothing of the language, but being young and possessing a plastic mind he soon gathered enough of a vocabulary to enable him to get along, but he was ambitious and this smattering did not content him, so he bought a dictionary of German and English and kept it with him so that whenever he came up with a word he did not understand he could look it up and fix it in his mind, and in this way has acquired an excellent working knowledge of English, his perseverance in this particular being typical of the man.

In 1909 Mr. Hepperle came to Montana and worked for a time in the warehouse of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, and then squatted on a claim north of Plevna and visited his little 8 by 12 foot shack often enough to comply with the legal requirements. During the time he sold his improvements to his cousin and again filed seven miles south of Plevna on 250 acres, which he proved up. He then returned to Arthur, South Dakota, for a few months. He was married there and then returned to his homestead. Having come from a grain growing country, he believed that grain would do well in Montana, and he consequently engaged in growing it. He raised wheat, flax, barley, oats and corn, and harvested a crop of some grain or other every year he has been on the farm. In other words, he "made good" as a farmer, as he has as a business man, and stands sponsor for Montana as a fine locality for an industrious, thrifty farmer. Before he left this farm he purchased a section of railroad land, and this made him a ranch farm that is now fenced, with barns and sheds for stock.

While on the farm Mr. Hepperle practiced breaking out additional acreage each year, and thus increasing the size of his various crops. Wheat was the chief one, and each year showed a progressively larger yield of grain and flax. While his first harvest yielded him less than 200 bushels of wheat and a small yield of other grains and flax, the next year proved a better one, and the third year his wheat yield was 1,800 bushels, while his other grain and flax threshed out corresponding yields. This success enabled him to add by succeeding purchases, one and one-half sections, including his homestead, and marks conspicuously his achievements as a Montana farmer. He was also engaged in stockgrowing, and when he made a sale of his personal property preparatory to moving to Plevna the sale amounted to $4,500, giving him additional capital with which to conduct his elevator business which he had just established. Mr. Hepperle erected an elevator at Plevna in 1915 and opened it about September 1st of that year, it having a capacity of 25,000 bushels. This elevator, with its large storage facilities, has played an important part in the handling of the grain shipped from Plevna. When he located at Plevna Mr. Hepperle moved into his own house, which with his elevator constitutes his holdings at this point.

On August 29, 1914, Mr. Hepperle took out his final naturalization papers at Ekalaka, Montana, and began voting the republican ticket, giving his first presidential vote to Charles E. Hughes, and has seen no reason to change his political faith since that time. At present he is serving Plevna as city treasurer.

On February 28, 1910, Mr. Hepperle was married at Eureka, South Dakota, to Miss Elizabeth Opp, a daughter of Daniel Opp, an early settler of North Dakota, who came there from his native country of Russia and engaged in farming. Daniel Opp married Elizabeth Schauffels, and they had three children, of whom Mrs. Hepperle is the eldest born. Mr. and Mrs. Hepperle have three children, namely: Martha, Alma and Arthur.

Mr. Hepperle is a self-made man in the best sense of the word, and his success in life may be attributed to the fact that he has always known exactly what he wanted and then gone right ahead to secure it. No obstacle has ever been of sufficient size to deter him; he has forged ahead, overcoming the difficulties of lack of knowledge of the language and customs of a new country, and while he was making good he was also making friends and winning the confidence and respect of his neighbors. Such men as he develop into good citizens and valuable adjuncts to any community in which they may see fit to locate. He is still in the very prime of active young manhood, and will doubtless branch out into other lines of endeavor, for he is not the kind to be content with what he has already accomplished. Mr. Hepperle does not agree with some of his fellow citizens of Fallon County who seem to think that this part of the state is not suited to grain growing. He holds that any farmer who is willing to make the effort he did while conducting his farm can produce just as good results, and he is constantly urging the landowners of this region to develop the natural resources of the land. The manner in which he is discharging the duties of the office of city treasurer shows that he is fitted for public honors, and doubtless others of still more moment will be offered to him in the future. There are always plenty of possibilities before a young man as energetic and industrious as Mr. Hepperle.

THOMAS F. SCHOFIELD. One of the Board of County Commissioners of Fallon County, Thomas F. Schofield is likewise interested in farming in Carter County. He became identified first with Montana as a railroad man, in the capacity of civil engineer with the Chicago, St. Paul & Milwaukee Railroad, and at present is one of the leading citizens of Baker.

Mr. Schofield was born in Greene County, Ohio, November 11, 1857, a son of William H. Schofield, who came West in 1860 and became an implement dealer at Wyandotte, Kansas. After two years he moved to Baldwin, Kansas, where he became financial agent for Baker University, and after serving eight years in this capacity went to Williamsburg, Kansas, a community which was named in his honor. There he engaged in farming and also dealt in Kansas Pacific Railroad lands, developed the Williamsburg coal fields and also promoted the branch of the Santa Fé Railroad running from Ottawa to Burlington, Kansas. He was the road's first president and sold it to the Santa Fé. Among his promotions while at Williamsburg was the Silkville factory and farm where silk worm culture was promoted and where buildings were erected for the manufacture of the product. In this he enlisted the interest of the Frenchman, Ernest Valentine deBoissier. He was engaged in numerous railroad enterprises in different parts of the United States and was a factor at Williamsburg until 1877, when he established an office at New York and dealt in railroad enterprises during the remainder of his life, his death occurring at Brooklyn in August, 1889, at the age of sixty-six years. Mr. Schofield was born at Yorkshire, England, and had limited educational advantages, but early developed a strong bent for business and pursued a successful career throughout life in the larger enterprises of transportation. He married in his native county Mercy Hall, who died at Baldwin, Kansas, at about the close of the Civil war. Their children were: Mrs. Henry T. Wright, of Pueblo, Colorado; William H., Jr., of Brooklyn, New York; Thomas F., of this review; and Miss Mary L., of Baker, Montana. Mrs. Henry T. Wright, of these children, is an artist, her chief work being in ceramic art. In her early life she did splendid work in oils and crayon and widely attracted the attention of art critics, but of recent years her attention has been centered upon ceramic art and among her masterpieces is her painting on white tiling for the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company at Pueblo, a series of portraits which now adorn eight panel niches in front of the company's model hospital. The portraits are of heroic size and are done in monochrome and faithfully depict the features of world-famous physicians and nurses. Miss Mary Schofield has given her life to activity in the field of music, being an accomplished pianist herself and a teacher of the piano, mandolin and guitar. While on her homestead in Carter County she gave some instructions, and her home was a center of musical endeavor for the community. Her musical education was obtained at Chicago, Brooklyn, New York and at Leeds, England, where she spent three years abroad. William H. Schofield was a republican in his political beliefs but never took much interest in practical politics. He was a loyal American from head to foot, had no patience with "isms," which suggested doubtful patriotism, and was sent to the Legislature from Williamsburg.

Thomas F. Schofield received his education at Baker University and at Williamsburg, Kansas, and began his engineering career as a youth of eighteen years on the Kansas City, Lawrence & Southern Railroad. He began as a rodman and later worked successively for the Denver & Rio Grande, the Natchez, Red River & Texas, the Soo Line, the Minneapolis & St. Louis and the Northern Pacific, all before he entered the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul service. This road he joined in Iowa on the C. & C. B. division, revising alignment and reducing grades, and was then locating engineer on the Ottumwa cut-off. Soon after this company placed him on valuation work in Wisconsin, and from this position went to the Soo Line as locating engineer on the Thief River Falls & Western Line. Returning to the Milwaukee road, he was locating engineer on the Puget Sound extension of the system, and set the first stakes west of the Missouri River, at Mobridge, South Dakota. After the road's location was finished he was division engineer on construction of the first seventy-five miles of the line. His next work was on grade reduction between Mobridge and Aberdeen, following which he had charge of the location and construction of the Mott Line from McLaughlin to New England, 135 miles in the Dakotas. On the completion of that work he left the service of that company and took up land in what is now Carter County, Montana.

Becoming a permanent settler of Montana, Mr. Schofield located his homestead ten miles west of Ekalaka, erected his pioneer buildings and complied with the requirements of the Government with residence, working at his profession during absent periods from his claim, doing his work for the Milwaukee Company at different points. He made his residence upon his farm from 1910 to 1917 and while there was a grain and hog raiser. His best wheat crop yield was forty bushels to the acre and he had a harvest every year that he sowed grain. His corn crop was sufficient to fatten for market the hogs he raised and the small field of alfalfa gave a favorable account of itself.

For his pioneer home Mr. Schofield erected a "shack," 14x24 feet, a single room, and his shed and stable for his stock was of frame. His sister, Miss Mary L. Schofield, also homesteaded near her brother, and her improvements were of a more substantial and serviceable character than her brother's and her home became his own eventually. Mr. Schofield has passed his life unmarried, and he and his sister have made their home in common since the two became permanent settlers of Montana. He has passed through the various degrees, both ways, to high rank in Masonry, and is a member of Kaaba Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Davenport, Iowa. Both he and his sister are republicans in politics. While a resident of Carter County, Mr. Schofield was elected county commissioner for Fallon County before Carter County was cut off and served on the board with James Pepper and George Farwell. He was elected in 1916 and has served ever since. He was offered a commissionership for Carter County, the bill creating it having his name as one of the first board, but he declined this honor and retained his home in Fallon County, moving to Baker soon afterward. The Board of Commissioners now consists of Mr. Schofield, president, James Pepper and Ray Sutton.

Mortimer O. Tracy. In placing the name of Mortimer O. Tracy before the reader as one standing in the front ranks of the enterprising men of affairs and a leader of the bar of Carter County, whose influence has tended to the upbuilding of the community and the advancement of the affairs of the county, simple justice is done a biographical fact, recognized throughout the community by those at all familiar with his history and cognizant of the important part he has acted in the circles with which he has been identified. His career presents a notable example of those qualities of mind and character which are bound to win success, and because of his accomplishments and his high personal character and ability he enjoys to a notable degree the confidence and esteem of all who know him.

Mortimer O. Tracy is a Yankee by nativity, having been born in Addison County, Vermont, October 5, 1844, and is the son of John and Almeda (Lyon) Tracy. The father was also a native of Vermont and devoted his entire life to agricultural pursuits. Of his three children the subject of this review is the only one who grew to maturity. John Tracy was descended from the old Tracy family of Connecticut where settled the emigrant ancestor of the family from England. Many of his posterity have become prominent in public affairs during the subsequent years, among these being Secretary of the Navy Benjamin F. Tracy, of President Benjamin Harrison's cabinet, and who was chief counsel in the celebrated trial of Henry Ward Beecher.

Mortimer O. Tracy was reared on the paternal farmstead, but when nine years of age was bereft of his parents by death. He was given the advantage of splendid educational facilities, for after completing the public school course he was a student in Burlington College and, later, of the Vermont State University. The expenses of these years in college were defrayed by Mr. Tracy, who engaged in teaching school between college terms. Having determined to make the practice of law his life work, he gave serious study to law and was admitted to the bar at Burlington, Vermont, when just twenty-one years old, so that he entered upon his life work well equipped mentally. His first location after leaving home was in Boston, where he remained several years, and during his residence there he became identified with the publishing business in connection with the National Art Association. Leaving Boston, he located in Washington County, New York, where he continued the practice of law. Subsequently he went to Cheyenne, Wyoming, where he remained until 1877, when he went into the Black Hills country, entering upon the practice of law at Deadwood. His abilities were soon recognized and he served two years as state's attorney for Butte County. At the time of his election he was established at Minnesela, the old county seat, and later he was at Deadwood during the most historic period of the history of that place, when Hugh J. Campbell, known as the old "war horse" of Dakota Territory, was United States district attorney, and at which time more than fifty lawyers practiced at the bar there. Among these was Judge Corson, who became Chief Justice of South Dakota, and his partner, Thomas, who became United States District Judge of North Dakota; Congressman Martin was then a law clerk in VanCise & Wilson's office, and others of the members of that bar became men of some renown. Mr. Tracy was assistant to Judge Rice when the latter was first elected state's attorney at Deadwood, and among their successful work was the fighting of the bond cases, which they won for the county. Following his retirement from the office of state's attorney at Deadwood Mr. Tracy took up the work of investigating the coal fields of Montana for the Northwestern Railroad Company. He was a civil engineer as well as lawyer, and from the time he came here, in March, 1893, he did a large amount of surveying throughout this section of the state. He prospected all through the hill country and found some excellent lignite coal. The railroad company expected to build into this locality that year, and had it not been for the financial panic of that year they would have done so and made use of the data furnished by Mr. Tracy. After completing the railroad work Mr. Tracy was employed on Government work, establishing corners and running lines. While he followed surveying for many years, he was appointed United States commissioner, serving in that capacity until 1910, which means that a large number of filings and proofs of residence passed through his court, title being obtained thereby. For many years Mr. Tracy has been engaged in the practice of law at Ekalaka, and has enjoyed a large and important practice.

In July, 1873, Mr. Tracy was married in Boston, Massachusetts, to Eliza Smith, who was a native of Vermont, and to them have been born two children, namely: Emma, wife of W. S. Rice, a merchant in Boston; and Grace, the wife of Mr. Barron, whose father is called "King of the White Mountains," being at the head of the hotel business of the mountain region of Vermont. Mr. and Mrs. Barron have two children, Virginia and Grace.

Politically Mr. Tracy has been a life-long supporter of the republican party, his first vote having been cast in Vermont for U. S. Grant for president. He has frequently been a delegate to district and state conventions, and during his active years he was actively identified with every campaign. He helped to incorporate the town of Ekalaka and has served as an alderman ever since, also being the legal adviser of the board. For more than fifty years Mr. Tracy has been a member of the Masonic Order and he helped to organize the lodge at Ekalaka, of which he is the present secretary. He has been a builder of homes, and in many other tangible ways has contributed to the growth, upbuilding and development of his section of Carter County, so that he is eminently deserving of the high standing which he enjoys throughout this section of the state.

William Dominy. One of the landmarks of Custer County probably known to every resident of that county is the "Dominy Ranch," situated in the Pine Hills locality. The proprietor of this ranch is even better known than the ranch itself. He is a veteran cattle and horse man, went into the region west of the Missouri River soon after the close of the Civil war and was a freighter at a time when the railroad mileage in the country west of the Missouri hardly aggregated more than that credited to Montana alone today. For nearly a decade Mr. Dominy was in Colorado, and he first came to Montana in 1882.

The first event in his long and interesting career was his birth in Illinois May 9, 1859. His father, Nathaniel William Dominy, was a native of France, came to America when a boy, and in McHenry County, Illinois, married Hannah Wood, daughter of James Wood, a pioneer Illinois man who came from New York state. Nathaniel Dominy was a farmer and developed land taken up from the Government fifty miles west of Chicago in McHenry County. He died during the infancy of his only son. There were also five daughters in the family. These children in order of birth are named Helen, who married Frank Guernsey and they went to Nebraska as pioneers and settled near Fairbury; Kate, who married H. I. Udell and died in 1917 in Pasadena, California; Mary, who died in Illinois unmarried; William; Jennie and Jeanette, twins, the former unmarried and living at San Diego, California, while Jeanette is the wife of Ed Baldwin and lives in Colorado. The mother of these children spent most of her life in widowhood and died at the age of eighty-five at the old McHenry County home.

William Dominy had the spirit of adventure and a restless energy, and to that as well as the circumstances of the family he owes the fact that he received a scant education. At the age of fourteen he left his Illinois home in company with a Mr. Barnes, an old neighbor, and crossed the plains that year. They went across Missouri, Kansas and into Colorado and consumed six weeks on the way. They were part of a large train of emigrants. Indians were numerous, many of the tribes hostile, and the party every day saw some Red Men and came across several camps where wagon trains had been attacked, the individuals captured or murdered and the stock run away. Mr. Dominy's train had the good fortune of never being attacked, but there were many interesting incidents. As a boy he was a keen observer of all phases of western life, and vividly recalls even today the manner in which Indians hunted buffalo, surrounding a herd and getting them into confusion and shooting down the animals until all were slain.

The destination of the party in which Mr. Dominy traveled was Greeley, Colorado. He remained a year with Mr. Barnes and then hired out on a ranch as a hand. Next he became a teamster taking freight to and from Boulder and Denver. When the Leadville mines were opened he freighted into that district from Denver for a year. He left freighting to go into the stock business as a cowboy, and that was his regular occupation until 1882. For several years he was on the Baldwin ranch, just north of Denver and later was made overseer of the Baldwin ranch at Longmont, Colorado, where he stayed until he came to Montana.

Mr. Dominy owed his early interest in the Montana country to literature which was being distributed and some of which fell into his hands. Inspired by the prospects for trade he gathered up his horses, a hundred head, and alone drove them from Longmont, Colorado, into Custer County in the spring of 1882. He came through Cheyenne to Buffalo, Wyoming, and down Tongue River to Miles City. Miles City, then as now the metropolis of eastern Montana, contained a number of log shacks and perhaps 500 people. It was a "free for all" town without any organized government, every man being a law unto himself.

For a brief time Mr. Dominy ran his horses on the range on Pumpkin Creek. He then sold out but subsequently acquired another horse outfit. Continuously for over thirty-five years he has been in the stock business He moved to his present location in the fall of 1900 buying two sections of the railroad company, and on this, the nucleus of his ranch, built his first home in Montana. It is a house which still serves his purposes as a residence and as a road ranch, and is situated on the banks of the Cottonwood, a tributary of the Yellowstone. The Dominy ranch now comprises six sections of land. He still handles horses and cattle, his cattle brand being "B-2" on the left side, while the horse brand is "faucett" on the left hip. He has usually shipped his cattle to the Chicago markets, while his horse market has been at Miles City or to buyers in the immediate locality.

Mr. Dominy had not long been in Custer County before he became recognized for the typical virtues of the old time stock man, courageous, independent and resourceful. Along in the early '90s he was selected by the county treasurer to collect delinquent taxes on personal property of stock men who had neglected or refused for some years to fulfill their obligations to the local government. Much of this stock could not be located in the county, some of it as far away as the Crow Indian Reservation. The owners believed they could not be taxed by the county authorities. Mr. Dominy when the duty was delegated to him prepared himself as for a round-up, and with his bunch of cowboys invaded the region, selected the stock indicated by the brands as belonging to the delinquents, and drove them into the jurisdiction of the court and advertised them for sale. This brought on a suit which tested the validity of the county's authority. The county was victorious, and after that for several months each year Mr. Dominy had a similar duty entrusted him by the officers and in that way turned into the treasury many thousands of dollars in taxes. He has done other official service in the county, having been a deputy under Sheriff Jack Hawkins and Sheriff John Gibb, and was chief of police of Miles City when he determined to go out to his present home, at which time he resigned. Politically he is a republican. He is also affiliated with the Elks and Masonic Order.

At Miles City, October 17, 1889, he married Miss Lula Armbruster, a step-daughter of Charles Young. She was born at Omaha, Nebraska, April 22, 1873.

JOHN T. LOGAN, who is extensively engaged in ranching on Tongue River, has been a resident of the Birney locality since 1896. He is a native son of Illinois, and was reared from infancy in the vicinity of Atchison, Kansas, enjoying the advantages only of the rural public schools. His father, James Logan, brought the family from Illinois to Kansas in 1869 and settled upon the public domain in Atchison County, there spending the remaining years of his life. He was born in Indiana in 1835, and went to Illinois when a youth. During the Civil war he served with the rank of captain of an Illinois regiment in General Grant's army, and among other engagements in which he took part was the siege of Vicksburg. Although he served throughout the entire conflict of the war he escaped wounds or capture, and after the close of the struggle he took an active part in the Grand Army of the Republic. In his political affiliations he was a republican, and in Atchison County he served his home township as assessor.

Captain Logan was married in Illinois to Delilah Sawyer, a daughter of John Sawyer, and she passed away at the home of her son, John, in 1918, after a long and useful life of eighty-four years, having long survived her husband, who died in 1896. Their children numbered the following: Anna, who married Charles Plummer and resides in Los Angeles, California; Emeline, wife of Edward Zimmerman, of Hiawatha, Kansas; Frank, whose home is in Atchison, Kansas; John T., the Montana ranchman; Edwin, of Twin Falls, Idaho; and Mattie, who married Judson VanCleve is now a widow and resides in Los Angeles, California.

John T. Logan was born in Hancock County, Illinois, January 20, 1866, and was only a child of three years when the family home was established in the Sunflower state. From Atchison County he came to Montana in 1886, and his first settlement in this state was in Custer County and his first employment was as a cowboy with the Three Circle ranch on Tongue River. During a period of ten years he continued as a wage earner for that corporation. He was a young man just of age when he arrived in Montana, and having previously known the owners of the Three Circle ranch he went out to them and started on his career in the northwest.

Mr. Logan entered his homestead about the time he left the Three Circle ranch, taking possession of the place then which has ever since continued his home. His first residence was the usual log shack of one room, and he continued on there as a bachelor until his marriage some years later. He started his ranching industry with perhaps twenty-five head of cattle, and he has followed the plan of raising calves and parting with his steer cattle, his market being Omaha and Chicago. In the earlier days he drove to Miles City, but more recently has shipped from the Crow Reservation over the Burlington Railroad.

After several years spent in his primitive log shack Mr. Logan married and erected his present frame and log residence, a ten room house modern in many details, and other substantial improvements have been built on the place as the demand for them has arisen until this has become one of the best improved ranches in the section. With the passing years he has also added to the boundaries of the place until it now comprises 2,000 acres of deeded land and 2,000 additional acres of leased land, and it is stocked with a good grade of White Face cattle running under the brand "Y-5." Mr. Logan has exercised a civilizing influence upon his neighboring red men by employing them on his ranch, and in the earlier days upon the Indian irrigation system which he built. His acquaintance with the Cheyenne tongue has been a factor in bringing about a better understanding and a friendlier feeling between the red men and their neighbors, and his ranch is a mecca toward which the industrious Cheyenne looks when the harvest time comes.

Mr. Logan is responsible for the building of the irrigation project on the Cheyenne Reservation, having taken hold of it for the Government in its incipient stage and built eight miles of the system on the south end of the reservation, naming it the Tongue River Irrigation Project. He has also constructed an irrigation system of his own totaling a half mile of main canal and sufficient laterals to irrigate 300 acres of his ranch. His farming industry comprises alfalfa growing, although wheat and other grains have been tried for his own use only, and with a seasonable year their yield has been as prolific here as elsewhere.

At Sheridan, Wyoming, September 17, 1902, Mr. Logan was married to Miss Marie Foster. She was born in Minneapolis, Minnesota, May 6, 1883, a daughter of Dr. L. P. and Cynthia (Knight) Foster. Her father was a practicing physician of Minneapolis. Dr. and Mrs. Foster were the parents of three surviving daughters, namely: Miss Jessie Foster, of Sheridan, Wyoming; Mrs. Agnes Lonabaugh, whose home is also in Sheridan, and Mrs. Logan. Two daughters have been born of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Logan, Natalie and Virginia.

Mr. Logan's part in the political life of his country has been merely as a voter. He cast his first presidential vote in 1892, supporting Mr. Cleveland. Although he is a strong sympathizer of all church activities he is not a member of any denomination, nor has he become affiliated with any secret orders. But he is regarded as one of the most progressive and influential men of his community, and has been instrumental in carrying forward many projects for the improvement and upbuilding of Custer County.

MICHAEL TREPP. Among the pioneers of Montana who have witnessed the mighty changes which comparatively a few short years have wrought and who have taken part in these changes as witnesses and participants, one of the best known is Michael Trepp, now a retired resident of Lewistown. Mr. Trepp experienced all the hardships and excitement of frontier life; he was an ox-team driver when that was the only mode of travel; he both fought with and befriended the Indians; he was a member of the old Vigilance Committee in Virginia City; and later engaged in gold mining. With the coming of more civilized times he interested himself in the cattle business, in which he attained much success, and his silver years are now being passed in peace and contentment at his comfortable Lewistown home.

Mr. Trepp was born in Switzerland, June 11, 1836, a son of John Martin and Christina (Belig) Trepp, who passed their entire lives in their native Switzerland. Of their six sons and two daughters all are deceased with the exception of Michael, who was the third in order of birth. Michael Trepp received his education in his native land, but his trade, that of a confectioner, he obtained in Prussia. He was twenty-two years of age when he immigrated to the United States, making the journey by steamboat and landing in New York City, from whence he made his way to La Salle County, Illinois. Here his first employment was that of pastry cook on a Mississippi River steamboat which ran from St. Louis to Peoria, Illinois, and up the Illinois River as far as La Salle. Mr. Trepp later went to St. Joseph, Missouri, where he remained for about one year, and then to Council Bluffs, Iowa. In the spring of 1864 he left Council Bluffs overland in an ox-team outfit, and after a four-month trip worked his way through to Alder Gulch, later Virginia City. During this trip he met many Indians, and this at a time when the red men were inclined to be obstreperous, but Mr. Trepp managed to keep them friendly through presenting them with flour and other food, and had but little trouble. During the winter of 1864 he conducted a saloon and bakery, and at the same time worked in behalf of law and order as a member of the Vigilance Committee, the form of organization through which the peaceful people protected themselves against the lawless element and "bad men" of the times. During the spring of 1865 he again moved on, this time to Helena, Montana, where he worked for a time for wages in the bakery business. After about a year he went to Diamond City, where for a time he let gold mining engage his attention, and finally engaged in the cattle business in the Missouri Valley, a line of endeavor in which he was destined to be remarkably successful.

By the winter of 1884, Mr. Trepp felt that he was in financial circumstances which would allow him to establish a home of his own, and accordingly he returned to his native Switzerland, where, February 10, 1885, he was united in marriage with Susanna Thöni, who was born in that country. They almost immediately returned to this country and located on his ranch in the Missouri Valley of Meagher County, and there was born their daughter, Mary A., who is now the wife of Smyth Bartley and resides at Lewistown. Mrs. Trepp died in 1889, not long after the birth of her daughter, and Mr. Trepp continued to live alone until 1895, when he again went to Switzerland, and on March 24th of that year was married to Katrina Conrad, who was born in that country. They returned to the Missouri Valley, but in 1899 Mr. Trepp sold his ranch there and drove his cattle and horses through to Fergus County, where he settled on Rock Creek. This ranch he also sold later and bought a new property on Beaver and Cottonwood creeks, where he continued his stockraising operations until his retirement in 1908. Since then he has resided at Lewistown, where he is held in high esteem by all who know him.

Mr. Trepp is a republican in politics. From a vast store of reminiscence he can draw many pictures in words of the early days of the region and is a most interesting conversationalist. He has always been a lover of race horses and in his day has been the owner of some valuable animals, including the famous "Snip." About this animal a number of stories are told, the principal one being the time it defeated the two crack racers, which were favorites in the betting, owned by a Mr. Baker. This match race, held during the '80s, is still well remembered by a number of the old-timers.

Charles M. Simpson. In no region of the country is the value of broadminded foresight and enterprising action so forcibly demonstrated as in Montana and other states of the West which were opened for settlement after the more eastern ones became overcrowded. The pioneers here found great tractless ranges upon which it was possible to feed their cattle without any expense save for the hiring of a limited number of men to round them up and attend to their branding. Even in the winter seasons these hardy range cattle could forage for themselves, and cattle raising was extremely profitable. There were many of these oldtime cattle men who believed that the open ranges would always be unoccupied, and could not be convinced that changes were pending, but there were others who better read the signs of the times and quietly prepared for the time when those countless acres would be divided into individual ranches, and fenced off. One of the men who has been profitably engaged in raising cattle under both systems, and is now the owner of a magnificent ranch which he secured when land was cheap, is Charles M. Simpson, one of the best known men of his calling in the Pumpkin Creek region of Custer County, who has been a resident of the state since 1887.

Charles M. Simpson was born at Boston, Massachusetts, December 10, 1867, a son of Willard E. Simpson, a native of Maine and a member of one of the old New England families, established in the American Colonies by hardy North of Ireland people. The family home of the Simpsons for several generations was at Andover, Maine, from which place Willard E. Simpson in young manhood went to Cambridge, Massachusetts, and was there engaged in box manufacturing for some years. The rigors of the New England climate were too much for his health, and because of a rheumatic affliction, he removed to Texas, hoping to benefit from a milder temperature. He died at Gonzales, Texas in 1895, aged seventy-one years. All his mature years he cast his vote as a democrat. He was a Universalist in his religious faith. Willard E. Simpson was married in Maine to Hannah J. Mower, born in Maine and the daughter of a farmer. She died at Kingsville, Texas, in 1911, aged seventy-two years. Their children were as follows: Willard L., who lives at San Antonio, Texas; Wallace B., who at one time was a resident of Atlanta, Georgia; Melville M., who lives at McClave, Colorado; Charles M., whose name heads this review; and Alice G., who married Leslie Given of Summit, New Jersey; Hattie C., who married Thomas Colston of Kingsville, Texas; and Mabel, who is the wife of Luther Noe of Billings, Montana.

Remaining with his parents, Charles M. Simpson accompanied them to Texas and was reared in Gonzales County, his educational training being acquired from the subscription schools of that region. During his formative period he worked on his father's farm and turned naturally toward stock handling. His first employment after leaving the parental roof was as a cowboy with the Kokernot Cattle Company, one of the largest cattle operators of that part of Texas. Mr. Simpson went into the trail business with this outfit, and first made a trip in 1886, with a big herd to Hunnewell, Kansas, and in 1887, came into Montana with a bunch of 6,000 cattle for "Dick" Worsham of Henrietta, Texas, another extensive cattle operator of the "Lone Star" State. The cattle were delivered on the Little Dry, north of Miles City, to the Home Cattle Company. This bunch of cattle started May 10, and was delivered October 17 following.

In the fall of 1887 Mr. Simpson went to work for the Mankato Cattle Company and when work was scarce in the winters, did chores for his board and lodging, the latter usually being whatever spot he lay down upon wrapped in his blanket. In the following spring he began working for the Hereford Cattle Company, and remained with this organization for nine or ten years. During that period he invested his savings in steers and ran them on the range. When he filed on his homestead in 1898, he had sufficient capital to lay the foundation for his present prosperity as a ranchman.

His pioneer home was a small frame house 12 by 14 feet, and in the fall of 1898 he established himself permanently in this home. For some years he ranged his cattle, and then bought two sections of land on the ten equal payment plan for $1.50 per acre, and later bought other railroad lands on contract for $2.60 to $5.40 per acre until his ranch comprised from 7,000 to 8,000 acres of land. At first he was running range cattle and horses, but finally has drifted into the growing of Short Horn and Hereford cattle, which he believes to be the best for this region.

On November 16, 1898, Charles M. Simpson was united in marriage at the ranch of Walter Shy, on the East Fork of Otter Creek, to Maggie S. Shy. Walter Shy came into the state in 1890, and here established himself as a ranchman. It is believed that he was a native of Kentucky, and from that state went to Missouri, and thence to New Mexico, his place of residence immediately prior to migrating to Montana. All of his active life he was engaged in either farming or ranching. While living in Clay County, Missouri, Walter Shy was married to Jennie Elliott, a daughter of James Elliott, probably also a native of Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Shy had the following children: James D., who lives at Ashland, Montana; May, who is the wife of O. L. Reed of Miles City; Mrs. Simpson, who was born in Pettes County, Missouri, August 21, 1875; Millard D., who lives at Stacey, Montana; Vest, who lives at Ashland, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Simpson have a son, Milton C., who was born in Custer County, Montana, December 7, 1899. After he completed his attendance at the county high school at Miles City, he returned to the ranch and is associated with his father in the cattle industry, and also owns a ranch of his own. He registered under the last draft during the great war, but was not called into the service.

Mr. Simpson was chairman of his district for the various war activities, and in every drive his district oversubscribed its quota. He was also chairman of the community committee, and rendered every service in his power to render effective the efforts of the administration to carry out its war campaign. Mr. Simpson is a Blue Lodge and Chapter Mason, and he is also an Elk, and has subscribed very generously to the erection of the fine building the Elks have just erected at Miles City. In every relation of life Mr. Simpson measures up to the highest standards of American manhood, and his associates in Custer and adjoining counties are proud of him and what he and his class have accomplished for Montana and themselves.

Edward Channing Russel. Probably one of the most complimentary things that could be said of the late Edward Channing Russel is that his record as a public official is brief. He had the qualifications of leadership, was a man of great sincerity and integrity of character, was for over thirty years a lawyer and was successful both in his profession and business affairs. It was his uncompromising and fearless stand for right as he saw it that so frequently interfered with his aspirations for office. A few years ago he was the candidate of great promise, supported by the best and most liberal-minded people, for the office of district judge, and it is known that his defeat was largely due to the liquor interests, hostile always to a man of his character and standing.

The late Mr. Russel was born in New York City, July 6, 1856, and died at his home in Lewistown, March 16, 1918, after achieving a career of real success. He was liberally educated, attending Cornell University both for his literary and law courses. His father was vice president and acting president of Cornell University. This is a distinguished family. The late Mr. Russel was a member of the Sons of the American Revolution and was connected by family ties with William Ellery Channing, founder of the Unitarian faith, and also a direct descendant from William Ellery, a signer of the Declaration of Independence.

Judge Russel was graduated from Cornell University with the class of 1879. He had overworked at the university and instead of immediately taking up the practice of law as he had planned he came into the new country of Montana, making the journey by river up to Fort Benton, and went out on the cattle ranges. For three years he was in the stock business on Jefferson Island in Jefferson County, and for five years in what is now Fergus County. He took up land in the Judith Basin in 1882, and acquired extensive holdings of some thirteen hundred acres of land near the present site of Straw. For many years he was known as one of the successful and wealthy ranchers in Montana, and he also had some experience in the mining districts of this state.

In 1888 he resumed his profession at Helena, and soon acquired a large practice in the State, District and Supreme courts, and also in the Federal courts. For two years he served as city attorney of Helena. In 1910 Mr. Russel removed to Lewistown, near which his ranching interests had been maintained. There he continued practice as a lawyer until his death. He was also identified with many important civic movements, being one of the incorporators of the State Humane Society, out of which grew the Bureau for Child and Animal Protection, and was one of the founders of the Montana Children's Home Society, was a trustee of the Fergus County High School, and a leader in many other community movements.

In politics he always stood for the highest ideals. He was a progressive republican when that phrase was new, and in 1912 became a leader in the progressive party and unselfishly wielded all the influence at his command to realize the aim and ideals of that great party in the state and nation. He was candidate for district judge in 1916, and in 1914 was progressive candidate for the State Senate. Mr. Russel was affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 30, Knights of Pythias.

March 5, 1903, he married Lillian Katherine Kolbe, daughter of Henry and Elizabeth (Textor) Kolbe, of a prominent social and literary family of the south side in Chicago. Mrs. Russel was the second in a family of four children, one son and three daughters. She is still living at Lewistown, and is the mother of one daughter, Ellery Channing, a student in the Lewistown High School.

Russ A. Loveland spent many years in the railroad service, and on retiring from railroading took up the livestock and ranching business and is now prominently engaged in the dairying industry in Fergus County.

He was born in Allen Country, Indiana, June 3, 1878, a son of John N. and Margaret Ellen (Aten) Loveland. His father was a native of Defiance County, Ohio, and died on June 2, 1917, at the age of sixty-eight, having spent his active career as a farmer in Ohio and Indiana. His son doubtless inherits from him a love for farm stock. The father was a breeder of Chester White hogs and of many fine horses. He was a democrat, but never cared for the responsibilities of office and was affiliated with Garrett City Lodge No. 537, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. His wife was born in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, and is now living in her seventy-first year.

Russ A. Loveland is the only survivor and oldest child in the family of four sons and one daughter. He spent his boyhood days on his father's farm, attending school to the age of eighteen, and then went to work for the Baltimore and Ohio Railway as clerk in the agent's office at Garrett, Indiana. After about two years he went into the train service. After leaving Garrett he was about five years with the Belt Line of the Chicago Junction Railway, part of the time serving as yardmaster at the Thirty-ninth Street yards in Chicago. Mr. Loveland on coming West first located at Lombard, Montana, and was in the train service as freight brakeman for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, and in September, 1912, was promoted to conductor. He temporarily left the railroad service in February, 1918, to improve his farm of 480 acres in Fergus County, near Garneill and has developed that as a fine grain and stock ranch, handling thoroughbred dairy cattle.

He is affiliated with Garrett City Lodge No. 537 of Masons, with Harlowton Chapter, Royal Ancient Masons, Lewistown Commandery No. 14, Knights Templar, and Algeria Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He is also a life member of Lewistown Lodge No. 456 of the Elks, and both he and his wife are members of Marie Chapter No. 36 of the Eastern Star.

March 26, 1898, Mr. Loveland married Mina A. Van Auken. She was born at Pleasant Lake in Steuben County, Indiana, a daughter of Calvin and Mary (Pixley) Van Auken, the former a native of Jersey City, New Jersey, and the latter of Ohio. Her father died in 1911, aged seventy-five, and her mother in 1892, in her forty-first year. Her father was a lawyer in early life, later took up the civil engineering profession, and for several years was county surveyor of DeKalb County, Indiana, and a man of prominence in that section of the state. He was a democrat and a member of the Masonic fraternity. Mr. and Mrs. Loveland have five children: Russ A., Jr., John W., Helen Mary, Vera Lenora and Allen V.

Robert Stavely Hamilton, of Lewistown, who recently celebrated his eightieth birthday, is one of the few survivors of that great colonization movement which played so conspicuous a part in the founding of Montana during the sixties. He has been a resident of this state for fifty-five years, and in many respects his personal experience has been woven into the history of Montana.

He was born in County Antrim, Ireland, in 1839, the second of nine children of James and Mary J. (Hemphill) Hamilton. He is of Scotch ancestry, and still further back his remote ancestors were among the Norman settlers of England. In 1852, at the age of thirteen, Mr. Hamilton came to America on a sailing ship. He lived several years at Cambridge, Massachusetts, and served an apprenticeship to the hardware business and tinner's trade. In the spring of 1856 he went out to the Northwest frontier, to the territory of Minnesota, and after a brief stay at Minneapolis went to Little Falls. At Little Falls he became acquainted with one of the founders of that town, the late James Fergus, who afterward was destined to play such a prominent part in the history of Montana. Mr. Hamilton engaged in the hardware business at Little Falls, and while there cast his first ballot, voting for Abraham Lincoln. He was a warm admirer of Mr. Lincoln and vigorously supported his policy during the Civil war. He was appointed postmaster of Little Falls during Lincoln's administration. About that time prospects for the growth and development of Little Falls were not attractive, and in the early part of 1864 Mr. Hamilton removed to Henry County, Illinois, where at Geneseo, on March 23, 1864, he married Miss Agnes Fergus, a daughter of James Fergus. Mr. Fergus had already come to Montana as a member of the fifth pioneer expedition of 1862. Mr. Hamilton and his wife, together with Mrs. Hamilton's mother and other members of the Fergus family, soon made up an expedition to follow Mr. Fergus to the Northwest. Mr. Hamilton brought in his two wagons, a set of tinner's tools and a small stock of hardware. They traveled by railroad as far as Grinnell, Iowa, the terminus of the railroad at that time, and thence came overland, crossing the Missouri River at Council Bluffs and Omaha, and thence up to Alder Gulch and Virginia City. Mr. Hamilton opened his stock of goods and engaged in business at Virginia City, and was soon prospering as a merchant. He also joined with the other good citizens of that locality in keeping down criminals, and remained a resident of Virginia City until 1870, when he moved to Helena. In 1875 he went back to Little Falls, Minnesota, and traded his real estate there for 225 head of cattle. That was the start of his subsequently extensive business as a stockman. In 1881 he moved his home from Helena to the Judith Basin, where he acquired extensive range and ranch interests. He was in the cattle business from 1872 until 1900, and with his sons frequently had 500 acres occupied by his stock. He was a cattleman and also one of the early merchants of the state. Mr. Hamilton at one time was a member of the Board of Directors of the First National Bank of Helena.

He is one of the early members of Helena Lodge No. 3 of the Masonic Order, and in politics has always been a republican. He and his wife had six children, four of whom are still living: Mary Agnes, wife of George Dillon, Robert E., Thomas M. and Robert S., Jr.

Arthur A. Franzke, who was superintendent of schools at Lewistown for eight years, is a prominent educator, but doubtless most widely known because of his talent as a speaker and lecturer. Since his efforts as a boy orator in political campaigns in Wisconsin he has been almost constantly on the platform and in the forum. He has brilliant oratorical gifts, but these always serve as the vehicle for thought and logic that express the views and convictions of a man who has made a close study of American life at the source. He well deserves the title bestowed upon him of "publicist educator," since his work throughout is educational.

Mr. Franzke was born at Forest Junction in Calumet County, Wisconsin, September 2, 1886, a son of August and Wilhelmina (Otto) Franzke. His father was born in Poland, October 14, 1851, and his mother in Wisconsin in 1861. Arthur is the fifth in a family of eleven children, all living. His father came to this country at the age of seven years, the grandparents making the voyage in a sailing ship which took six weeks' time. The grandfather settled in the woods of Waukesha County, Wisconsin, and later moved to Calumet County, where he developed a farm after a number of years of hard labor. Mr. Franzke's father also made a farm in the wilds of Northern Wisconsin, and finally located at Appleton in that state, where he has lived retired for the past eight years. He has been a man of public-spirited activity and was many years on the school board. Politically he is a republican.

Arthur A. Franzke had poor health when a boy and could not attend school consecutively until he was twelve years of age. He then made rapid progress in his studies through grammar and high schools at Brillion, Wisconsin, and for five years was a student in the Northwestern College at Naperville, Illinois, graduating with the class of 1907. He distinguished himself at Northwestern College as an orator and debator, and took part in many of the college and intercollegiate contests. With a teammate he won first honors in an intercollegiate oratorical contest, where the other competing colleges were Lake Forest, Wheaton, Lombard and Illinois College at Jacksonville. He won honors in all the state contests in 1906 and was class orator in 1907. At the age of sixteen Mr. Franzke appeared on the political stump in Wisconsin, directing his efforts against railway public utility combination and lumber interests. He was then a staunch ally of Robert LaFollette, though in recent years his enthusiasm for that Wisconsin senator has turned to distrust.

Mr. Franzke also took part in the political campaigns of Illinois in 1908-10-12, when he actively supported the campaigns of Governor Lowden.

Mr. Franzke has been active in educational work for the past ten years. He became principal of the high school at Paw Paw, Illinois, in 1908, serving two years, and then three years as superintendent of the Paw Paw schools. From there he came to Montana and was superintendent of schools at Harlowton, from September, 1912, to January, 1913. At the latter date he was elected to the responsibilities of superintendent of schools at Lewistown, where he was in charge of one of the largest school systems of the state.

Mr. Franzke gave much of his time to various war movements, where his services as a speaker were invaluable. He served as chairman of the Fergus County Food Administration, as chairman of the "Four Minute" speakers, as secretary of the Fergus County War Relief Association, as a member of the Red Cross Brigade, and was chairman of the Speakers' Bureau in all the Liberty Loan campaigns.

Since severing his relations with the Lewistown School System he has been active in public and political affairs. He was a strong factor in the defeat of the nonpartisan movement in Montana. During the campaign he carried the message of sound Americanism into every corner of Montana. He is now using his energies in writing and lecturing on political and industrial affairs in the state.

Mr. Franzke is also a well-known Chautauqua lecturer, and has calls for his services on the lecture platform throughout Canada and the Western states. He is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is a member of the Rotary Club and Outlook Club. He is a Methodist and in politics is independent.

Robert G. Jackson. Probably no one could give a better connected account of the history of Fergus County during the past forty years or more than Robert G. Jackson, who with his family owns extensive bodies of ranch and farming lands near Lewistown.

Mr. Jackson has always been a constructive factor in this community, has achieved success, and has been a worker for law and order at a time when the country was filled with criminals.

He was born in Durham Township, Oxford County, Ontario, Canada, January 29, 1846, a son of James and Mercy Caroline (Chase) Jackson. His father, a native of County Wexford, Ireland, came to Prince Edward's Island when a young man by sailing ship, and for several years was a merchant dealing in fish and farm produce. Later he engaged in farming in the Province of Ontario, and in 1854 moved to Buchanan County, Iowa, where he pre-empted Government land at a dollar and a quarter an acre. He was an early settler in that section of Iowa, and spent the rest of his life there as a farmer. He died at the age of sixty-seven. His wife was a native of New England and died at the age of thirty-six. Robert G. Jackson was the fourth of her seven children.

Mr. Jackson was eight years old when his parents moved to Iowa, and he grew up and received his education in one of the schools of that state, walking every day back and forth four miles between home and school. During early manhood he was a prosperous and influential farmer in Iowa. He made his first trip to Montana in 1878. After prospecting over the country he went back and sold his Iowa home and then returned to Montana by teams. At Bozeman he engaged in the lumber business, having the saw mill which furnished the greater part of the lumber and timbers used in the construction of the Bozeman Tunnel for the Northern Pacific Railway. His mill cut the timbers used in shoring up the tunnel and much of the overhead construction. He was busily engaged in operating this mill during 1881-83. On July 3, 1884, he reached the site of the first city of Lewistown. On that day he had an exciting experience with two notorious outlaws named Rattlesnake Jake and O'Fallon. One of his companions was killed by one of these bandits, and Mr. Jackson had a part of the subduing of the outlaws, and the battle was one long remembered by the old-timers as one of the exciting events of the early days at Lewistown. Mr. Jackson brought the first steam threshing outfit to Fergus County, and during subsequent years he threshed grain along every creek within fifty miles of Lewistown. He also brought a saw mill from Bozeman, and his mill cut much of the timber used in the pioneer construction of Judith Gap. His chief business, however, has been ranching. Today he owns a 200-acre homestead, adjoining Lewistown, and also 520 acres near Forest Grove. For a number of years he raised horses on an extensive scale, and afterward combined them with cattle. His sons have, all told, 3,840 acres in Fergus County, and they run about 400 head of cattle on their pastures. The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad paid Mr. Jackson over $20,000 for right of way in Lewistown, and paid his sons a similar amount in transactions, footing up to about $42,000.

Since the death of his wife in 1915, Mr. Jackson has been practically retired from business, though giving some attention to retailing the extensive coal output on about 300 acres of coal land which he owns. During his residence in Iowa he served as a school director and township trustee. For five years he was also a member of the School Board of Lewistown. He was an active republican until Bryan ran for the presidency the first time, and he then became affiliated with the democrats, but latterly has voted for the best man. He is a charter member of Lodge No. 3 of the Knights of Pythias.

November 9, 1870, Mr. Jackson married Amelia Taylor. She was born in the Province of New Brunswick, Canada, and died September 30, 1915. Five children were born to their marriage, four of whom are still living: George R. is a prominent ranchman in Fergus County; Mercy has been one of the leading teachers in the schools of Lewistown, and still lives with her father; Dorman also has extensive farming interests near Lewistown, and by his marriage to Julia Clifton has two children; Eleanor is still at home with her father.

Richard S. Johnson, one of the leading merchants of Baker, is the first business man to locate in the city, and he has been a resident of Montana since the fall of 1893. Born at Helsingborg, Sweden, on September 4, 1876, he is a son of Lawrence Segerfelt, a merchant and also a native of Sweden. Although Mr. Johnson's family name is Segerfelt, after coming to America he took his mother's maiden name, adding it to the family one, and became naturalized as Richard Segerfelt Johnson. His mother before her marriage was Benedicta Johnson. Lawrence and Benedicta (Johnson) Segerfelt became the parents of several children, four of whom reached maturity, namely: Richard S., whose name heads this review; Mrs. Sven Benson, who resides at Helsingborg, Sweden; Bror, who is in the employ of the Swedish Government at Stockholm; and Christ, who is the largest fur merchant of Sweden, with stores at Helsingborg and Malmo, Sweden.

Richard S. Johnson was sent to the United States in order to attend school at Chicago, where his uncle, Doctor Segerfelt, was established in practice, and while living with him he attended a private school. Possessing in a remarkable degree the facility of acquiring knowledge, within six weeks Mr. Johnson gained enough of an acquaintance with the English language to enable him to make his way in his new home. This faculty appears to have been inherited by his little son, who speaks Swedish as fluently as English, having learned the former language from his maternal grandmother, an inmate of the Johnson household, who habitually speaks in her native language to the child.

Becoming imbued with a love of this country, Mr. Johnson was afraid that his parents would require him to return to Sweden, and so left Chicago very suddenly and came into what was then regarded as the Far West. He had never earned a dollar, and discovered that it was more difficult to earn a living than to learn a language, but with characteristic pluck and determination he stuck to it until he made as great a success of the one as he had of the other.

It was in the fall of 1893 that he arrived at Miles City and took a job at Terry, Montana, as a dishwasher in a hotel at that point, owned by W. F. Jordan, who has since acquired a state-wide reputation. In April of the following year Mr. Johnson went on the roundup for the old Hash Knife Company, and, later, was with different horse outfits, spending in all about ten years on the range. During this period he saved enough capital to buy a bunch of cattle, and he then located his ranging place on Box Elder Creek, near Bell Tower. He associated himself with J. F. Beasley, who proved his worth as a partner, and the two remained together for several years. About 1903 the firm sold their outfit holdings on the Box Elder, and Mr. Johnson went to Camp Creek and became a clerk for the Chuning Mercantile Company, remaining with this concern for two years. Returning home about this time, he discovered that his brothers had prospered much better than he, they being already merchants of prominence and he only a clerk, and so he resolved to establish himself in business. Coming back to Montana, he looked over the ground and felt that Baker offered a good field for his proposed undertaking. Looking up his old partner, Mr. Johnson convinced him of the feasibility of the proposition, and they founded the Baker Mercantile Company in 1910. After five years the partnership was dissolved, Mr. Beasley retiring, and Mr. Johnson becoming the sole proprietor. In addition to the parent store there are three branches, the ones in Baker being operated under the names of the H. G. Schenk Company and the Berg Implement Company, while the third, at Plevna, Montana, is conducted under the name of the Plevna Grocery Company.

In addition to his mercantile connections Mr. Johnson has been active in other directions, and helped to organize the First National Bank of Baker, of which he is still a director, and he owns three sections of land in this locality, much of it being under cultivation, and he has made all of the improvements on it himself. This land is devoted to grain farming.

Mr. Johnson took out his naturalization papers at Miles City, Montana, and cast his first presidential vote for William McKinley in 1900, and from that time on has been identified with the republican party. He satisfies himself with casting his vote and in taking a good citizen's interest in community affairs.

On June 17, 1910, Mr. Johnson was married in New York City to Miss Edna Larson, who was also born in Helsingborg, Sweden, a playmate of his childhood. Mrs. Johnson's father, Jens Larson, was a liveryman, but is now deceased, and Mrs. Larson, as before stated, makes her home with Mr. and Mrs. Johnson. There were two children in the Larson family, the other member being Miss Ebba Larson of Baker. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have two children, Richard Lawrence and Joann.

Fraternally Mr. Johnson is a Thirty-second Degree Scottish Rite Mason and a Shriner, and belongs to Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine of Helena, Montana. He is serving his lodge as treasurer. He also belongs to Baker Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, being one of its charter members. A sound, dependable and upright business man, Mr. Johnson has steadily advanced and has honorably earned all of his present prosperity through his sagacity, shrewdness and ability to grasp opportunities as they were offered to him. Industrious and thrifty, he saved his money while working on a salary and was thus enabled to get a start in life. As a citizen he is recognized as a constructive force in his neighborhood, and he and his wife have many warm friends in the neighborhood where they have lived for so many years.

GEORGE T. O'BRIEN. When the name of O'Brien is sounded within the hearing of those who have had something to do with the settlement and development of the lower Yellowstone Valley they instinctively associate it with one personality and that the pioneer whose sons now carry a modest share of the burden of citizenship in Richland County, one of whom is named as the subject of this liberal review.

John W. O'Brien, who was the worthy head of this well-known family, belonged to the pioneers of Eastern Montana, and his personality stamped itself indelibly upon the lives of those associated with him for almost forty years in the varied affairs of the region where he spent his final years. If his person appeared uncouth and his manners somewhat untrained, underneath it all there was a heart throbbing in harmony with the best intentions of his fellow men and his life proved an example of neighborly kindness and brotherly consideration. He was a part of the untamed West for nearly fifty years, and in that period of time's flight he accomplished something for himself and added something to the wealth and to the social phase of the community where his lot was cast.

Turning first to the origin of this esteemed character, we find John W. O'Brien a native of Covington, Kentucky, and his birthday March 12, 1850. Left motherless in childhood, he grew up in Irish families in Ohio, and his childhood education came from a Brothers' School. Upon the return of his father from the Civil war service he enlisted as a youth of sixteen in the regular army, was an integrant of Company I, Seventh Infantry Regiment, and served his first year in the fort at St. Augustine, Florida, the place which marks the first settlement in the United States. He was transferred north to Ft. Steele on the North Platte River, was there a year and was moved on west to the upper Missouri River country and spent a year in Ft. Buford. It was the year 1869 when he reached this point, and the following year his four years expired and he received his discharge.

Engaging now in civil pursuits, he established woodyards at points along the Missouri River for the convenience of the boats plying to and fro below Ft. Buford, and, finally, found himself running a yard at Cow Island, at the head of low water navigation on the river and about 150 miles east of Ft. Benton. He remained at this point until some time in 1876, when he went to the Black Hills as an experiment, but the climate did not agree with him and returned to the Yellowstone Valley the next year. Casting about for a business associate, he found an old scout of General Terry's, George Morgan, and the two built a stockade store at the mouth of Morgan's Creek, named in honor of his partner. They also had a woodyard there, and this was in charge of the old frontiersman, Jack Flynn, whose last years were spent around Oswego, Montana, and who belonged to the era of trail-blazing marked by Morgan and O'Brien. The site of their old store is about 100 yards east of the Northern Pacific track where it crosses Morgan Creek and on the south bank of the stream. In 1877 the Government built a telegraph line from Bismarck to Tongue River by the way of Ft. Buford, and the stockade store became also a telegraph office. O'Brien and Morgan continued to trade with the Indians and sell wood to the river boatmen until the spring of 1879, when their enterprise slowed down to the point of a profitless concern and O'Brien then severed his connection with it and took a mail contract covering the trail from Ft. Buford to Ft. Keogh. Jo Gray carried the route as his associate from Ft. Keogh to the old cantonment below Glendive, where he met O'Brien.

In 1879 O'Brien and Morgan made a trip into Canada by the way of Mouse River, but were not satisfied to locate up there and returned and O'Brien entered upon an era of trading with the buffalo hunters at the mouth of Fox Creek. He bought their hides and sold them ammunition and provisions and continued there till the fall of 1880, when he went to Ft. Buford to clerk for the old firm of Leighton and Jordan. In the spring of 1881 he purchased the ranch and trading station of "French Jo," (Jo Seymour) in the narrow valley of Fox Creek, and there he established a store and opened a road ranch on the Yellowstone. With this enterprise he was connected the remainder of his active life, and he made it a place of rendezvous of travelers and a mecca for ranchmen and scattered settlers as a place to buy goods. The O'Brien "road ranch" was the chief hostelry between Glendive and the Missouri River, famed for its hospitality, and no matter what the crowd or the crush of guests there was always room for one more. The O'Brien store continued business and flourished after the Northern Pacific built, was twice remodeled to accommodate its increasing business, but fire destroyed it in 1911 and its ruins mark the spot where John O'Brien drove his last stake in the civilizing of the Yellowstone Valley. He was a ranchman as well as a merchant, and a section of land marked his holdings, and this is being used by his sons in the production of beef and grain. The old homestead is intact and shelters his son James D., while George T., the older son, carries on his stock and farming enterprise at Newlon, a half mile down the river and in sight of the spot which gave him his childhood training.

John W. O'Brien was always a democrat, and he possessed positive convictions on politics and upon other topics and subjects uppermost in the minds of the public. He never hedged when approached by an office-seeker for his support, and if he did not intend to help him he told him so. He was reared a Roman Catholic and brought up his children in that faith. His body was inclined to be frail, his stature medium, his movements active and energetic and his vigorous constitution kept him a well man through life.

In August, 1881, he married at Ft. Buford Miss Ellen Kennedy, and they began their residence on their Newlon ranch September 7th following. Mrs. O'Brien was born in Cambria County, Pennsylvania, Carrolltown Township, December 26, 1846, and passed away May 27, 1904. She belonged to an old Colonial family of Pennsylvania, a daughter of Michael Kennedy, who married a daughter of Emerick Bender, whose father made the first wooden clock made west of the Allegheny Mountains. Emerick Bender was born in Germany and came to the United States as a child in 1793, and six years later he attended the funeral of General George Washington at Mt. Vernon. The Kennedy family is of Irish origin and an old one of the Keystone state. It furnished soldiers for the Union army during the Civil war in the persons of Dominick and Thomas Kennedy, brothers of Mrs. O'Brien, and the former died a prisoner in Andersonville, Georgia. Thomas served two enlistments and was a soldier in uniform at the funeral of President Lincoln.

The children to grow up and survive in the home of John W. and Ellen O'Brien are George T. and James D., as above noted. The older son was born at the old store January 5, 1884, and has spent his life as a ranchman and farmer. His education was acquired here and he married October 10, 1906, Bertha Dore, a daughter of Richard and Pauline (Gable) Dore. Mrs. O'Brien was born in Elkhorn, Nebraska, November 23, 1885, and her education was acquired in the public schools. Her father was born in England but her mother was a native of the Province of Posen, Germany, and came to the United States when fourteen years old. Mr. Dore passed his life as a farmer near Akron, Colorado, and is buried there, but his widow is a member of her daughter's home at Newlon. The Dore issue were Richard, of Missoula, Montana; Amelia, who died as Mrs. Ezra Eddy at Elkhorn, Nebraska; Henry and Edwin, of Fairview, Montana; George, of Sidney, Montana; Mary, who died at Lead, South Dakota, as Mrs. William Palmer; John, of Toppemish, Washington; Fred, who resides at Olinda, California; Jacob, who died at Sidney; Jobe, who resides at Fairview, Montana; Mrs. O'Brien, of Newlon; and Mabel, who married Arcade Simard, of Sidney, Montana.

The father of John W. O'Brien was John H. O'Brien, born on Erin's Isle in 1826, and was educated there. He came to the United States in 1845 and stopped for a time in Brooklyn, New York. He was a carpenter by trade, and went Southwest into Kentucky before the rebellion came on and there enlisted in the Union army. His regiment was the Eighth Ohio Cavalry, and he served through the war. After his honorable discharge he settled in Tennessee and passed away in that state in 1870.

In the home of George T. O'Brien and wife the following children have been born to them: Anna Gertrude, Pauline, John, Fred, Donald and Dorothy, twins, and Henry. Mr. O'Brien has served his school district many years as a board member, was a member of the district local Council of Defense during the World war, participated actively in the various drives for war funds, and in his national politics is a democrat.

CLYDE MCLEMORE, junior member of the firm of Booth & McLemore of Baker, is an able lawyer, a strong debator and brilliant orator. Possessed of a strong and commanding mind, unusual ability and admirable personal qualities, he has become a well-known figure of the Montana bar, rendering conspicuous service in his able conduct of the cases entrusted to him, discharging what he believes to be his duty with independence and without bias. He will never permit fear of political punishment or hope of reward to change his attitude on a matter of public concern, and is recognized as one of the forceful men of his profession.

Clyde McLemore was born near Everton, Dade County, Missouri, on March 29, 1883, a son of William Y. and grandson of Archibald McLemore. The McLemore family came originally from Scotland through the north of Ireland to the United States during the Colonial period of this country's history, settlement being made first in North Carolina and later in Tennessee. During 1849 Archibald McLemore with several of his brothers left Tennessee for Missouri, and there became interested in farming. When the war broke out between the states the McLemore brothers adhered to the Union, and continued to support it, several of them entering the army in its defense. Archibald McLemore married Mary Brown, and they had five children.

William Y. McLemore was born in Missouri, where he spent his life, being engaged in merchandising. He married Claranette Wheeler, a daughter of Calvin and Asenith (Carlock) Wheeler. Mrs. McLemore was born in Dade County, Missouri, and she and her husband became the parents of the following children: Clyde, whose name heads this review; Clarence, who is a banker of Everton, Missouri; Forest, who is the wife of Boyd Campbell, of Warner, Oklahoma; Ray, who served in the Eighty-ninth Division during the Great war, is now engaged in merchandising at Everton, Missouri; Carl, who is also a resident of Everton; and Dewey and Gretta, who are both residents of Everton.

Growing up in a country town, Clyde McLemore attended the village schools, the Everton High School and the academic department of the Missouri State University, spending eighteen months in the last-named institution. Following that he took a law course in the university, from which he was graduated in 1911, with the degree of Doctor of Law. His fraternity work was done as a member of the Sigma Chi and Phi Delta Phi Greek letter societies. An athlete, he was a member of the university baseball team, with which he played for an entire season.

Having completed his legal training Mr. McLemore took the examinations at Guthrie, Oklahoma, and was admitted to practice before the Supreme Court, and he was also admitted to the bar in Missouri. His first lawsuit was tried in Oklahoma, and it was an ordinary civil case. As long as he remained in Oklahoma he confined himself to a civil practice, being at Muskogee, that state, from 1911 until 1912, when he moved to Billings, Montana, there forming a partnership with E. E. Collins under the firm name of Collins & McLemore. For some years this was one of the strong legal firms of Billings, but then was dissolved and Mr. McLemore became title examiner for the Bankers Loan & Mortgage Company of Billings, with which he remained until his retirement from that position in the early part of 1919 in order to locate permanently at Baker as an associate of Senator Booth. The firm of Booth & McLemore was formed in May, 1919. In addition to his other work Mr. McLemore has contributed a number of articles to some of the leading law journals of the country. In his politics he has always been a republican, and he cast his first presidential vote for Colonel Roosevelt in 1904, but has never taken an active part in public affairs. For some years he has been a member of the Odd Fellows. Brought up in a strong Presbyterian home atmosphere he is naturally a member of that denomination.

On August 7, 1907, Mr. McLemore was united in marriage in his native county to Lucy Talbutt, a daughter of Mason and Clara (Kimber) Talbutt. Mrs. McLemore was born in Dade County, Missouri, on March 28, 1888, and attended its public schools. Mr. and Mrs. McLemore have two children, Felicia, who was born in 1910; and Claranette, who was born in 1913.

William C. Henderson, vice president of the First National Bank of Jordan, is a prosperous ranchman and early settler in this region, and has participated in the development of it. He was born at Mechanicsburg, Pennsylvania, a son of John W. and Mary (Allen) Henderson, who, in 1876, went to Kansas and homesteaded in Smith County, where John W. Henderson spent his remaining years, dying there at the age of fifty-seven years. His widow survives him. They had the following children: James W., who lives at Nezperce, Idaho; John J., who lives at Topeka, Kansas; William C., whose name heads this review; Meade M., who is a resident of the State of Washington; Clyde, who lives at Wheeler, Washington; Juliet, who is the wife of Ray Moore of Stone, Oklahoma; and Sadie, who married William H. Smith, died at Smith Center, Kansas.

John W. Henderson was born in Pennsylvania, and enlisted for service during the War Between the States from his birthplace as a member of the Sixteenth Cavalry under General Sheridan, and was in the campaign against General Ewell. With the exception of frozen feet, Mr. Henderson suffered from no disability as a result of his military service, although he took part in a number of important engagements, and was mustered out as a sergeant. After going to Kansas he became very prominent and served for two terms as probate judge of Smith County. Politically he was a republican, in religious faith a Presbyterian, while his fraternal connections were with the Odd Fellows. A man of excellent education he was able to express himself intelligently, and always was looked up to in his community.

It was during July, 1892, that Mr. Henderson came to Montana, he being at that time under age, as he was born August 4, 1874. Landing at Miles City, he found himself in a strange place and without friends and with but two dollars to his name. In order to provide for his immediate necessities, he took a job milking cows and irrigation work on a ranch for which he was to receive his board, his employer promising to give him something better to do when "it turned up." However, after six months, realizing that there was no likelihood of his receiving any better remuneration from this man, he took an examination held for aspirants for teachers' certificates, and was successful in obtaining one. For the subsequent year he taught the Hockett School on Powder River, following which he went to Ekalaka and was there employed with several merchants, remaining there for five years, when he left it for Forsyth to embark there in a merchandising business, which he conducted for a year. Selling this store, Mr. Henderson came to Jordan, when it was still a part of Dawson County. At that time it contained the post office, and that was all. He erected the first store building, which he stocked with a general line of goods. The logs for this building were hauled from the "breaks" some distance away. It was a primitive affair, but served for the first year, and then he replaced it with another log building, which is now a part of the West business house. In addition to this property, Mr. Henderson owns the post office building and his large ranch. In order to aid in the development of Jordan Mr. Henderson contributed the lots upon which the Jordan amusement hall was erected and has in many other ways proved his public spirit. For twelve years he continued in the mercantile business with marked success for he understood it, having not only his Montana experience in this line to guide him, but that he obtained in his father's store where he was a clerk prior to coming to Montana. At the termination of the twelve years he sold his business and turned his attention to ranching.

Mr. Henderson began his career as a stockman with a few head of sheep as an experiment, increasing his flocks until he is now one of the leading sheepraisers of this region. His ranch is located below Jordan, with his homestead on the Big Dry, as the nucleus of it, and there he maintains his headquarters. His farming is confined to the raising of hay from the native grass.

At the same time as he operated his mercantile establishment Mr. Henderson acted as postmaster of Jordan to the satisfaction of the patrons of that office. He took part in the organization of the First National Bank of Jordan and also of its predecessor, The Farmers State Bank, becoming vice president of the institution at the time it was nationalized. The Farmers State Bank was capitalized at $25,000, the same figures being maintained by its successor. Mr. Henderson's associates in the bank are: H. P. Wiley, president; and George Ayer, cashier. The board of directors is as follows: H. P. Wiley, H. V. Bailey, James Vance, George Ayer and William C. Henderson. In spite of the fact that this bank was opened for business while America was engaged in the World war, and went through the disastrous drought of 1919, the deposits of the bank are $100,000.

While living at Ekalaka, Mr. Henderson enlisted at Miles City in the Third United States Cavalry Rough Riders, Captain Brown's company, for service during the Spanish-American war, and was sent to Camp Chickamauga Park, where he remained for six months, and was then mustered out of the service, in November, 1898, following which he returned to merchandising.

A republican, William C. Henderson cast his first presidential vote for William McKinley. Taking an active part in politics he was elected to the Montana State Assembly, and served in the fifteenth session, in 1917 under Speaker O'Connor, a democrat, and was assigned to the Live Stock, Agriculture and Federal Relations committees, his chief interest being to secure favorable legislation for live stock and agriculture. His record was such that he was re-elected in 1918 from Dawson County, and had the pleasure of belonging to a republican house. He was made chairman of the Live Stock Committee, and a member of the Agriculture and New Counties and Divisions committees, and introduced a bill creating the new county of Garfield. In the special session of the assembly in February, 1918, called to pass legislation to promote the interests of the war, to help win it and to keep down pacific influences and pro-German propaganda, Mr. Henderson voted for the laws creating the Council of Defense, defining criminal syndicalism, sabotage, and for the punishment of malicious destruction of personal property, and for laws relating to the use of the American flag, providing seed grain for the farmers and similar measures, and later helped to carry them into effect by serving on committees at home. He was a member of all the Liberty Loan committees of Dawson County, and also those taking charge of the Young Men's Christian Association and Red Cross drives, he and Mrs. Henderson being life members of the last named organization. Fraternally Mr. Henderson is a thirty-second degree Mason and belongs to the Mystic Shrine of Helena, Montana. He holds membership in the Miles City Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On June 15, 1889, Mr. Henderson was married at Smith Center, Kansas, to Bertha A. Simpson, a daughter of Adam and Bertha Simpson. Adam Simpson was a Scotchman, who, after spending some time in Ohio, came west to Kansas and became a homesteader in Smith County, where he spent the remainder of his life. His widow survived him but is now also deceased. Their children were three sons and four daughters, Mrs. Henderson being the fourth in order of birth. During the War Between the States Mr. Simpson served in the Union army.

Mr. and Mrs. Henderson became the parents of one daughter, Marguerite, who was graduated from the Miles City High School and is now attending the Montana State University. A man of means, Mr. Henderson can take pride in the fact that his present wealth is the result of his own intelligent efforts and wise investments, while the prominence he has attained in public affairs has been won by his faithfulness to the responsibilities he assumed with his oath of office and his ability in promoting and carrying out broad-visioned measures for the betterment of the two great industries in which he and so many of his constituents are interested, agriculture and live stock.

MATTHEW J. ROKE, sheriff of Garfield County, has the honor of being the first to hold this very important office in the newly created county, and he is living up to the heavy responsibilities of his position in such a manner as to entirely justify the confidence displayed in his capabilities by those who elected him. Mr. Roke is one of the best known men in this region into which he came in 1892, spending a number of years as a cowboy both here and in other places.

It was at Joliet, Will County, Illinois, on December 31, 1866, that Matthew J. Roke came into the world, a son of Stephen J. and Catherine (Prichard) Roke. Stephen J. Roke was also a native of Illinois, but his parents were born in Vermont. The name was originally "Rourke," clearly indicating Irish extraction, and Sheriff Roke possesses many of the sterling characteristics generally associated with the open-handed, kind-hearted, courageous sons of Erin. When he was seven years old, Matthew J. Roke was taken to Norton County, Kansas, by his parents, they coming west in the hope that a change would prove beneficial to Stephen J. Roke, whose health had failed as a result of his army experience during the War Between the States. He enlisted for the war in Company C, One Hundredth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was wounded at the battle of Stone River. This wound and the effects of exposure so wrought upon his health that in spite of the change in climate, he died when less than thirty. The maternal grandparents were James and Mary Prichard, early settlers of Illinois, of Irish ancestry. Mrs. Stephen J. Roke is now a resident of Denver, Colorado. She and her husband had two children, namely:

Matthew J. and John S., the latter being a resident of Hill, Montana.

Matthew J. Roke attended school in Norton County, Kansas, but when he was only fifteen years old he began riding the range about Las Animas, Colorado, for the Prairie Cattle Company, going from there to the Bridle Bit outfit owned by the Union Cattle Company which ranged from the Platte to the Belle Fourche rivers, and remained with it for ten years. He then rode his cow horse into Montana from Cheyenne, Wyoming, with the Home Land & Cattle Company, better known as the "N bar N" ranch, which outfit grazed the Northwest from the mouth of the Prairie Elk to the mouth of the Yellowstone, and from the Musselshell to the mouth of the Yellowstone. Mr. Roke rode range along the Big Dry, wintering at Round Butte, and then from the first of April until the first of November he was a spoke in the wheel of what was perhaps the largest "cow outfit" of this region. This company was composed of the St. Louis Neideringhaus brothers who shipped beef cattle by the thousands every year from the early '80s until they closed out their ranch in 1898. Mr. Roke then went with the "79" outfit of the Murphys, owned by John T. Murphy of Helena, Montana, who had large ranching interests in Montana. He called his outfit the Montana Cattle Company. Mr. Roke rode the range for him all over Dawson, Fergus, Rosebud and Yellowstone counties and witnessed the closing of this ranch as a member of its last force.

Deciding to continue ranching, Mr. Roke continued in this line of work on his own account, and later entered as his homestead the headquarters of the old "79" ranch, and has here since resided. It is near the post office of Edwards, and here Sheriff Roke has spent his most constructive years, passing from young manhood to middle age. His cattle are run under the brand "TAN" until he disposed of it in 1917. He still maintains his home on his ranch, which to him is a sacred spot.

During his early years in Montana the necessity for hard and unremitting work kept Mr. Roke so fully occupied that he had but little time or inclination for politics, but feeling in accord with the principles of Woodrow Wilson he voted for him for President. When Garfield was created Mr. Roke was selected as its first sheriff in the bill of organization, and he assumed the responsibilities of that office on April 1, 1919. His first official act was issuing papers in an attachment case and this was performed at Jordan, the county seat. Mr. Roke belongs to Bill and Jerry Aerie, Fraternal Order of Eagles, No. 176, of Billings, Montana, and Miles City Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. A man of unquestioned courage and uprightness of character, Mr. Roke is eminently fitted for the office he now holds. Known all over this part of the state his association with the affairs of the new county was a wise one for the standards he is raising in the office are of a high order and his successors will have to live up to them in order to satisfy their constituents, so that Garfield is insured fair and reasonable enforcement of the laws and maintenance of order. As a resident of the state during its formative period, Mr. Roke took an effective part in the transition from a region of open range and undeveloped lands to its present desirable status, and because of his work in this and other connections, no history of his community would be complete without mention of him.

Alonzo Fluss, one of the most successful ranchmen of Prairie County, is also prominent politically and is now serving on the board of county commissioners. His advancement has come about through his own merit, and he is closely identified with this region which he has assisted in developing. Mr. Fluss was born in Tazewell County, Illinois, July 12, 1875, a son of Fred Fluss, a native of Germany, who came to the United States in young manhood, being then but eighteen years of age, and located in Tazewell County, Illinois. There he was married to Melissa Haimline, who survives him and still resides near the old Fluss homestead in Tazewell County. After being successfully engaged in farming for many years, Fred Fluss retired and lived to be eighty-nine years old, dying in 1911. He and his wife had eight children, the survivors being as follows: Carrie, who is the wife of David Bickle of Ismay, Montana; Delia, who married George W. Burt of Miles City, Montana; Leslie, who lives in Texas; Emma, who married James Lancaster, of Minier, Illinois; Alonzo, who lives at Terry, Montana; Bertha, who is the wife of William Fulton of Ismay, Montana; and William, who lives at Ismay, Montana.

Reared on the farm where he was born, Mr. Fluss, known to his associates as Lon, had but few educational advantages, but learned to conduct a farm and generally make himself useful. He remained at home until he left Illinois for Montana, making the trip by train and landing at Terry with $35 in his pocket. He joined his brother-in-law, George W. Burt, and from November, 1900, until the following spring he helped build the sheds for caring for the sheep and the general chores on the premises and received $20 per month. In the spring Mr. Burt suggested that the young man invest in some sheep, but the latter realizing his financial condition said that it was impossible for him to do so. However, Mr. Burt, recognizing his reliability and desiring to give his wife's brother a start, told him he was willing to sell him a half interest in 2,000 of the best sheep he had ever raised, and allow him to run them on the ranch, and at the same time pay him $40 per month. In addition he proposed that he put in 900 lambs of his own and allow Mr. Fluss $40 per month addition for caring for them. They remained in partnership for seven years, during this period making no division, and then Mr. Burt sold off the sheep until but 10,000 were left, to which he gave Mr. Fluss a bill of sale for half; a half interest in eighty head of horses that had accumulated on the ranch; ten shares of bank stock to the value of $1,000, and the headquarters ranch on Powder River, where Mr. Fluss still resides, all of which Mr. Burt felt Mr. Fluss had earned by his faithfull service.

Beginning to operate alone, Mr. Fluss traded his interest in the sheep to Mr. Burt for the latter's interest in the horses and a 1,520-acre ranch on Whitney Creek. For about two years following Mr. Fluss lived at Ismay, Montana, and looked after Mr. Burt's stock interests as well as his own, while Mrs. Fluss proved up her desert claim, but at the end of the two years he returned to his old ranch where he branched out in the horse and cattle industry, adopting the brand "bar-G" under which he has since run his horses and cattle, the former being bred up to a good average Montana breed of the Percheron strain. He operates on his horse ranch of 168 acres and his ranch on Whitney Creek, and has associated with him in his business another brother-in-law, Gilbert Booth. Mr. Fluss has developed a pumping plant system of irrigation which has been in operation for eighteen years and which proves conclusively that farming can be carried on very successfully with artificial irrigation. He has forty acres under cultivation, and any time he desires to extend his system can bring 100 acres more into a state where plentiful crops can be produced.

Although Mr. Fluss cast his first vote for William Jennings Bryan for President on account of his admiration for that statesman, ever since he has voted the straight republican ticket. The bill which created Prairie County bore his name as one of the members of the first board of commissioners, and he was then elected to succeed himself. As a member of the first board Mr. Fluss was occupied in making arrangements for the proper conduct of the new county, securing quarters for the county officials, levying the first taxes in such a manner that Prairie County has the lowest tax levy in the state, building many bridges, grading roads, some of which are permanent improvements, and in other ways carrying along the routine affairs of the new section. Associated with him are H. J. Bramer and Robert Hamlin, and the fact that these three gentlemen composed the first board is evidence that the people of Prairie County are fully satisfied with the work of their representatives. In addition to the responsibilities of commissioner, Mr. Fluss discharges those pertaining to membership of the school board of District No. 5. During the progress of the Great war, Mr. Fluss contributed generously to every drive and bought heavily of the Liberty Bonds of each issue.

On March 18, 1904, Mr. Fluss was married at the home of George W. Burt at Terry, Montana, to Irva Booth, a daughter of James and Hannah (Lancaster) Booth. Mr. Booth spent his last years in Tazewell County, Illinois, where he died and is buried. Mrs. Fluss is one of the ten children born to her parents, namely: Carrie, who is the wife of William Brooks of Minier, Illinois; Gilbert, of Prairie County, Montana; Hannah, who lives at Minier, Illinois; James, who lives in Tazewell County, Illinois; Emma, who is a resident of Minier, Illinois; Mrs. Fluss and her twin sister, Mrs. Robert Pratt of Tazewell County, Illinois, who are next in order of birth; John, who lives in Tazewell County, Illinois; Harrison, who is also a resident of the same county as John; and Mattie, who married Fred Gainor of Tazewell County, Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Fluss have three children, namely: Ivy, Jay and Leo.

Scrupulously upright in his political dealing, Mr. Fluss has not only rendered valuable service to Prairie County, but made a record for himself which will always stand, and which is liable to lead to further honors in the future. Capable and honorable men are in demand and the constituents of Mr. Fluss recognize that they will be well and ably represented by him no matter what office he may be called upon to occupy for he understands conditions, is vastly proud of this region, and is willing to give to it the best of his efforts to further extend its usefulness and increase its population.

Berney E. Kempton. One of the old and prominent names of the Yellowstone Valley in the vicinity around Terry is Kempton. There is a specially warm spot in the hearts of old residents here for the memory of the late James B. Kempton, who was a rancher and business man in what is now Prairie County and by his energetic pursuit of business and forceful character helped make history and promote substantial development.

James B. Kempton was born at Jackson, Michigan, in 1843. His father, Joseph Kempton, was a native of Maine, as a young man was a sailor on whaling vessels and afterwards became a pioneer settler near Jackson, Michigan. He married Eliza Foote and James B. was one of a family of four daughters and three sons. The latter had very little education, no good schools being at hand when he was a boy. When he was about eighteen years of age the Civil war broke out and he became a member of the First Iowa Cavalry, as a volunteer and private, and served three years. He went through the war without wounds or capture, and afterwards took an active part in the Grand Army of the Republic.

From Iowa Mr. Kempton went west over the plains with a bull train and was one of the pioneers in Colorado. His settlement was thirty-five miles below Greeley at Fremont's Orchard. There in 1869 he established himself in the cattle industry, adopting as his brand "69." He owned one of the largest hay ranches on the South Platte River and maintained his home there until the spring of 1884.

In the meantime as early as 1880 he had been to Montana seeking a location for the cattle business, and selected a ranch site on Tongue River. His temporary location there was known as the "J Mule Shoe" ranch. His second ranch was on Cedar Creek, where he was an original settler and where he remained until 1890. He then moved to his third location, known as the Kempton Home Ranch, part of which he had acquired as early as 1884. For seven years he was actively identified with the Cedar Creek property and eventually turned it over to the XIT Company, the largest cattle concern in Montana. His last years were spent on what everybody about Terry knows as the Home Ranch. Here he was a breeder of the Percheron horses. He did much to introduce good horses into this section of Montana, and was also highly successful in the production of beef cattle. He carried out some valuable experiments in combining the bloods of the Shorthorn, the Hereford and the Polled Angus strains, seeking good beef qualities and a stock adapted to the range conditions of Eastern Montana. Mr. Kempton frequently shipped his livestock by train load, and was a prominent figure on all the great cattle markets, including Chicago and Sioux City. He had numerous brands, but one of his first and one that is still used is the "J Lazy J."

The Kempton Home Ranch was developed by its founder until it contained 2,000 acres. Mr. Kempton was an advocate of dry land farming and his experiments in that direction were widely beneficial to many farmers. By following his theories he raised some record crops. He introduced a ninety-day corn that proved especially valuable in the semi-arid country. His crops of Irish potatoes also were noteworthy and with an irrigation system drawn from the springs on his land he always had a flourishing garden.

Mr. Kempton was a factor in the establishment of Terry's first bank known as the State Bank of Terry, and was one of its first directors and held the office of vice president when he died. With others he was associated as a stockholder in the Ranchman's Supply Company store at Terry, an institution that did an immense business for many years. He was a known friend of the common schools and in the early days before the organization of a local district provided a private teacher for his own children. He encouraged school building and progress at Terry and though not a resident of the town was instrumental in taking the lead and securing the establishment of a splendid high school building. That building was erected so as to permit of subsequent additions, but Mr. Kempton died before the structure was completed. He was also a promoter of the Union Church at Terry. Politically he was a republican.

At Greeley, Colorado, James B. Kempton married

Miss Maria Gerry. She was a daughter of Elbridge Gerry, who was a grandson of the historic character Elbridge Gerry of New York. Mrs. Kempton was born at Laramie, Wyoming, and her mother was a full-blood Sioux Indian. James B. Kempton died August 19, 1910, and his wife on the 12th of November of the same year.

Their children were: Berney F., of Terry; Henry N., of Terry; Mrs. Sarah Harrison, of Terry; Sanford S. and Asa S., stockmen at Morristown, South Dakota; James G., of Terry; Mary, wife of Ed Phillips living at Cody, Wyoming; and Joseph, of Terry.

Successor to his father in many of the ranching activities, and a man of world-wide experience and travel, Berney F. Kempton was born on the family ranch near Greeley, Colorado, July 8, 1870. He lived there until he was about fourteen years of age and acquired his education in Colorado. It may be said that he grew up with a rope in his hand and lived the life of a cowboy and developed his latent talents by experience until he was one of the most famous of the many famous rough riders and broncho busters. His expertness attracted the attention of Doctor Carver, the famous rifle shot, and as a result of an invitation Mr. Kempton joined the Carver Wild America show in the spring of 1890 at Vienna, Austria. He went direct from the western range to Europe. He gave exhibitions of riding at Budapest, Warsaw, Moscow, Petrograd where a private performance was given for the dowager empress of Russia. While in Russia a Cossack horse that had thrown off a whole regiment was brought to the show and the Americans did the trick "double" in ten minutes. From Petrograd they went to Helsingfors, Stockholm, Copenhagen, Hamburg and Berlin. At Berlin a private performance was given for the benefit of the now ex-crown prince. At Berlin the horses were sold by raffle and the troupe then left Europe and by way of the Suez Canal traveled to Melbourne, Australia, where they showed five months in Sidney and another month was spent in various Australian cities. At Melbourne Mr. Kempton roped the first kangaroo ever caught in that manner, and says that it was an easier trick than roping wolves or antelopes on the Montana range.

The company came back by way of New Zealand, the Samoan Islands, Hawaii to San Francisco, where Mr. Kempton after eighteen months of foreign travel, separated from his companions and returned to his work on the range at Terry. Since then he has given all his time to the cattle and horse business, and has continued much of the enterprise originated and established by his father. He breeds good draft horses and during the war found a splendid market for them, contributing much of the best stuff sold at the Miles City horse sales.

In 1913 Mr. Kempton began the erection of the Kempton Hotel, now completed as a house of forty rooms. It was opened in 1915 and Mr. Kempton is its proprietor. He is also a stockholder in the Terry State Bank and in every way has shown himself one of the vigorous and public-spirited men of the community. He was a member of the Council of Defense of Prairie County during the war. In politics he is a republican, casting his first vote for Benjamin Harrison, and has never missed a presidential election. He is a member of the Royal Arch Masons, and he and his wife are members of the Eastern Star.

Mr. Kempton has been twice married. By his first marriage he has two children, Clifford S. and Bernice. The latter is the wife of Lynn Ingersoll, a rancher in Prairie County. Clifford S. served twenty months as a volunteer in the World war. For a time he was assigned to duty in Hawaii, and from there was transferred to the great artillery school at Fort Sill, Oklahoma. After his discharge he began ranching with his father.

At Morehead, Minnesota, July 20, 1909, Mr. Kempton married Miss Martha Magnuson. She was born in Wermland, Sweden, one of the six children of Magnus Elofson and Kajsa Anderson. Her father visited the United States many years ago, but spent his life as a farmer in Sweden. Mrs. Kempton came to the United States in 1905, and finished her education in the Custer County High School in 1909 and was married the same year. Her brother August is a merchant at Terry, her sister Ann is the wife of Wilbur Turner of Miles City. Mr. and Mrs. Kempton have an interesting family of five children named James B., Gerald, Edmond, John and Berney E., Jr.

J. Hiram Bickle. The name of Bickle is a pioneer one in Montana, and although J. Hiram Bickle, of Knowlton, is not as old as others in the matter of settlement, he belongs to that family and has himself been a Montana man since November, 1896. Like others of his name who have identified themselves with this commonwealth, he is a cattle man and has been ranching ever since he came here.

Mr. Bickle was born in Wisconsin, July 2, 1863, and was a lad of seven or eight years when his parents moved to Kansas. His father was William Bickle, who settled in Wisconsin some years before the Civil war, in which he himself was a soldier. He was born in England and came to the United States as a steerage passenger, when a boy, leaving his native land because of his antipathy for the government. He settled in Wisconsin at once, and gathered cranberries, sold evergreen trees and farmed for wages, and earned the money to pay the passage to this country for his parents and the other children. The family finally all settled in that state and there the parents are buried. The father also was named William and the son was one of a family of twelve children born to his parents. William Bickle acquired a fair education in England in spite of the independent character of his youth. He enlisted as a private in a Wisconsin infantry regiment during the Civil war, fought with General Sherman's army, saw a service of three years, and was never captured or wounded by the enemy. In politics he was a republican and took what interest a good citizen should in political affairs. He served as assessor of his township in Kansas, but declined reelection to the office, preferring not to serve that way. His religious faith was that of the Adventist Church. As a settler, Mr. Bickle was early in the Solomon Valley. He was ambitious to make himself a good home, and to surround himself with cattle, sheep and hogs and with the comforts their profits brought him. He died in September, 1905, at the advanced age of eighty-nine years. William Bickle married Mariette Albert, a daughter of David B. Albert, an Irishman by birth and a Wisconsin farmer. Mrs. Bickle died in July, 1917, the mother of the following children: Eva, the wife of Frank Leake, of Kearney, Nebraska; David, of Ismay, Montana; George, of Havre, Montana, where he has served many years as county sheriff; Ellen, who married John Robinson, of Beloit, Kansas; Eli, of Salina, Kansas; J. Hiram; Lena, the wife of Thomas Lester, of Portland, Oregon; Sinne, who died unmarried; Benjamin, of Sheridan, Wyoming; Ira, of Colby, Kansas; and Charles, of Seattle, Washington, who was the second in order of birth.

J. Hiram Bickle came into Montana from Kansas, in Mitchell County of which state he had grown up. His father went to Kansas in the spring of 1870 and entered a claim in the Solomon Valley, the old homestead being near the City of Beloit. He grew up as a farmer boy and the district school there gave him his educational opportunities, but he did not take advantage of them fully. Leaving home at the age of sixteen years, he began life for himself at farming and stockraising about the old Bickle home, having bought his time from his father, to whom he paid $25 per month until he came of age. When the Fort Scott, Wichita & Western Railroad was built, or under course of construction, he had teams and some time to spare and secured contracts at grading on the road between Eldorado and Newton, putting in a year at railroad work. Leaving this road, he went on the construction of the Rock Island, which was building through Northern Kansas, and did grading on the line from Formosa to Jewell City, a work in which he spent six months. He had resumed farming once since taking up the railroad work, and now again engaged in that vocation.

Mr. Bickle's first work in the State of Montana was as a sheep ranchman in the employ of his brother, David J. Bickle, and ranged on the head of Pine Creek. He was a wage-worker for eleven years, in the service of his brother, his monthly wage being at first $35, which was gradually increased to $60. He invested his surplus wages in cattle and when he started his own ranching with 126 head it was of the common cattle of the region, which he ran under the brand "3LF." This brand he abandoned and the "Tub L" has since been his chief mark. The common grades of old have disappeared and the grades of Shorthorn and White Faces have taken its place.

Beginning ranching alone, Mr. Bickle started on the head of Pine Creek, but two years later established his ranch at Knowlton, on a tributary of Locate Creek, a region in which he entered his homestead and has acquired by purchase railroad lands, having developed a ranch of 1,924 acres. All of this is under fence and stocked with both cattle and horses, which have been bred well toward the pure Percheron, a class of stock which has not been a disappointment on the Bickle ranch.

J. Hiram Bickle was married in Atchison County, Missouri, in June, 1881, to Mary E. Miers, who was born in Auglaize County, Ohio, and reared from the age of twelve years in Mitchell County, Kansas, where the family had settled on a farm. To Mr. and Mrs. Bickle there have been born: Alice, the wife of D. B. Van Cort, of Fallon County, Montana, with a daughter, Leona; George B., of Knowlton, Montana, who married Myrtle Hatton and has three children, William, Idella and Joseph; William W., on the Bickle home ranch, who married Jessie Fleet and has a daughter, Marjorie; and Gladys, who married Ed Roby, of Fallon County and has two children, William and Frances. William W. joined the heavy artillery branch of the United States Army for service in the World war and arrived overseas about the time of the signing of the armistice.

When he reached his majority Mr. Bickle shaped his politics after the republican plan and cast his first presidential vote for James G. Blaine. He has followed this preference to the present time, save in the contest of 1896, when he gave his ballot to William Jennings Bryan.

STERLING C. WEST. Coming to Montana before he reached his majority, Sterling C. West has developed with the great state, and at Jordan he found a congenial field for the expression of his business abilities, he now being proprietor of the West Mercantile Company. He was born in Texas County, Missouri, April 24, 1879, a son of Wesley and Julia (Mitchell) West, and a grandson of William West, a native of Kentucky who came to Missouri at an early day, and there married a Miss Allcock, and among their numerous children were four sons and two daughters who spent their lives in Missouri. During the war between the states, William West served in the Confederate army as a member of General Price's army.

Wesley West was born in Southwestern Missouri in 1849, and there he grew to manhood, developing into an extensive produce buyer and a man of prominence in his community. The first Mrs. West died at Licking, Missouri, when but twenty-seven years old, having borne her husband three children, namely: James, who died in young manhood; Sterling C., whose name heads this review; and Ethel, who married Russell Mann of Plentywood, Montana. Mrs. West was the daughter of Spencer Mitchell, a pioneer of Missouri, who married a Miss Thornton, and they had a large family. He enlisted in the Union army from Missouri during the war between the states and was killed on the battle field. In private life he was a farmer. After the death of his first wife Wesley West was married to Martha Willliams, but they had no children.

Sterling C. West was reared amid truly rural surroundings and was early taught the dignity of honest labor by his parents. After attending the local country schools he entered the Licking High School, from which he was later graduated. For a time after his graduation Mr. West was engaged in teaching in the country regions surrounding his native place, but the ambitious young man could not rest content with what he considered inactive employment and so came to Montana where he felt he could take part in the changes constantly taking place. His first employment after coming to the state was secured as a member of the sales force of Hedrick Brothers of Culbertson, and remained with this firm for fifteen years during that period learning merchandising in a most thorough manner. He then formed a partnership with C. A. Wittmeier under the caption of the Wittmeier-West Company, which developed into one of the sound mercantile concerns of Culbertson. In addition to his connection with this firm, Mr. West became a director of the Citizens State Bank and was a member of the city council of Culbertson during the period that the city installed a $40,000 waterworks plant, providing for the payment of it through bonds. In 1914 Mr. West and his partner sold their mercantile establishment, and much to the disappointment of their fellow citizens, left Culbertson, where they had been very dominant factors, Mr. West coming direct to Jordan, buying out the store then owned by H. L. Baldwin, but established by William C. Henderson, the pioneer merchant of Jordan. Since becoming the proprietor of this establishment, Mr. West has made it the leading commercial enterprise of the county seat, and carries a general line of carefully selected and timely stock, which his excellent connections enable him to offer at specially reasonable figures. Mr. West has been instrumental in securing the erection of the Jordan Flour Mill, and is president of the company operating this plant.

The marriage of Mr. West took place when he was united with Miss Clara Erickson at Vermillion, South Dakota. She was born August 9, 1883, in the vicinity of Vermillion, a daughter of Martin Erickson, a native of Norway, who came to the United States in boyhood, and passed the greater part of his subsequent life at or near Vermillion as a farmer. The eldest of the children born to her parents, Mrs. West was graduated from the University of South Dakota in 1907, with the degree of Master of Arts, and was engaged in teaching in the high school course when she met Mr. West, although she had taught at Emmettsburg and Eagle, Iowa, before coming to Montana. Mr. and Mrs. West have two children, namely: Sterling C., Jr., and Shirley Eleanor.

Mr. West cast his first presidential ballot for William Jennings Bryan in 1900, and has continued to vote the democratic ticket ever since when national issues are in question. The fraternal affiliations of Mr. West are with the Masonic order and he is a member of Culbertson Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and is past worthy patron of Culbertson Chapter, Order of Eastern Star, to which his wife also belongs. Both he and Mrs. West are active members of the Presbyterian Church, the faith of which best expresses their religious belief, and while at Culbertson he was superintendent of the Sunday school, and he is giving the Jordan Sunday school the same attention. An elder of the church, Mr. West attended the general assembly held at Columbus, Ohio, in 1907, and has been a delegate to a number of the synods of Montana, through this service gaining a pleasant acquaintance with the various pastors of his denomination in the state. During the late war Mr. West rendered very effective and valuable service in the various loan and other war campaigns, and not only was very generous in his own subscriptions but was able to induce a number of others to subscribe, who, but for his efforts might have remained slackers. In every respect he measures up to the best requirements of American manhood and citizenship, and Jordan is fortunate in acquiring him.

CHARLES DALY. The experiences of Charles Daly, ranchman of the Stacey locality of Powder River County, are many and varied, and during all of them he has never lost his great faith in this region, which has been justified by his success along all lines he has entered. He was born near Hamilton, Hancock County, Illinois, May 9, 1858, a son of Charles Daly, born at Listowel, County Kerry, Ireland, who came to the United States in young manhood. A stone mason by trade, he found ample opportunities for work in New York City, but drifted westward, finally reaching Butler County, Nebraska, where he homesteaded and there spent a number of years. He was married in New York City to a young lady who had crossed the Atlantic on the same ship as he, but as she died when her son, Charles Daly, was an infant, her name is not known to him. In addition to Charles, she had a daughter, Margaret, who is married and living in Kansas, and a son, J. H. Daly, who is living in Miles City. After her death, the father was married to Julia Hamilton, and they had three children, namely: Peter F., who lives at Miles City; Annie, who became the wife of Lewis M. Griffin, and died near Stacey, Montana; and Stephen C., who lives at Moorcroft, Wyoming.

Charles Daly, the younger, whose name heads this review, attended the country schools of Hancock County, Illinois, and Butler County, Nebraska, and when he was seventeen years old ran away from home and for eighteen months did not let his father know anything of his whereabouts. He boarded a train at Columbus, Nebraska, and "beat his way" from there to Corinne, Utah, and he owes the Union Pacific Railroad for that ride to this day. Corinne was then the freight forwarding point for Montana, as at that time not a rail of railroad had been laid on Montana soil. Mr. Daly's advent into Montana was in October, 1875, when he came to the territory with a freight wagon bringing an outfit of mules.

Liking the locality, Mr. Daly decided to remain in Montana and first stopped near the present site of Dillon, finding employment as a sheep-herder for Poindexter & Orr and for R. A. Reynolds. After a year he went to the Great Falls locality, engaging there with the firm of Potts, Weston and Gillette, stockmen. The senior member of this firm was a distinguished man of Montana, serving it for twelve years as territorial governor. After three years with this firm, Mr. Daly went to Beaverhead County, securing work on the ranch owned by R. A. Reynolds. There he remained until the fall of 1880, at which time he trailed cattle and sheep for Poindexter and Orr to Miles City. They wintered their stock on the Liscom ranch, but Mr. Daly returned to Beaverhead County, and remained until the spring of 1881. At that time he came to Custer County, bringing with him 600 head of sheep, and this marked the beginning of his career in his present region. His first winter was spent on Powder River, but in the spring of 1882 he located near the head of Little Pumpkin, and has remained here ever since.

As the nucleus of his ranch, Mr. Daly homesteaded, and upon it he built his first real home in Montana, a log cabin, 18 by 18 feet, without a floor, and covered with poles and dirt. A single door afforded light, ventilation and entrance or egress. Here Mr. Daly lived alone until the fall of 1883 when he was joined by his father and brothers who came from the old Nebraska farm. During the earlier period Mr. Daly marketed his mutton and wool at Miles City, sixty-one miles away, where was then located the only postoffice in the region. The prices were so low as to make it almost impossible for him to carry on, sometimes being as low as 8 cents per pound, a contrast to the 55 cents per pound Mr. Daly received for his clip during the late war. He also lost heavily on account of the severity of the winters, but he persisted in his endeavors, and at one time had as many as 8,000 head of sheep. Now he runs only about 1,500 head. As time went on, he began to experiment with cattle in a small way, and he now has a large herd, favoring Herefords. He has shipped practically every hoof he has produced to the Chicago market. When he began to realize the changes which were pending owing to the closing of the open range, Mr. Daly began to curtail his stock production and turn his attention to grain growing, and has been just as successful in it, as he has been in his stock business. His ranch now comprises more than ten sections of land along the Little and Big Pumpkin creeks. In wheat his best acre yield has been thirty-five bushels, while in corn it has been as high as thirty bushels, and he has never failed to harvest a paying crop of both. His oats have done well, yielding as high as fifty bushels per acre.

Coming here before Montana was surveyed, and before there was a municipal boundary line of any kind, Mr. Daly has developed with the state, and has naturally been called upon to assume some of the responsibility of public office. Always affiliating with the republican party, he has oftentimes represented his district as a delegate to the county conventions, or served on the county committee of his party. For two years he was under sheriff for Sheriff Gibb, and in 1910 was elected county commissioner to succeed Charles Huckins. His associates during his first term were R. T. Furnish and W. A. Cameron, and later they were Robert Yokley and J. R. McKay. For six years he continued to look after the business of the county, and during his incumbency of this office considerable road work and bridge building was done, and the County of Powder River was organized from Custer County. He had under consideration the issuance of bonds for refunding, and in other ways improved the financial condition of the county through his able handling of public matters.

On July 26, 1887, Mr. Daly was united in marriage with Abigail E. Payett, a daughter of Lewis Payett, who came to Montana in 1876, four years in advance of his family, and located at Miles City, which he served as postmaster, and he was also associated with the Diamond Mercantile Company of that place. Still later he was engaged in a restaurant and confectionery business, and subsequently was in the retail liquor trade. His birth occurred at Worcester, Massachusetts, but he later went to St. Paul, Minnesota, where he was married to Grace Haggarty, and still later was located at Bismarck, Dakota. It was from the latter point that Mrs. Payett brought their children to Montana, coming up the Yellowstone River, the trip taking nine days, she arriving at her destination, Miles City, in 1880. Considering the difficulties of navigation, it appears like a dream that a steamboat was able to get through. Mr. and Mrs. Payett had the following children: Doctor Charles, who lives at Duluth, Minnesota; Annie, who married Fred Merrill, lives at Helena, Montana; Mrs. Daly, who was born April 7, 1868, at St. Paul, Minnesota; Mrs. Arthur Pellittier, Montana; Lewis and Mollie, who are twins, the former of whom is living on the Daly ranch, and the latter of whom is deceased, never having been married. Mr. Payett survives and although seventy-seven years of age, is in possession of his faculties and makes his home with Mr. and Mrs. Daly. All his life he has voted the democratic ticket.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Daly are as follows: Marian G., who is the wife of Valentine Loesch of Missoula, Montana, has six children, Francis, Charles, Valentine, Daly, Marian and Genevieve; Lucile, who married Robert Chesworth of the Stacey locality, has a son, Melvin; Frank, who was in the National army at Camp Lewis, during the late war; and Mollie, who married Ray Bartholomew of Broadus, Montana. Mr. Daly is a Mason of prominence, belonging to the Blue Lodge, Chapter, Commandery and Mystic Shrine. He is also an Elk.

PAUL BAKER. There was a time not so very far back in the past when the dry lands of Montana were regarded as absolutely worthless for agricultural purposes, but through the enterprise of ranchmen of advanced ideas, these lands have been redeemed through irrigation and yield bountiful harvests, adding to the tillable acreage of the country and giving to those, who deserve them, valuable ranches, for they have won them through the hardest kind of labor and the exercise of ingenuity in devising means to bring to an arid soil the moisture so necessary to it. One of the men who belongs to this class is Paul Baker, postmaster of Garland and owner of a fine ranch on Tongue River in Custer County. He was born in Oxfordshire, England, March 20, 1851, a son of William Baker, and is one of the latter's six surviving children. Paul Baker has three sisters living in America, namely: Mrs. Blanche Clare of Seattle, Washington; Kate Baker of Los Angeles, California; and Mrs. Wright Porritt of Alberta, Canada. Paul Baker was reared in Harfordshire, attending school at Cambridge, and his life, until 1880, was spent upon an English farm.

In 1880, Paul Baker left his native land, sailing from Liverpool, England, on the Sardinian, and landing at Halifax, from whence he went to Emerson, Canada, and later to Winnipeg, Canada. He then traveled to Holland, Manitoba, with ox teams, and for twelve years was engaged in ranching, raising grain, but conditions were such that he did not make a success of this undertaking, and decided to come to the United States, so in 1892 he came to Montana, in April of that year locating on the railroad land he still occupies, his family joining him in the fall. At that time his ranch on Tongue River was far removed from any other settlements, and on it he erected a log house which is the main portion of his present residence, although it has been so changed and added to that it presents but little likeness to the original home. For some time he worked for other settlers in addition to caring for the few sheep he had bought, and in time developed some industry in wool and accumulated some hundreds of head of sheep, but reverses came to him and he abandoned the business. Realizing the possibilities of grain farming provided the land was properly irrigated, Mr. Baker installed his own irrigating plant, filling his ditches with water from Tongue River by means of a centrifugal pump, so that he is now independent of rainfall, and he now grows grain, does general farming and raises cattle and sheep, and is one of the most prosperous ranchmen in the county.

At the time Mr. Baker located on his ranch, his home was placed in school district No. 1, the Miles City district, and the school term was held in a room of a neighbor's house. When set off to themselves, this community became district No. 11, and a school house was erected, and Mr. Baker was made clerk of the school board, serving as such for some years. On February 23, 1909, he was appointed postmaster of Garland, and the office was moved to his premises. In national matters, Mr. Baker is a republican, but has not sought office, preferring to do his duty as a citizen in the capacity of a layman.

On October 31, 1871, Mr. Baker was married at London, England, to Miss Annie Roberta Neal, a daughter of James and Jane (Allcot) Neal. The Neals were Chichester people, and Mr. Neal was a banker of Harfordshire, England. Mrs. Baker has two brothers, namely: Walter, who is a civil engineer of Miles City, Montana; and William A., who lives at Sidney, Australia. Mr. and Mrs. Baker have the following children: Walter William, who is a ranchman of the Tongue River district; Lillie, who married Archibald Hume of Wilbur, Oregon; Paul Montague, who is also a ranchman on the Tongue River; Maud, who married Henry W. Trapp, of the Garland region of Custer County, has two children; James Archibald, who died from the effects of a stroke of lightning, was married to Bertha Hines and left a daughter, Dorothy Belle; Charles Walton, who is a ranchman near Garland, married Ouida Van Dyke, and has a daughter, Frances; Ernest and Irwin, twins, who are at home; and Kate Evaline, who is the youngest, is also at home. The Baker family is one of the most representative in Custer County, and having passed through so many of the hardships incident to pioneer life, its members are now entitled to receive the honors and enjoy the advantages accruing from their persistence and intelligence.

WILKIN CRAIG MCDOWELL. It is not so many years ago that the great fertile ranches of Montana were undeveloped Government lands over which roamed at will wild animals and the equally wild redskins. Land in other regions better watered was eagerly taken up by the western pioneers, and the first to enter the state to make permanent homes thought of this section as merely cattle and sheep ranges. The more far-sighted realized that the possibilities of Montana as an agricultural state were practically unlimited provided the arid regions were irrigated, and crops planted in other parts which would flourish in the sandy soil. These men secured noble holdings, bent every energy to develop them, and to them is due the credit for the present remarkable wealth and standing of the state. One of these "oldtimers" as to length of occupancy of the Tongue River district, although a man still in the prime of life, is Wilkin Craig McDowell, owner of a magnificent ranch in the vicinity of Brandenburg, along the Tongue River. He was born in Franklin County, Pennsylvania, October 10, 1853, a son of John McDowell, whose forebears, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, came to the American colonies from Ireland about 1720, making settlement in Pennsylvania, where a fort was named Fort McDowell for the family. From this branch of the McDowell family have come many distinguished men and women of the name, including Gen. Irwin McDowell of Mexican and Civil war fame.

John McDowell operated a mill and distillery, and also was numbered among the farmers. His life was spent in a private capacity, although he was well known for his integrity and achievements, and could have entered public life had he so desired. John McDowell married a granddaughter of Col. John Allison, the founder of Greencastle, Pennsylvania, Margaret McLanahan, born in Franklin County, Pennsylvania, and she died in 1889, her funeral sermon being preached by Doctor Hibben, the present head of Princeton University. Mrs. McDowell had survived her husband for several years, he having died in 1882 while on a visit to the ranch of his son, W. C. McDowell, at that time being eighty-one years old. The children born to this worthy couple were as follows: Allison, who served with the Anderson troop famous for its bravery during the Civil war, died at Chambersburg, Pennsylvania; Tench, who also died at Chambersburg; Samuel, who was killed during the Civil war, while serving as captain of an artillery company; Minnie, who lives at Chambersburg; Jack Van Leer, who died in childhood; W. C., whose name heads this review; and George, who is also deceased.

Growing up at Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, Wilkin Craig McDowell attended the local schools, and had the good fortune to be appointed a midshipman in 1870 and attended the naval academy at Annapolis, Maryland, for three years, and during that period was on two of the first home practice cruisers, going to Halifax, Nova Scotia, and Newport, Rhode Island. Among his instructors were Admirals Schley, Sampson, Dewey and Taylor, of whom Admiral Dewey was the commanding officer of the old ship Constitution to whom he reported. Among his classmates were Admirals Fisk, Hodgson and Fletcher, men who have become famous during the late war as naval commanders.

Leaving the navy, Mr. McDowell returned to Pennsylvania, and from there came West in company with James Sharp, a Pennsylvanian friend, who had been in California. They decided to go to the Owl Creek country in Wyoming, but the land they there wanted was entered by an ex-army officer before they could secure rights to it, and so they went on into the Wind River country, traversing the Wind River, and crossing the Big Horn. They lost themselves and were almost famished for lack of water in the Bad water country, but after frightful suffering and privations unknown today, they reached a water hole, and finally came to the settlements on the Platte River, now near Casper, Wyoming. With Mr. McDowell and James Sharp was another brave young adventurer, Bob Gracey, the last two having a saddle horse and a team. Leaving the Platte River settlement, the little party went on to Fort Fetterman, and then up to Fort McKinney. There Mr. McDowell met Lieutenant McCaleb, a graduate from West Point, whom he had met while at the academy. Passing through Buffalo, which was then a village of frontier cabins, and a rendezvous for horse thieves and containing only ten women, nine of whom were dance hall girls, they reached Milestown, where they found a number of buffalo hunters. At this point they heard of the Tongue River country, and made their way to it, arriving in the autumn, pitching their tent on its banks. Mr. Sharp remained in the locality for a number of years as a sheep man, but finally left it, and going to Washington, died in that state during the year 1905. Mr. Gracey went at once to California.

It was in September, 1881, when W. C. McDowell established himself along the Tongue River, nine years before the Government surveyed this region, and he occupies the "squatter" claim of "Honest Ben Walker" the trapper. He was an Englishman who spent the active years of his life on the frontier and among the Indians and army camps of the West. During an altercation with another settler Ben Walker was killed while holding the Walker's claim at the head of the Tongue River. When Mr. McDowell and his friends parted company, he bought their team, and in 1882 went further west and purchased cattle, locating them along the Tongue River. He was second only to Captain Howes in entering the cattle business in this region, and with the exception of the severe weather during winter, 1886-7, prospered greatly, until failing health forced him to abandon its exacting demands. His attention is now given to mixed horses and cattle of the range strain. The first roundup on his range was held in 1883, starting on Otter Creek, going down the Tongue River, and finishing on Captain Howes' ranch, which now belongs to Milligan & Dilger.

While no Indian depredations occurred in the vicinity of Mr. McDowell's ranch, the red skins were occasionally on the war path, leaving the reservation and killing stock and frequently a cowboy or a sheepman. Finally their madness ceased and good Indians began to infest the region from Fort Keogh, of the tribe of Cheyennes, captured and pacified by General Miles and his army. White Bull, one of the Cheyenne chiefs, still survives, and is one of the frontier characters of the Tongue River country, although somewhat a failure as a useful citizen.

For eighteen years after he came to Montana, Mr. McDowell remained a bachelor, and kept "open house" for any traveler. Oftentimes his floor was covered by the beds of perfect strangers who were enjoying his hospitality for a night. He named his house "Skull Shack," from an Indian skull he had found and fastened over the door. Subsequently he named his ranch the "7-C" after his cowbrand. During the pioneer period, settlers hunted the white-tail deer for a pastime. The boxing gloves owned by Mr. McDowell, always challenged "stopovers" at the ranch to friendly fistic encounters. Real enjoyment of a social nature was found at the dances, although to get to them it was often necessary to ride eighty or more miles. A few preachers came through the country, and once a colporteur passed along, distributing Bibles and reminding the settlers that there was still a God.

On October 10, 1898, Mr. McDowell was married at Miles City to Mrs. Fannie (Rogers) McGurk, a daughter of O. F. Rogers, a genuine frontiersman, who crossed the plains to California, spending the winter of 1849 in Salt Lake, Utah, at that time being engaged in taking a herd of cattle to San Francisco. After reaching the latter city he was a stockman and miner, both there and in Nevada, and came from Elko County, Nevada, to Dillon, Montana, in 1884. The following year he established himself at Miles City, as a cattle man, there dying in October, 1917, when lacking only a month of being ninety years old. Mr. Rogers was born at Mansfield, Ohio, which place was named for his grandfather Mann. He married Mary Woody, a daughter of William Berry Woody, whose wife was Frances DuFour, a daughter of an officer on the staff of General LaFayette, who came with the French contingent to aid the colonists in securing American Independence. Mrs. Rogers died in 1914 at the age of seventy-nine years. Mrs. McDowell has one full brother, Fred Rogers, who lives in Rosebud County, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. McDowell have no children.

When Mary Woody, the mother of Mrs. McDowell crossed the plains to California in 1850, from Ottumwa, Iowa, she saw many exciting and painful incidents, the most unpleasant being the lynching of a man, who was hung with a rope from the limb of a tree. This gruesome sight no doubt terrified the young girl who had been delicately reared on her father's big plantation in Georgia, where her wants were ministered to by the slaves, also the property of her father. Upon her arrival in California, she settled at Placerville. Were there sufficient space in this history, the many incidents of the McDowell family and their connections, would fill many pages, and all of them would be interesting reading.

Both Mr. and Mrs. McDowell are intelligently interested in political matters, he espousing the principles of the republican party, while she is equally enthusiastic in her belief in the ones advocated by the democrats. For a number of years Mrs. McDowell has been an earnest member and effective worker of the Episcopal Church of Miles City.

CHARLES BLAINE MARRS. That Montana has been a faithful and generous friend to those who have had confidence in her and the development of her natural resources which was bound to come, is shown in the history of many of the substantial ranchmen of today. They entered the state with no capital, and yet have had the opportunity, which when seized, leads on to fame and fortune. One of these men who is typical of the great spirit of the West, and who has reaped bountifully from the planting of hard work and natural inclination toward ranch life, is Charles Blaine Marrs of the Jordan community of Garfield County.

Charles Blaine Marrs was born in Indian Territory between Vinita and the Kansas line on May 25, 1876, a son of Urbin Marrs, a stockman and farmer of that region, born in Indiana, but reared in Illinois, where he was married to Mary Clark, a native of Illinois. In 1884 Urbin Marrs took his family to the State of Washington, where he took up a claim from the lower Yakima County, and there he spent the rest of his life. He and his wife had the following children: William, who lives at Toppenish, Washington; Charles B., who was second in order of birth; David and Fred, twins, whose whereabouts are unknown; Annie, who married Samuel Snodgrass of Grenola, Kansas; and Mattie, who married Eugene Campbell, died at Coffeyville, Kansas.

Charles Blaine Marrs was eight years old when his parents moved to Washington, and he lived in that state until after they died, and then, in 1893, he and another orphan lad started out for Montana on horseback. They found that the trip was going to be too difficult so sold their outfits, Mr. Marrs receiving $2.50 in cash and a silver watch for his, while his companion received $10 for his. They took the train to Harve, Hill County, Montana, and there Mr. Marrs obtained a few days' work on a ranch. He had previously had experience in this line of work, and young as he was could handle horses like an expert. When he completed his first job, he went with a sheep outfit in the Bearpaw Mountains, but was not satisfied until he went to work for the "KS-bar" horse outfit on the Yellowstone River, twelve miles east of Miles City. The highest price paid "Horse wranglers" was $40 per month and he commanded it, and during the two years he was with this outfit, like the majority of his associates, spent every cent he earned in what they termed "having a good time." During all of this period, and in fact as long as his boyhood companion lived, Mr. Marrs kept in touch with him, their early hardships forming a bond not easily severed.

Leaving the horse outfit, Mr. Marrs went with the "LU-bar," a cattle outfit on the Little Dry, the site of its headquarters now being occupied by the post-office of Cohagen. There he rode the range and punched cattle for a year, going then with the "L-7" outfit owned by the Lake Toombs Cattle Company, with which he remained for two years, riding up and down the Big Dry about Jordan, and was given charge of the "W-bar" outfit, Perry Wibaux cattle, at the mouth of the Little Dry. That company closing out in two years, Mr. Marrs went back to the "U-bar" for another year. During this time he was trading in horses, tending bar at Jordan, and acting as deputy sheriff, under Sheriffs Andrew Larsen and D. J. Wynn, his occupancy of this position extending over five years. In 1911 he accepted the appointment of state game warden under Henry Avare, and has held that position ever since. He entered his homestead less than two miles east of Jordan, and has developed it into a real home with a mere suggestion of a farm. Here since 1910 he has been ranching, having a partner, Floyd Dillefoon in his operations, the two running their stock under the brand "quarter circle M" on the left ribs.

When Mr. Marrs came into Montana pioneer conditions generally prevailed. His advent into the Jordan community occurred before there was a building standing on the present site of the city, which was then an open range, the property of anyone who cared to run cattle on it. Deer, antelope, wolves and coyotes disputed the right of the cattle to the range, and now and then a bear was found. Being one of the first to locate here Mr. Marrs has naturally been connected with much of the development of this section, and as deputy sheriff aided in curbing the lawlessness which always prevails in frontier regions. He and his partner contributed a business house to the upbuilding of Jordan, and they also own a companion building. Mr. Marrs and other public-spirited men of Jordan contributed the money to erect two halls in which the young people of the place could enjoy dancing, and he has been foremost in other ways in making this a pleasant and desirable place of residence. In politics he is a democrat. He belongs to Miles City Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and also to Miles City Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On February 7, 1915, Mr. Marrs was united in marriage with Mrs. Sarah Shantz, a daughter of Melvin Warren of Aberdeen, South Dakota, a barber by trade and a dealer in blooded horses. He and his wife had two sons and two daughters. By her first marriage Mrs. Marrs has a son, Warren Shantz, but she and Mr. Marrs have no children.

The day of the cowboy and open range has passed, but the memories of that period remain with those who were privileged to participate in the stirring events, and are recalled with pleasure. Many of the men who rode range in those days drifted away with the closing up of the free grazing land, but some remained and changing their mode of operation, entered homesteads and developed into prosperous ranchmen and fine citizens. This could not have happened, however, if they had not possessed the characteristics which make for such prosperity, courage, broad vision, untiring industry and a faith in the future of the region with which they had cast their lot, and that these were had in marked degree by Mr. Marrs, his present success proves beyond any cavil.

George Warren Brewster was one of the earliest settlers along the picturesque Tongue River, and made a distinctive place for himself in that region of Montana. From 1882 until his death, April 12, 1912, he shed a healthy and virtuous influence as a citizen upon those about him and rarely has a community suffered a greater loss than that which befell the Birney locality when Mr. Brewster was taken out of it. He was a leader in thought and action, was a molder of community sentiment, was a vigorous exponent of clean living and virtuous thinking and acting, and society as well as nature responded to his touch.

He was born in Boston, Massachusetts, December 18, 1856, and grew up in an intellectual atmosphere, and proved himself worthy of the splendid traditions of his ancestry. He inherited his pioneer instincts partly from his renowned forefather, Elder William Brewster, whose leadership in the old Plymouth Colony of Massachusetts is a fact known to every student of American history. Brewsters in all the eight generations since Elder William have stamped the impress of their characters upon the nation's development and have been represented in the professions, the sciences, statesmanship and industry.

George Warren Brewster's parents were Nathan C. and Mary (Beaton) Brewster. His father was born at Duxbury, Massachusetts, and when a young man moved to Boston and engaged in business. His wife came to Massachusetts with her parents from Cape Breton Island.

George Warren Brewster graduated from the Partridge Academy at Duxbury, Massachusetts, and at the age of nineteen left the cultured atmosphere of Boston to identify himself with the West. He had associated with college bred men and women, had studied science and literature, and he fulfilled the requirements of a college bred man. His first experience to the far West was at Virginia City, Nevada, and in the fall of 1880 he went north to Montana and spent about two years in the mines around Butte. He came into the region which was his home for thirty years on a hunting expedition. He was an expert with the rifle, and was not only a hunter of big game but his prowess in that sport made him feared and respected by the Indians who occasionally sought to dispute his right to the country along Tongue River. He built up a splendid stock industry there and acquired title to a large estate on both sides of the river and left that as a monument to his business ability and as a legacy to his sons. Mr. Brewster is remembered as a man of courage and independence, with a faculty for reaching proper conclusions through the processes of reasoning, and his honesty of purpose won him leadership among his fellows. He was three times sent to the Lower House of the Montana Legislature, and proved a worthy representative and a thoughtful and logical legislator.

In the frontier home which he built along the Tongue River he lived as a bachelor until his marriage in 1896 to Miss Grace Sanborn. She was born at Greeley, Colorado, and was a Normal school graduate. Her father, John Sanborn, was a native of Vermont, and one of the founders of Union Colony, which settled in Colorado under the leadership of Horace Greeley and Meeker in 1871. Mr. Sanborn married Jerusha Davis, a sister of Gen. George W. Davis, who afterward served as military governor of Porto Rico, inspector general in the Philippines, and still later was a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission. John Sanborn died in 1876. Mr. and Mrs. Brewster had three sons: George Warren, Lyman Sanborn and Burton Bradley, who have taken hold of the ranch and are today actively identified with the development and management of it. On January 24, 1916, at the governor's mansion in Cheyenne, Wyoming, Mrs. Brewster became the wife of John Arnold. Mr. Arnold came to the Brewster ranch as a young man from King George County, Virginia, where his family is one of old and highly connected prominence. He was foreman of the Brewster ranch when its founder passed away, and associated with his wife and the young sons is directing head of the property, and has been instrumental in greatly extending the area and business activities during the past half dozen years.

William Edgar Wear. Residents of Carter County, Montana, especially those in the locality of Ekalaka, will refer with interest and pleasure to the following brief reference to the pioneer and well-known citizen whose name forms the caption to this review, William Edgar Wear. His residence began in 1885 in the locality where he has passed his active life. His father, Robert F. Wear, came into this region in 1864 and engaged in prospecting and mining in Alder Gulch, Madison County. After following that work about two years he left the territory and located in Elco County, Nevada, engaging in stock raising and small farming there from 1869 to 1883, when he returned to Montana. He established himself on a tributary of Little Beaver, at what the Indians called "Corner Springs." He came across the trail with horses, and the initial work of ranching began here with both cattle and horses. At that time he was not a man of wealth, and his first shelter for the family was a log cabin of one room, in which he and his older sons lived. In 1885 the other members of the family came, but they remained in Miles City until some years later; when they gathered together at the ranch. Mr. Wear was never able to exercise his homestead right, as the land upon which he settled was not declared open to entry until after his death, at which time his son Edward filed upon it and has built up the ranch there. Robert Wear ran his stock under several brands, first "crown W," then "the ace of clubs," but, selling both these brands, he later adopted "J—," which has been used ever since by the family. Mr. Wear took an intelligent citizen's part in the public affairs of Custer County, and served two terms as county commissioner. In politics he was a democrat and in religion a Presbyterian.

Mr. Wear was born in Cooper County, Missouri, on August 26, 1835, received a common school education, and in 1864 left the state for Montana, making the trips with ox teams. His wife and daughter were with him and they saw several small bands of Indians, as well as signs of their depredations, but they were not molested. Mr. Wear married Louisa McCutcheon, who was born in the same county as he. Her death occurred in 1878. Their children who grew to maturity were as follows: Annabelle, who married Nathan Spangler, of Zero, Montana; William Edgar, of this sketch; Mary Cora, the wife of John Orrick, of Billings, Montana; James, deceased; and Thomas, of Miles City.

William E. Wear was born on January 22, 1866, in Madison County, Montana, and secured his education in the district schools of that neighborhood and at Miles City. He began his active connection with the stock business with his father, succeeding the latter at his death. His cattle brand was first "C," then "16" and then the "J—." He has been breeding mainly to the Hereford cattle and has made many shipments of stock to the Chicago markets. He has been progressive and enterprising in his methods, and his efforts have been rewarded with a due measure of success.

Mr. Wear was married at Rapid City, South Dakota, on December 25, 1895, to Nellie Izora Miller, who was born June 10, 1872, in Beatrice, Nebraska, the daughter of Riley and Louisa (Bacon) Miller, the former of whom was a native of Indiana, while the latter was born in Ohio. Mr. Miller was a farmer by vocation, came to the Black Hills in early days, and was held in high esteem by all who knew him. During the Civil war he enlisted from Iowa as a member of Company G, Eighth Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Cavalry. To Mr. and Mrs. Miller were born the following children: Edna May was the wife of George B. Ross and died at Nisland, South Dakota; Bertha was the wife of Charles Outet and died at Osowkes, Kansas; Nellie Izora, Mrs. Wear; William, of Chadron, Nebraska; Myrtle, wife of William McGowan, of Otoe, Iowa; Pearl, wife of Walter Maxwell, of Ekalaka; Ada, the wife of Carl Adams, of Twin Bridges, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Wear have an adopted son, Robert G., who was born on October 27, 1914.

Politically Mr. Wear is a democrat. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Foresters and the Daughters of Rebekah, and is a past grand in the first named order. In his religious views he leans to the Presbyterian Church, though he is a liberal supporter of the Union congregation at Ekalaka. His life has been a busy one, his every-day affairs making heavy demands upon his time, yet he has never shrunk from his duties as a citizen and his obligations to his neighbors and his friends. He has always given his unreserved support to every movement for the welfare of the people, and enjoys their unlimited confidence and good will.

Clarence Taffner. Upon the roll of representative citizens of Southeastern Montana appears the name of Clarence Taffner, widely known as one of the most successful sheep raisers of the state. He is also entitled to notice as a pioneer of that section of the country known as the great Northwest. From his early years he has been industrious and persevering in whatever enterprises he undertook, and by diligence and good management has accumulated a comfortable competency. He played a prominent part in aiding to lay the foundation on which the superstructure of the country's present prosperity and progress was erected, and thus he is entitled to permanent representation in a work of the character of the one in hand.

Clarence Taffner is descended from old Holland stock, the first member of the family to come to this country having been his grandfather, who settled near Schenectady, New York. His son, Mr. Taffner's father, Volney Taffner, was also born in Holland and is said to have served in the Dutch navy in his younger days. Mr. Taffner is also related to the Gateses and Drakes of Revolutionary fame, and he at one time owned the revolutionary uniform of Captain Gates, his mother's uncle. Volney Taffner was reared on the paternal homestead in New York and there married Malinda Little. After their marriage they moved to Michigan, in the pioneer days of that section, following relatives who had preceded them there about 1832. Volney Taffner settled at Hillsdale, but subsequently he moved to Indiana, where he died. To them were born three children, namely: William V., of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Clarence, of this review, and Charles H., of Sheridan, Wyoming.

Clarence Taffner left Michigan when about seventeen years of age, pointing his face westward. He had planned to identify himself with the stock business, and to that end he came to Sidney, Nebraska, where he left the railroad and struck up the Platte River to the old "P-F" ranch, forty miles east of Fort Laramie. There he obtained employment as a cowboy and rode the ranges for two years. Then he crossed over north to Fort Casper and went to work for the "CY" outfit, with whom he spent two years. Going then to Northern Wyoming, Mr. Taffner joined the "PK" outfit, which ranged its stock over the Sheridan locality and had its camp on Soldier Creek. At that time buffaloes were so thick in that locality that the cattlemen were compelled to drive them out in order to occupy the region with their cattle and other stock. Mr. Taffner remained in that region until 1902, having spent the intervening years chiefly in riding the ranges for others, although he owned a few head of stock himself, and had done some freighting from Sheridan to outlying points. In the year named, when he came to Montana, he brought some sheep with him and he spent the first winter on Willow Creek, where he found Richard A. Selway. The two men combined their flocks, Mr. Taffner looking after the stock while Mr. Selway gave his attention to the outside business. In the spring of 1908 Mr. Taffner occupied the site of his present ranch, where he has been located continuously since, and in the sheep business uninterruptedly up to the fall of 1919, when, the drought having prevented the raising of winter forage, he disposed of his flock and was practically out of the business for the first time since he located here.

The Taffner sheep were always noted for their quality and productivity. The pioneer bunch brought by him to Willow Creek was the common fine wool sheep, and these he bred into the Oxfords and the Cotswolds, thereby securing a decided improvement in both size and quality. One big improvement was in the yield of wool. While the average clip was around ten pounds, numerous yearlings of the flock sheared fifteen and seventeen pounds of wool, some of the clip measuring nine inches in length. Mr. Taffner's progressive spirit was shown when he bought some of the finest rams in the country, including the international champion buck of William Cooper & Son of Chicago, and George Allen's winner of the American Royal Stock Show prize at Kansas City. He imported bucks of the Oxford strain from John Graham & Son of Eldora, Iowa, and A. J. Knolien of Pocatello, Idaho. Mr. Taffner also brought into this locality the first sheep shearing machine, the successful operation of which he demonstrated, and thereafter for several years he handled the machine throughout this locality. Thus briefly are shown facts which indicate the progressive and enterprising spirit which has actuated Mr. Taffner in all his operations, and this has been one of the chief contributing factors to his success. He has been a leader among the stock raisers of his section.

On July 16, 1913, in Rapid City, South Dakota, Mr. Taffner was married to Mrs. Addie Bell, who was a native of Wyandot County, Ohio. Mrs. Taffner, whose maiden name was Lake, had previously been married to a Mr. Lynch, by whom she has a son, Leroy, of Kansas City, Missouri. Mr. Taffner had children by a former marriage as follows: Volney, who was killed by a stroke of lightning in young manhood; Horatio, who died in 1918 at the hands of an assassin; and John, the youngest child, was a soldier during the recent World war.

Mr. Taffner was born and bred a republican, and is intensely loyal to his country. Patriotism has been a distinguishing feature of his family, a number of his family having been soldiers of the Union during the Civil war. He has usually supported the straight republican ticket in national elections, though of late years he has inclined to the progressive branch of the party. However, in local elections he disregards party lines and gives his support to the men whom he considers best qualified for the offices sought. His life has been a busy and useful one and he has left an indelible impress of his personality on the locality with which he has been identified. Because of his accomplishments and his high personal qualities he has richly merited the high esteem in which he is universally held by all who know him.

Emil M. Johnson. Carter County, Montana, has been especially honored in the character and career of her public and professional men, but in every community there are to be found, rising above their fellows, individuals born to leadership in the various vocations, men who dominate not alone by superior intelligence and natural endowment but by natural force of character which minimizes discouragements and dares important undertakings. Such men are by no means rare, and it is always profitable to study their lives, weigh their motives and hold up their achievements as incentives to greater activity and higher excellence on the part of others just entering upon their life work. These reflections are suggested by the career of Emil M. Johnson, the able editor and publisher of the Beaver Valley Press of Ekalaka, a man who has forged his way to the front ranks in the exacting field of journalism, and who by a strong, inherent force, directed by intelligence and judgment of a high order, stands today among the representative citizens of a community widely noted for the excellence of its professional talent, although he has only recently cast his lot with the people of Carter County.

Emil M. Johnson was born in Omaha, Nebraska, on September 5, 1892, and is the son of August and Bettie (Daniels) Johnson. August Johnson was born in Vannersborg, Sweden, on December 15, 1859, and came to the United States in 1884, locating at Grasswell, Minnesota, where he obtained employment as a farm hand. Later he went to Omaha, Nebraska, and engaged in the wholesale butchering business for about twelve years. From there he went to Seattle, Washington, which was his home for many years. He then acquired a ranch at Mayfield, Idaho, where he lived until coming to Ekalaka, where he now makes his home. He was married in Omaha in February, 1890, to Bettie Daniels, a native of Southern Sweden, and whose death occurred in Omaha. To these parents were born three children, namely: Emil, immediate subject of this sketch; Edith, of Minneapolis, Minnesota; and Alma, a teacher at Ekalaka.

Emil Johnson was reared mainly in Seattle, Washington, where he secured a good public school education, being a graduate of the high school. He then entered the office of the Seattle Times, where he learned the trade of printing, and then spent four additional years on that paper. He then went to his father's ranch at Mayfield, Idaho, for a time and while there became connected with the Elmore County Times as a printer. From there he went to Richfield, Idaho, where he became editor of the Richfield Recorder, conducting the affairs of that paper for two years. In December, 1916, Mr. Johnson came to Ekalaka as editor of the Beaver Valley Press, and in March, 1917, became its sole owner by purchase. The Beaver Valley Press was founded at Ekalaka in 1916, the first issue bearing date of September 15th of that year. The paper was started as a political sheet by L. A. Conser, of Baker, and is of the republican political faith, being the only newspaper of that political faith in Carter County.

Mr. Johnson has made a definite impression since identifying himself with Carter County, and today his influence is marked on the political, business and civic life of the community. He is a forceful writer, taking firm ground on the issues of the day and speaking in no uncertain tones. He stands consistently at all times for the very best things for the community and withholds his support from no movement for the welfare of the people. Personally he is genial and companionable, and to a marked degree enjoys the confidence and good will of the community.

Mr. Johnson was married in Richfield, Idaho, on September 10, 1916, to Alice Green, a daughter of John Green, a miner who lost his life in Phillipsburg, Montana. He was among the early settlers in Jackson Hole, Wyoming. To Mr. and Mrs. Johnson has been born a son, Bert.

Politically Mr. Johnson has been a life-long supporter of the republican party, his first presidential vote having been cast for Charles E. Hughes. He has served Ekalaka as justice of the peace, and is the present secretary of the Ekalaka Commercial Club. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is vice grand of the subordinate lodge at Ekalaka. In everything which he has undertaken Mr. Johnson has been successful, because he has devoted himself indefatigably to the one thing in hand. He is a man of marked qualities of character—such qualities as make for success in any undertaking, and because of his success and his splendid personal qualities he deserves the popularity which he enjoys.

David Nelson. This name introduces a widely known early settler of the valley of the Big Porcupine. However, his distinctions rest not so much upon his name, since there are many David Nelsons in Montana, as upon the associations and activities of the man as a sheep raiser and wool producer, and the qualities of initiative enterprise and industry that have brought him a most unusual success in the Northwest.

He was born in Voss, the rural country around Bergen, Norway, June 10, 1865, son of Nels Eric and Carrie Ringheim, being one of their seven children, four sons and three daughters. To the age of eighteen David lived in his home community, with a training as a farmer and the education afforded by a country school. He then embarked on a vessel for the United States, and he never saw his parents again. With them years piled upon years, and they survived far beyond fourscore, his mother all but reaching the century mark before her death in 1919. She was seven years older than her husband and survived him four years.

Landing at New York City, David Nelson finished his journey at Deerfield, Wisconsin, where he began life among strangers, though many of them spoke his mother tongue. In Dane County, Wisconsin, he acquired his first knowledge of American ways, and received the first wages that seemed to be a proper recompense for honest and earnest toil.

During two years he managed to accumulate a few hundred dollars, and with that capital started west in search of some favorite spot. He came by rail over the Northern Pacific, the only railroad Montana then had, and continued to avail himself of its facilities until he reached Billings. On the way he fell in with Ole Wissak, now a successful and wealthy sheepman near Malta. They shared each other's companionship and confidences for two years. It was their expectation to find work in the mines around Maiden and Fergus County, and from Billings they walked to that point to save the stage fare of 15 cents a mile. Reaching the mining town, they were confronted with their first disappointment, since the mines closed that very day, May 8, 1885. Ranch labor was the only opportunity, and they were soon employed by George Cook in Fergus County. At the conclusion of that employment the two companions parted and David Nelson returned to Miles City and was employed during the construction of the race track at the fair grounds. Following that he had a ranch job with Charles Davis at Rosebud, being a sheep herder fifteen months and getting some of the knowledge which he afterwards put to such good use as a sheep man. Then with a horse and cart he made a tour of inspection of the region north of the Yellowstone, and coming up the Big Porcupine he found a spot which pleased his eye, a locality where the creek winds its way through a generous valley stretching back toward low hills and overgrown with tall grass. There he pitched his tent, as it were, and called the spot home. His first efforts were with a mowing machine in providing his team with its winter's feed. The following spring of 1891 he bought a band of 1,000 sheep, and thus entered the career of wool growing which has continued through thirty years and has placed his name prominently among the wool men of Montana.

However, years passed before he could enter his claim legally, since the region was not surveyed until early in the present century. He filed in section 5, township 9, range 37, and on that land his first one-room log cabin was built. This was succeeded by other log homes, and finally the modest frame house which now shelters Mr. Nelson was erected.

Sheep have always been his chief concern, although he has kept cattle, horses and other stock on his ranch. His attachment to the animal that produces the wool has been the strongest of all. The valley has furnished grazing and winter feed through all the years of his experience except in that period of wide spread suffering, the drought of 1919, when feed had to be shipped into the state to save live stock.

Mr. Nelson operated alone as a sheep man until November, 1919, when the Nelson Sheep Company was formed, a stock company capitalized at $200,000, with R. A. Price as president, David Nelson and J. K. Moffett, vice presidents, and Miss Heath, secretary. The company operates its own shearing plant. It has about 13,000 sheep grazing on the range, but this number indicates that the indusry is on a comparatively modest scale as contrasted with the high tide of Mr. Nelson's individual efforts when he personally ran 30,000 sheep. To the great rank Montana has achieved among the wool producing regions of the world perhaps no individual has contributed more than David Nelson, the youthful Norwegian who came to Montana Territory more than thirty-five years ago.

As a resident of his home community he was here a number of years before settlement warranted the building of a community school. He took an active part in that project, and two schoolhouses are now standing on his land, one known as the Scottlake and the other as the Nelson School. He acquired American citizenship at Miles City and cast his first vote in Forsyth. His first presidential ballot was given to Benjamin Harrison, and he has always supported the republican ticket.

At Minneapolis, Minnesota, in 1893, Mr. Nelson married Ingborg Grove. By this union there were two children: Anna, who is the wife of Fred Zemple, a rancher on the Big Porcupine, and they have a daughter, Anita Barbara; and Gunner Nelson, who is unmarried and associated with his father's business. On April 21, 1903, Mr. Nelson married Miss Marie Almberg. She was born at Christiansand, Norway, and was twelve years of age when she came to the United States. Her parents were Sverke and Gertrude (Gulla) Almberg. The Almberg family settled in Faribault County, Minnesota, where Mrs. Nelson was reared and educated. She is one of nine children, six of whom are still living, the only other member of her family living in Montana being Mrs. Frank Paulmann, of Rosebud County.

William E. Reno. It is a noteworthy fact that the majority of the leading men of Montana came to the state during its formative period and developed with it so that their interests are centered here. William E. Reno has been a resident of Montana since the fall of 1895. He is a son of Ludlow B. and Lucinda Esther (Stanberry) Reno, who came here from the Black Hills of South Dakota.

Ludlow B. Reno was born in Pennsylvania, from whence he came west to Iowa at a period antedating the war between the states, and he enlisted for service in that conflict from Iowa in its Third Cavalry Regiment. This regiment was under General Sherman's command in the Atlanta campaign and in the famous March to the Sea, and, having been wounded during the war, he drew a pension from the Government until his death. He was a self-made man, and while living in Iowa developed into a prosperous farmer, and continued his agricultural operations when he went to South Dakota in 1876. About that time he took up the study of law, and was admitted to the bar after coming to Montana, and for two terms served as attorney of Carbon County, being elected on the democratic ticket. A forceful speaker, he knew how to drive home his arguments, although he was not a man of much education aside from what learning he had gained through his own studies in the law. His death occurred in 1919, while he was residing in Carbon County, his wife having passed away on December 23, 1918. They had the following children: William E., whose name heads this review; Bertha, who is Mrs. Pitt, of Carbon County; and Walter, who is engaged in farming near Belfrey, Montana.

William E. Reno attended the country schools of Iowa and South Dakota. He was engaged for a time with the old Flying V outfit of the Black Hills country. Later on he was engaged in ranching for himself at Buffalo Gap. Still later he became a stockman in the vicinity northeast of Hardin when it was still a part of Yellowstone County, selling his cattle in the market at Omaha and his horses to the local trade. When he disposed of this ranch and its few primitive improvements he purchased land in the Big Horn Valley near public schools of the new town of Hardin, acquiring here the title to a quarter section of land and developed it into a farm. He was one of the first to experiment on the growing of alfalfa in this region and demonstrating the great adaptability of this crop to the region in question. Gradually he put his land under the ditch, and acquired additional property, which he also irrigated. Early in his connection with this locality Mr. Reno joined with a number of his neighbors east of Hardin in the organization of the Farmers Ditch Company that furnished the capital to put a headgate in the Big Horn, and took out water sufficient to irrigate about 2,500 acres of land, and constructed mains and laterals to accommodate the members of the company. This ditch was practical enough to enable the farmers to make an annual crop, and was in use when Mr. Reno sold his property to the Sheridan Sugar Company, which has planned to turn the valley into a sugar beet proposition.

When Mr. Reno left his farm he identified himself with Hardin, and is principally interested in the erection of residences for sale, although he has been connected with a number of the business propositions of the place, and is at present one of the officials of the First National Bank of Hardin.

At the time Mr. Reno arrived in this neighborhood there were very few settlers. Boderick & Spencer had a small store on the south side of the railroad; Mr. McDonald was doing a livery business, although he had no barn for his horses, which he ran into a corral to catch them when they were needed, and not long after he arrived Mr. Reno went into the same line of business in partnership with Mr. McDonald. Carl Rankin was the Lincoln townsite agent, and there were settlers scattered up and down the river, most of whom have long ago moved away, new ones coming in to take their places.

Mr. Reno was married at Buffalo Gap to Lula T. Sheffield, born in Texas, and they became the parents of the following children: Roy, James, Alma and Howard. During the period that this country was in the World war Mr. Reno took an active part as a member of the local committee for the sale of bonds, and was instrumental in raising the quota of his community in each of the drives. In every line he has entered he has proved his ability and good citizenship, and it would be difficult to find anyone who stands higher in public esteem than he.

Samuel A. Hotchkiss. One of the interesting features of Montana is the operation of large ranches by men who have acquired the knowledge of their business in a first-hand practical manner, and who have been located in the state since its pioneer days. One of these eminently representative ranchmen is Samuel A. Hotchkiss, owner of the old R. C. Huson property of 3,000 acres, Mr. Huson having been one of the old timers of the Tongue River country. The birth of Samuel A. Hotchkiss took place at New Haven, Connecticut, the seat of Yale University, January 19, 1871, he being a son of Stephen G. Hotchkiss.

The Hotchkiss family is of English origin, but for generations representatives of it lived in Connecticut, bearing their part in the development of the colonies into a great and united country. Stephen G. Hotchkiss was also born at New Haven, Connecticut, January 28, 1826, one in a family of three sons and one daughter born to his parents. In young manhood Stephen G. Hotchkiss was married to Harriet Augusta Stevens, a daughter of Newton Stevens, also born in Connecticut, of good, old English stock founded in the American colonies prior to the Revolution. Both the Hotchkiss and Stevens families were farming people, so Samuel A. Hotchkiss inherits his taste for agriculture from both sides of the family.

As his children began to grow up about him Stephen G. Hotchkiss, who was a man of broad outlook and practical ideas, saw that opportunities for their advancement were limited in the old state of their nativity, and so, taking the elder ones with him, he started out for Montana in 1880, making the trip by rail to Bismarck, North Dakota, and thence by boat to Miles City, Montana, coming up the Yellowstone River. When he was joined two years later by his wife and the other children the trip was made entirely by rail. This pioneer family had an experience, stretching over some twelve years, on land the father entered on Pumpkin Creek, twenty miles from Miles City, and it was a hard one, for the pioneers endured hardships and vicissitudes hardly to be appreciated today. Disposing of his ranch about 1892 or 1893, Stephen G. Hotchkiss moved to Miles City, and there he lived during the greater portion of his remaining years, although his death occurred at Long Beach, California, to which he had gone shortly before his demise, May 1, 1918. His interest in politics was manifested by his strong support of the principles of the democratic party. A Blue Lodge Mason and Presbyterian, he lived up to the highest teachings of his order and church, and was a man of fine principles and upright manhood, setting an example of good citizenship in every particular. Mrs. Hotchkiss died at Miles City during October, 1916, aged eighty-three years, hers being the first death in the family. The five children born to Stephen G. Hotchkiss and his wife were as follows: Amelia, who is the widow of A. B. Marvel, of Long Beach, California; Stephen S., who is also a resident of Long Beach, California; Arthur N., who is a Custer County ranchman; Louise, who is the wife of L. W. Stacy, of Miles City; and Samuel A., whose name heads this review.

Coming to Rosebud County when only twelve years of age, Samuel A. Hotchkiss completed his preliminary educational training in the schools of Custer County, and when only fourteen years of age began working as a cowboy, continuing in this line of work for a number of years, hiring out by the month to some of the old-time ranchmen of the Tongue River region, among them being J. M. Holt on Powder River, G. P. Comstock and L. W. Stacy. When he severed his connection with the last named Mr. Hotchkiss came into the Grandenburg locality and bought the nucleus of the ranch he now owns, which is called the "bar L A—" ranch and comprises 3,000 acres extending along the Tongue River for two miles. It has been an alfalfa ranch for a number of years, but through the enterprise of Mr. Hotchkiss an irrigation plant has been installed which furnishes abundant water for his own stock and that of his neighbors, and he now has only 150 acres in alfalfa, devoting the remainder to raising White Face and Durham cattle and sheep. This ranch is in district No. 26 of Rosebud County, and Mr. Hotchkiss is serving it as a member of the school board. In 1896 Mr. Hotchkiss cast his first presidential vote for William Jennings Bryan. His admiration for Colonel Roosevelt led him to support the republican ticket, but in 1912 and 1916 he returned to the fold of his own party. Mr. Hotchkiss is a Blue Lodge and Chapter Mason, and a man of the highest standing in his community.

On September 21, 1904, he was married at Cherokee, Iowa, to Miss Myrte Chick, a daughter of William B. Chick, born at Limington, Maine. During the war between the states he served for two and one-half years as a member of the First Maine Battery in the Army of the Shenandoah, and under the command of General Sheridan. Soon after the declaration of peace Mr. Chick went to Chicago, Illinois, and thence to the lumber woods of Michigan. Still later he joined his brother-in-law in a trip to Cherokee, Iowa, and was so pleased with conditions there that he remained, and for twenty years was one of the officials of the county, and established an extensive abstract business. In February, 1873, Mr. Chick married Miss Sarah Delaney, of West Bend, Wisconsin, whose parents, Mitchell and Prudence Delaney, were pioneers in that state when Black Hawk was still a power. After forty years of residence in Iowa Mr. Chick sold his holdings and, coming to Montana, took up his residence on the Hotchkiss ranch. Mr. and Mrs. Chick became the parents of three children, two who are deceased and Mrs. Hotchkiss. She was born August 15, 1876, and after obtaining her education and graduating from the Cherokee High School she became a student of the State Teachers College at Cedar Falls, Iowa, from which she was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Didactics. For the subsequent four years she was engaged in teaching, two of them being at Miles City, Montana, where she met Mr. Hotchkiss. Similar tastes drew the two young people together, and their acquaintance developed into something deeper. While she has abandoned the educational field Mrs. Hotchkiss retains her intense interest in current affairs, and her home is one of cultural atmosphere. Mr. and Mrs. Hotchkiss have two children, Philip William, who was born August 2, 1909, and Majorie, who was born May 5, 1911. Mrs. Hotchkiss and her children are identified with the Episcopal Church of Miles City, but Mr. Hotchkiss is not connected with any religious organization. Belonging essentially to the great West, he has many of the magnificent characteristics of his locality. Early struggles have developed and broadened him, and made him more sympathetic with the failure and disappointments of others. American to the core, during the great war he was one of the most energetic workers in promoting the various Liberty Loans and other war drives, and was chairman of the local committee on the loan drives. Always a hard worker, he has also known how to so systematize his operations so as to effect the best results, and his broad acres, well tended premises and sleek stock prove that such methods are remunerative and inspiring.

B. R. Matteson is managing editor of the Northwest Tribune Publishing Company at Stevensville. For a man of his years Mr. Matteson has had a vast amount of experience and has become well known over a great scope of country. He is a practical printing expert, and is equally talented as a musician.

Mr. Matteson was born in Turner County, South Dakota, May 20, 1885. His grandfather was of French ancestry, lived for many years near Buffalo, New York, and subsequently became a pioneer settler in Wisconsin, where he spent his last years. He was a fruit grower.

M. R. Matteson, father of B. R. Matteson, was born in New York State in 1845, but was reared and married in Wisconsin. He lived for several years in Turner County, South Dakota, where he had a horse ranch and also founded and named the Town of Marion. As a youth he served in the Civil war as a Union soldier. He is now living in Wisconsin. He is a Scottish Rite Mason, and in politics is independent. M. R. Matteson married Catherine James, who was born at Dublin, Ireland, in 1849. They became the parents of six children: Mary Belle, Charles Edward, Francis Marion, B. R., Ruby and Pearl.

B. R. Matteson graduated from the high school at Wonewoc, Wisconsin, in 1903. From childhood he was given a careful training in music by his father. He possessed exceptional talents and abilities in that field. B. R. Matteson is a practical master of all band instruments and has appeared in many professional engagements as a soloist. For a number of years he spent his winters in professional engagements as a musician, and those engagements covered all the states in the Union except Rhode Island and Texas. As a boy he also became fascinated with the printing art, and from the close of his musical season worked at the printing trade. Mr. Matteson has the reputation of being an efficiency expert in the management and handling of every technical detail of a printing shop. In a number of cases he has been called to a plant where loss and inefficiency were the rule, and after several months had given new life to the business. Mr. Matteson has been a permanent resident of Montana since 1909. He was superintendent of printing plants at Glasgow and Harlowton, and on October 1, 1918, came to Stevensville as editor and manager of the Northwest Tribune. This is one of the oldest papers in Montana, having been founded in 1886. Recently it was consolidated with the Register. The paper is published by the Northwest Tribune Publishing Company, of which Mr. Matteson is managing editor and Ashley C. Dixon is president.

Mr. Matteson holds a card of membership both in the International Typographical Union and the American Federation of Musicians. Politically he is independent.

At Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, he married Miss Claudia Margaret White, who is also a highly proficient musician, being a graduate of the Conservatory of Music in Indiana. Her talents include both vocal and instrumental. She is a daughter of Rev. P. A. and Katie (LaPlant) White. Her father was a Baptist clergyman and died at Glasgow, Montana, in August, 1919. Her mother lives with Mr. and Mrs. Matteson. The latter have two children: Jessie Hope, born in 1911, and Burton Wray, born February 6, 1919.

Erwin E. Jordan is a Montana banker, a former member of the Legislature, and expended a good deal of time and effort in behalf of the creation of Treasure County, of which he is one of the prominent citizens.

Mr. Jordan, who is vice president and cashier of the Treasure State Bank at Hysham, was born near Annandale in Wright County, Minnesota, July 11, 1880, son of Everett and Iona (Jones) Jordan, the former a native of the State of Maine and the latter of Illinois. They were married in Minnesota and farming became the chief work of their household.

They lived quiet and industrious lives and were members of the Methodist Church. Everett Jordan died in 1890, and his widow is now living at South Haven, Minnesota. She is the mother of two sons, Erwin E. and Everett A., the latter of Clearwater, Minnesota.

Erwin E. Jordan spent his boyhood on a farm in Minnesota, attended public school at Annandale, and his first experience in the far West was during the winter of 1898 when he was at Spencer in the Willamette Valley of Oregon. For a time he worked in a hotel and in the spring became a ranch hand for the J. E. Smith Live Stock Company at Pilot Rock. Leaving the ranch, he continued his education, spending a year in an academy at Ogden, Utah, and the Salt Lake Business College. In the meantime, in the spring of 1899, he had gone to Idaho, and subsequently was in the employ of the Wood Live Stock Company at Dillon, Montana. He returned to school that fall, and after finishing his course acquired the fundamentals of banking by employment at Watertown, Minnesota.

Mr. Jordan has been a permanent resident of Montana since May, 1904. He made his first home at Wibaux, where for a year he was bookkeeper for W. A. Organ & Company, a leading mercantile house. He was then appointed postmaster of the city as successor to Postmaster Davidson, and filled that office and made an enviable record in it for six years. In the meantime he was also appointed and served four years as United States commissioner.

About the end of his official tenure he entered the land business, handling new lands and making loans. As an outgrowth in this business he organized in 1910 the Jordan Realty & Loan Company, serving as president. This concern handled thousands of acres of land, located many people around Wibaux and otherwise had an important pioneer influence in developing and colonizing that section of the state. It is believed that not five acres of land had been broken and farmed in that county when Mr. Jordan entered the land business. He continued as active head of the Jordan Realty and Loan Company for some five or six years.

In 1906 he joined some other business men in the organization of the First National Bank, and continued as one of the directors of the institution until 1916. At that date he moved to Miles City, where he represented the Montana Life Insurance Company as general agent for about eighteen months.

Mr. Jordan has been identified with the new county of Treasure since 1917. The Treasure State Bank of Hysham was organized in June, 1917, by Mr. Jordan, George S. Warren, J. E. Edwards, E. A. Cornwell, W. G. Cooley and a number of other local stockholders. Its capital is $25,000 and its surplus is $6,250. Besides Mr. Jordan as vice president and cashier, George S. Warren is president, O. L. Evje, assistant cashier, and other directors are J. E. Edwards, E. A. Cornwell, W. G. Cooley, John C. E. Hagam and W. J. Noble.

April 19, 1906, two years after coming to Montana, Mr. Jordan married Miss Eva Schrader, of Clarence, New York, where she was born July 13, 1880. Her father, Philip Schrader, married Miss Workman, and Mrs. Jordan was one of their four daughters. She was educated in the grammar and high schools of Clarence and after her marriage devoted herself to the responsibilities of home and the rearing of her children until her death on October 15, 1918. She was the mother of four daughters, Isabel, Doris, Kathleen and Lydia.

As a banker in the new community of Hysham, Mr. Jordan gave an active leadership to the prosecution of the war, the sale of bonds, and the work of the Red Cross Chapter, in which Mrs. Jordan was a participant as far as her health and strength would permit. She also served as a member of the Treasure County Council of Defense. Mr. Jordan represented Dawson County in the House of Representatives in 1912-13, being elected as a progressive and serving under Speaker McDonald, in a democratic house. He was assigned to the committees on appropriations, new towns and counties and various others. That was the last session of the Legislature that voted for a United States senator, and he cast his ballot for Mr. Walsh, who had won the state endorsement for the office. Knowing the work of the Legislature, Mr. Jordan was an obvious choice for a personal representative at Helena for the movement to create the new county of Treasure, and represented the New Counties Committee and worked ardently for the passage of the bill.

Thomas H. Mouat. The men who had the initiative and courage to brave the dangers and endure the hardships of frontier life in Montana deserve to receive material rewards as well as the plaudits of their fellow citizens, pleasant though the latter may be. One of the pioneers of the Big Horn Valley who has been honored with both is Thomas H. Mouat, one of the very extensive shippers and dealers in cattle at Hardin, and first mayor of the municipality.

Mr. Mouat began his connection with this region in 1904, as a stockholder with the Crow Indians, buying their horses and selling them cattle, and he carried on this line for three years, and then joined A. P. McDonald and built the first meat market at Hardin. Before their building was completed the partners sold meat in a tent. They had the misfortune to lose their substantial brick market by fire, the first of the permanent buildings to be burned, but they replaced it and Mr. Mouat continued in this line of business until 1911, when he sold his interest in the market and began handling live stock, first as a partner of Mr. McDonald, but now operating alone, and he ships cattle in as well as out and does a very large annual business.

Long before the most sanguine ever dreamed of Hardin, Mr. Mouat was familiar with the locality, and often participated in horse roundups with the Indians on the very site of the present city. At that time all of the region was wild and uncultivated. Mr. Mouat has been in the West for many years, coming to Williston, North Dakota, by rail, and spending a number of years as ranch foreman on the "bar T" ranch south of that city. In 1889 he left that ranch for Dickinson, that same state, and during the subsequent five years he was principally employed with the Sutphin Cattle Company of Duluth, Minnesota, and being at St. Paul, Minnesota, during a portion of each year.

In 1887 Mr. Mouat went into Minnesota to handle horses, making his headquarters at Fargo, but handling them in different parts of the state. He imported the horses from the eastern states and disposed of them to Minnesota farmers, and then gradually worked into Montana.

Mr. Mouat was born at Janesville, Wisconsin, August 11, 1860, a son of James Mouat, who founded the Mouat family in that state, and also the United States, coming here from Scotland. He immigrated from his native land in 1844 with a colony of settlers and made a permanent home in Rock County, Wisconsin. There he was married and spent the rest of his life as a farmer and stockman. Upon becoming naturalized he became a republican. In his religious faith he was a Presbyterian.

James Mouat married Mary Storey, born in New York State, a daughter of Ozias Storey, also born in the Empire State, who, becoming a pioneer of Wisconsin, continued to be a farmer all of his life. James Mouat died in 1902, when he was seventy-two years old, but his widow, now a very aged lady, survives him and makes her home at Janesville, Wisconsin. Their children were as follows: Thomas H., who is the eldest; Grace, who is a resident of Janesville; Frank, who is a business man of the same city; Margaret, who married A. G. Dupuis, of Custer, South Dakota; Malcolm, who is an attorney of Janesville; and Mary, who lives with her mother.

Thomas H. Mouat was educated in the common schools, and he remained at home until after he had passed his majority, and during that period had learned the horse and cattle business from his father. In association with his father he made his first money shipping horses into Minnesota.

As a contributor to the growth of Hardin, Mr. Mouat has participated in its building, and has lent it his influence in all of its progressive movements. When the idea was broached of the creation of Big Horn County, Mr. Mouat was in favor of it from the start, and he was also one of the leading figures in the incorporation of Hardin. He was elected its first mayor, and his council was composed of the following men: Messrs. McMeekan, Gordon, Johnston, Mitchell, Boylan and Morgan. During his administration of a little more than two years the city government was instituted, one of the big tasks towards securing this being the framing of the ordinances. A levy for the first taxes was made, a city court was created, a fire apparatus was provided, and an appropriation made for the erection of the first town hall. The services of the mayor and the council were contributed without charge, and the service was rendered ungrudgingly and cheerfully, all being animated by the desire and determination to give the public the very best that lay in their power.

In addition to his other interests Mr. Mouat is a stockholder of the Stockman's National Bank, and he is also a member of its board of directors. For some years he has belonged to Billings Lodge, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks.

On January 15, 1920, Mr. Mouat was married at Sheridan, Wyoming, to Mrs. Maud (Fenton) Gibson, a daughter of John W. and Mollie (Boyington) Fenton, who for many years lived at Verona, Missouri. Mrs. Mouat was born in Benton County, Indiana, December 17, 1874, but was reared at Verona, and came to Montana in 1907, since which time she has made her home at Hardin. Five children grew up in the Fenton home, those surviving being: Mrs. C. W. Wilder, of Mount Vernon, Missouri; Mrs. Lena Flick, of Compton, California; Mrs. Mouat, who is the third child; and Fred D., who lives at Carthage, Missouri. Walter B. is deceased. It would be difficult to find a man more universally liked or respected than Mr. Mouat, and he is recognized as thoroughly representative of the best element of the West.

Alonzo L. Mitchell, mayor of Hardin and one of the earliest settlers of the place, stands very high in the esteem of his fellow citizens because of his many sterling traits of character. He identified himself with this community when he entered a homestead on the ceded portion of the Crow Reservation in 1906, and two years later became a resident of Hardin. Mr. Mitchell came here from Kansas, but was born at New Virginia, Warren County, Iowa, December 22, 1876. During his boyhood he lived on his father's farm and attended the country schools, later attending those of the adjoining village, and completed his studies at the Lincoln Business College of Lincoln, Nebraska, from which he was graduated in 1896.

Mr. Mitchell left his native state in 1902 and went to Oklahoma and embarked in a land business as senior member of the firm of Mitchell & Reat. After eight months spent in that locality Mr. Mitchell sold his interests and spent the next three seasons with the Chicago Lyceum Bureau as advance man, covering Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Oklahoma and Iowa. This experience was one of great value to him and greatly extended his acquaintance over the central portion of the country. He left the road very suddenly and came to Montana at the time of the opening of the Crow Reservation, as he desired to file a desirable claim.

While he was living on his homestead and doing the development work necessary to make it a profitable undertaking, Mr. Mitchell organized and built the Big Horn Low Line Canal, the first irrigating system in this end of the Big Horn Valley. The system covered about 10,000 acres, and about 90 per cent of this was brought under irrigation and made a productive general farming proposition. When he proved up his claim Mr. Mitchell moved to Hardin, entered the real estate and insurance business and soon had the Big Horn Valley Land & Development Company organized and in good working condition, with himself as president, general manager and chief stockholder. This company has bought and developed thousands of acres of wild and uncultivated lands in the valley and is one of the pioneers in dry as well as irrigated farming. It has large holdings about Hardin, and engages in actual farming each year.

In 1916 Mr. Mitchell, together with a few associates, organized the Hardin Townsite Company, and purchased from the Lincoln Land Company 800 acres of irrigated lands, in the center of which was platted the Town of Hardin. Since then this company, with Mr. Mitchell as manager and chief owner, has been exploiting its interests and contributing materially toward the development of the locality. Hardin's incorporation occurred in 1911, and at that time Mr. Mitchell was chosen as one of its first board of aldermen, and he held that office until his election as mayor in the spring of 1914. He is still the incumbent of this important office, having been re-elected to it at each biennial election. His administration is responsible for the following public achievements: A complete storm and sanitary sewer system, a water system with a modern filtration plant now being completed, fifty blocks of bitulithic pavement, and the practical planning of parks for the growing metropolis of the valley.

Mr. Mitchell traces his family ancestry back to the Mitchells of Pennsylvania, where both his parents were born, they being Josephus M. and Elizabeth (Strawn) Mitchell, the latter a daughter of Jehu Strawn. The American founder of the Mitchell family was the great-grandfather of Mayor Mitchell, who was of Scotch-Irish stock, but came to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, from England.

Josephus M. Mitchell and his wife, Elizabeth, had the following children: Mary F., who is Mrs. J. D. Nicholson, of New Virginia, Iowa; James A., who is a resident of Osceola, Iowa; Alonzo L., whose name heads this review; Walter R., who is a resident of Indianola, Iowa; and Jesse L., who is a resident of Hardin and a ranchman of considerable importance. The Mitchell family was taken from Pennsylvania to Iowa in 1870, and the parents lived out the remainder of their lives on a farm near New Virginia.

Josephus M. Mitchell was a democrat until 1900, when he became a republican on account of the issues which arose through the candidacy of William Jennings Bryan, and Mayor Mitchell cast his first presidential ballot for William McKinley, and he has never swerved in his devotion to republican principles since. He is a Scottish Rite Mason and belongs to Billings Consistory and Algeria Temple, Mystic Shrine, of Helena, Montana. Mayor Mitchell is also an Odd Fellow, a Pythian Knight and an Elk, his home lodge of the last named fraternity being at Billings.

Mayor Mitchell was married at Lennox, Iowa, on December 25, 1902, to Miss Mary V. Gibson, born in Taylor County, Iowa, on March 26, 1878, a daughter of James G. and Martha (Trusler) Gibson, natives of Kentucky. Mrs. Mitchell was one of a family of one son and four daughters, was liberally educated and became a teacher. Mayor and Mrs. Mitchell have two children: Martha K. and Josephus Alonzo.

During the World war Mayor Mitchell was county chairman of the Food Administration, and also of the poor, and he had charge of one of the Liberty Loan drives for the county. He was also chairman of the Big Horn Chapter of the Red Cross, and still holds that office.

When Mr. Mitchell came to Montana he was without capital, but he possessed something more valuable than mere money, the broad vision and initiative which enabled him to first see the wonderful possibilities of the Big Horn Valley, and then to develop them into actualities. Few movements have been carried to completion since he came here without his approval and co-operation, and he is proud of the fact that he was one of the organizers of Big Horn County, the largest, richest and probably the most historic agricultural county in the state. A man of high principles, Mayor Mitchell has great faith in the good intentions of his fellow citizens, is a strong supporter of educational and religious institutions, and makes it a regular practice to donate one-tenth of his income to church and charities. He also strongly advocates the expenditure of large amounts for community enterprises. Both he and his wife belong to the Methodist Church, but he is not hidebound, recognizing the good in any honest belief, and he is supported politically by those of all creeds, for they recognize in him a capable, upright and thoroughly representative man, whose honor is unblemished and whose spoken word is as binding as another's written bond.

JOHN VANDER PAUWERT. It is now forty years since John vander Pauwert came to Montana. He was a child then, but in a few years had the responsibilities of a range rider, and between riding the range, farming and doing duty as an officer his name and work have become widely known all over the old area of Custer County, included in the present county of Treasure, where he resides at Hysham.

He was born at Brabant, Holland, November 17, 1873, son of Henry and Henrietta (Joosten) vander Pauwert. In Holland his parents were city people, the father being a surveyor by profession. In 1880 the little family, including John, then seven years of age, sailed from Rotterdam for New York. They made the voyage without incident, and their destination was Montana. By railroad they traveled through the eastern states and over the middle west as far as Bismarck, and thence a boat carried them up the Missouri River to Miles City. The rest of their journey was made by stage, and on June 13, 1880, they unloaded about the middle of Pease Bottom.

It had been a long and tiresome journey. Henry vander Pauwert was attracted to Montana by the presence of John Joosten, his wife's brother. John Joosten had lived in America a number of years, knew the people and the circumstances of this sparsely settled district of Montana, and was of invaluable service to the newcomers, in establishing their home. Henry vander Pauwert entered a claim, now the farm of Ole Muri. He had little capital, and his first team was a pair of Indian ponies. With the aid of these ponies he was able to raise a crop of potatoes, do some other farming and the necessary hauling. Buffalo meat and other smoked meat bought from the Indians supplied a large part of the family diet. Their home was a log house, and in it they made their abode as long as they remained on the Bottom. Their neighbors were few, and those still surviving and residents of the community are Mrs. Isaac and Wiley King. Others who were their neighbors but have since died or left the district were Robert Guy, William Mouat, William McKeen, Robert Darcy, William O'Brien and W. B. S. Higgins. Most of these men had had experience either in the Civil war or Indian wars. John Joosten, brother of Mrs. Henry vander Pauwert, had been a soldier, and his father had been killed at Port Hudson, Mississippi. The vander Pauwert family remained in Pease Bottom until 1887, when the father moved out to Washington and became a truck farmer and gardener at Fair Haven. In 1912 he returned to Montana, and is a venerable citizen, rancher and farmer on Sarpy Creek in Treasure County. His good wife passed away in May, 1916. They were the parents of four children: Rena, wife of M. C. Lowrey, of Chehalis, Washington; Henry, a rancher on Sarpy Creek, Montana; Mrs. Louise vanden Biesen of Sarpy Creek; and John Daniel.

John Daniel vander Pauwert began his education in a little community school in Pease Bottom. He learned to ride almost as soon as he learned his letters, and about the time his parents moved out to Washington he was drawing regular wages as a range man. Among the old outfits of the region for whom he worked were the "7UX," the "171," the "79," the "R. L." and finally with the "FUF," for whom he was employed running and corraling wild horses. Mr. vander Pauwert left the range to enter the sheriff's office at Forsyth as deputy and under sheriff to Sheriff Guy. His appointment to this work was largely due to two years of prior experience under Sheriff John Gibb at Miles City when all this region was a part of Custer County. He remained the deputy of Mr. Guy four years, and was then appointed stock inspector and detective for the Montana Stock Association. He performed the arduous and frequently dangerous duties of this position for three years. He then became under sheriff to William Moses, and a year later, upon the death of his chief, who was killed by John Burgess, he was appointed sheriff and filled out the term. Then followed another year as stock inspector for the Montana Association, and he became under sheriff upon the creation of Treasure County. Thus he has given seventeen years to the duties of a peace officer, and while his official jurisdiction has been mainly in one locality, the county governments he has served have been successively Custer, Rosebud and Treasure counties.

Mr. vander Pauwert is a thoroughly democratic citizen as well as a member of the democratic party. He cast his first presidential vote for Mr. Bryan, and was a supporter of the famous Nebraskan every time he was a candidate. Mr. vander Pauwert is past grand of Victory Lodge No. 130 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Hysham.

In Pease Bottom Mr. vander Pauwert married Miss Sedonia Heyneman, who was born in Germany, a daughter of Bruno Heyneman. She died

May 23, 1911, the mother of a family of seven children, namely: Jack, who died at the age of sixteen; Leo, deceased; Edith, wife of A. B. C. Davis, of Hardin, Montana; Claude, who died as a soldier at Camp Lewis, Washington, during the influenza epidemic; Harry, of Hysham; and Gladys and Margaret. August 26, 1913, at Miles City, Mr. vander Pauwert married Miss Verne Keithler, daughter of I. and Jennie (Dragoo) Keithler, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Ohio. Mrs. vander Pauwert is the oldest of five children, the others being Howard, Gertrude, Oswin and Jennie. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. vander Pauwert, Keith and Leo.

Azarias G. Vincelette, one of the prosperous ranchmen and farmers of Fallon County, has been a resident of this region since 1903, and during that period has developed into one of its most representative men. He was born at New Bedford, Massachusetts, on January 24, 1874, a son of Charles G. Vincelette, the latter having been born at Saint Alphons de Granby, Quebec, Canada, on January 6, 1850. He was a son of Nazaire Vincelette, of French ancestry, but born in Quebec, Canada, his father being a farmer who founded the family in the province of Quebec. Nazaire Vincelette and his wife had three sons and three daughters, the survivors now being as follows: Mrs. Cordelia Massey, of New Carlisle, Indiana; Charles G., who lives at Ollie, Montana; Cordelia, who is the wife of Harry Herring, of Montreal, Canada; and Hubert, who lived to be married and have a family, but is now deceased.

Charles G. Vincelette secured a fair education in English and at the same time acquired a knowledge of French by himself to such an extent that he can speak, read and write that language. He learned the trade of a stonecutter and worked at it in Canada, Maine and Massachusetts, in all of which communities he maintained his home, and he was also engaged in farming before he left Canada. In 1879 he left Canada to become a permanent resident of the United States, selecting Deadwood, South Dakota. It was during this period that so much excitement was displayed with regard to the discovery of gold in the region of the Black Hills, and it was because of it that Mr. Vincelette came to Deadwood. For a time he worked as a quartz millman for the Homestake Mills, and did some prospecting, but later was attracted to a stock ranch near Deadwood, realizing that there was more likelihood of permanent prosperity in raising stock than in looking for gold. His sons concurred in his opinion and all became employes of this ranch.

As they earned and saved money, they invested in cattle, and when they came to Montana they owned 825 head, which they drove with them. These cattle were run under the brand "V4," which is still used. These cattle were of the Hereford strain, and by giving attention to them the Vincelettes have bred their cattle up to the highest grade to be found between the Black Hills and Fallon County, and they have topped the Chicago market with their stock for twelve consecutive years. During the high water mark of the Vincelettes they ran some 1,400 head of cattle, and also bred and raised many horses, but did not attempt to handle any other kind of stock.

When the Vincelettes came to Montana in June, 1903, selection was made of the old "MC" ranch, an historic location, established by Frank Preston, who disposed of it to the Connors, who in turn sold to the Vincelettes. The beginnings of the Vincelette prosperity were small, but Charles G. Vincelette was fortunate in having the co-operation of his sons, and their interests now include almost five sections of deeded land, and eleven sections additional which are leased. The old headquarters of the "MC" ranch were first used as a family home, but were not suitable, and subsequently a frame structure, 12 by 24 feet, was erected on the ranch of Arsidas Vincelette, who is a brother of Azarias Vincelette, and this was occupied until pioneer conditions passed away.

Charles G. Vincelette was married to Alphonsine Savage, a daughter of Joseph Savage, who was a native of the Quebec region, and a farmer by calling. Both the Vincelette and Savage farms in Quebec are owned by members of the family. Mrs. Vincelette died on the Montana ranch on October 12, 1918, having borne her husband the following children: Arthur, who was drowned near the Deadwood ranch, was a stockman; Arsidas A., who is a part owner of the Vincelette ranch, married Eva Doody, and his daughters are Blanche and Beulah; Azarias G., whose name heads this review; Alida, who is the wife of Edwin Berry, of Fallon County, has a daughter and three sons; and Amanda, who married Jonas Griffith, died near Baker, Montana, leaving a son and a daughter. Charles G. Vincelette became a citizen of the United States through naturalization, and participated in all of the political campaigns as a voter, keeping himself posted on current events. Although he cast his first presidential vote for James A. Garfield, he has since been a democrat.

Azarias G. Vincelette first attended a French school at Saint Alphons, Canada, and later was a pupil of an English school at Deadwood, South Dakota. He remained with his parents and contributed his wages to the common fund of the family for some years after he attained his majority. He earned his first dollar digging potatoes for a farmer who lived ten miles north of Deadwood and paid him at the rate of 50 cents per day. Subsequently he went into the mines of the Homestake Company, and spent two years doing actual mining work, and all of this time his wages, together with those of his father, went into cattle with which later they stocked their Montana ranch, and they were thus able to advance much more rapidly than if working alone. At the expiration of the two years he went on a stock ranch, and has continued to be engaged in ranching and farming ever since.

With his marriage Azarias G. Vincelette separated himself from the homestead headquarters and established his residence ten miles north of Baker. His home is modern and supplied with light, hot and cold water, sewerage and other appliances, and is a two-story with basement dwelling, containing twelve rooms. It was built in 1914 and is surrounded by a grove of elm, boxelder, poplar and evergreen trees, planted and grown by Mr. Vincelette. His barn is regarded as the best in Fallon County. This ranch was originally the old Gupton one, and has been noted since its establishment for its fine spring water and its magnificent native timber. This ranch was conducted for a number of years by B. J. Gupton, one of the early and successful beef producers of Montana.

On November 29, 1906, Mr. Vincelette was united in marriage with Miss Gertrude Thompson, a daughter of John V. and Juliette (Goble) Thompson. Mr. Thompson was a farmer of the Black Hills region before he came to Montana, and is a native of Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson have the following children: Mrs. Vincelette, who is the eldest; Wesley, who is engaged in ranching near his parents; Sibyl, who is the wife of Taylor Cook of Fallon County; and Muriel, who is engaged in ranching in the vicinity of Baker. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Vincelette are as follows: Douglas, Sibyl, Gladys, Paul, Roy, Jessie, Garnet and Flora. Mr. Vincelette is one of the trustees of the Vincelette School District No. 48, which is located on his ranch. He votes the democratic ticket in national matters, but locally usually supports the best man. All of the Vincelette family are members of the Catholic Church. Mr. Vincelette is a stockholder and one of the directors of the Baker State Bank. During the late war the Vincelette family showed their patriotism by generously donating to the Red Cross and other war organizations, and buying liberally of all of the issues of Liberty bonds, Azarias Vincelette being especially active along this line. He had a number of relatives in the American uniform as well as many in that of the British, who went out from Canada.

Roy E. Sutton. Fallon County numbers among its leading farmers and county officials Roy E. Sutton, who cast in his lot with the early residents of Montana in April, 1907. His first act as a settler was to secure a homestead, entering his claim four miles from Ollie, then a new and untamed region, where only a few cabins had been erected to shelter Montana's new population. He brought with him a team of horses and a cow in addition to his family effects and a little lumber to build his shack of one room. His cash capital amounted to $13.40, and he figured he had nothing to lose but all to gain in this westward venture.

During his first summer in Montana Mr. Sutton broke sod on thirty acres of his land, planted it to wheat and oats and harvested a fair crop. During the three years he was acquiring title to the land he made a living from the place, although he also spent some time working for others when he could find work to do. His improvements now include a splendid six-room residence and a three-room house for his help, a barn 60 by 28 feet, with a shed, and other shelter for his stock sufficient in emergency to house 140 head. He has also placed 110 acres of his homestead under cultivation, and is farming 600 acres.

While Mr. Sutton has found the key to the secret of successful farming in Montana his main hobby, if it can be so called, is pure bred Belgian horses. He introduced this strain in 1911, buying a pure bred stallion and breeding up his stock to all registered animals. He has found his market practically at home and at prices sufficiently remunerative to make the business a profitable one, and even during the dry years of 1918 and 1919 the market for his class of horses was good, whereas the range horse became a drag on the market, and in many instances was left to die of starvation on the range.

When the first efforts were made to secure a school in his community Mr. Sutton assisted in the construction of the pioneer school house with his neighbors, donating his time and whatever else was necessary for its establishment, and secured an educational mecca four miles from his claim. His school district is No. 6.

Mr. Sutton's settlement in this community was made when all this region was embraced in Custer County, and he joined heartily in the move to create Fallon County. His work was done independently in circulating petitions for signatures, and his community went strongly for the county division. He was elected a county commissioner in the fall of 1918, taking the place vacated by H. W. Sparks, and he is serving on the board with Commissioners Schofield and Pepper. The chief work of this board has been road building and holding elections for road making and for drouth relief seed for planting the 1920 crop. Mr. Sutton is a republican in his political affiliations, and his first presidential vote was cast in Minnesota.

He is a native son of Wisconsin, born near Shamrock on the 7th of April, 1879. By the time he had reached his eighth year he was orphaned by the death of his parents, and the educational training which he received was self acquired. He attended school through the eighth grade, making his way by working out, by following the race track and fast horses, and by working as a farm hand throughout the years. He later spent three years in Minneapolis, Minnesota, teaming for a year and then working for a transfer company. He also married while living in that state, and he and his wife finally decided to cast their lot with the new northwest and try and gain a competence in this region of vast opportunities. They reached this decision owing to the public land distribution then going on, and without capital save willing hearts and hands they made their way to Montana and took up the burden of the homesteader.

The father of Mr. Sutton, Alanson Sutton, was a soldier in the Civil war, and this service hastened his death, which occurred in 1885. He served as a member of the Twenty-fifth Wisconsin Infantry in General Sherman's army, took part in the Atlanta campaign and the march of the army to the sea, was wounded in action and carried the bullet until it finally made its way into a vital spot and ended his life. He had married Elsie Hyde, who survived him but two years and died in 1887, and they had the following children: Mrs. I. E. Bergen, who died in Minneapolis and who proved a real mother to her young brother Roy; Alberta, who is married and living in Rockford, Iowa; Emmet, who died in Iowa; Nora, the wife of Will Davies, of Los Angeles, California; Belle, the wife of Orlie Snow, of St. Paul, Minnesota; and Roy E.

The marriage of Roy E. Sutton occurred at Princeton, Minnesota, April 7, 1900, on his twenty-first birthday, when Jane Orton became his wife. She is a daughter of N. G. Orton, a farmer who removed from the state of New York to Minnesota and became one of the early settlers of that state. His mother was the second white woman to enter Millelacs County, and when entering their land they passed over the present site of Minneapolis. Mrs. Sutton is the oldest daughter and second child in her parents' family of four sons and four daughters, and she has become the mother of two children, Mabel and Marion. Mr. Sutton is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, holding his membership in Ollie, Montana.

William Wilson Woodburn, senior member of the firm Woodburn Brothers, merchants at Wibaux, was one of the early business men to institute activities at what is now the county seat of Wibaux County.

Mr. Woodburn has for almost half a century been identified with the northwestern country. He was born in Washington County, Iowa, at the Village of Riverside, September 9, 1861, a son of James Lawrence and Harriet Maria (Cole) Woodburn. He acquired his early education in Montgomery County, Kansas, near Coffeyville, where his parents lived on a farm. In 1877, when he was sixteen years of age, the Woodburn family set out for Kansas with one ox team and a mule team, and after two months arrived at Spearfish in the Black Hills of the Dakotas. It was a small party, and they went through the danger zone without encountering Indians, though almost at the end of the trip they heard firing and came upon the scene of recent hostilities between the red men and the whites.

The Woodburn family in 1878 established a hotel at Spearfish, and the following year began a merchandise business. They also had ranching interests, and in these interests William W. Woodburn and his brother may be said to have grown up. He and his brother Burl have nearly always been associated in ranching, and since 1916 they have also been associated as merchants at Wibaux.

From Spearfish the Woodburns moved to Minneola, South Dakota, conducted a general store there a few years, and accompanied the county seat on its removal to Bellefourche about 1891. The father spent his last days in the Soldiers' Home at Fort Leavenworth and the mother, who survived him, continued the merchandising business at Bellefourche until her death.

The Woodburn Brothers brought their cattle and horses to the western edge of North Dakota in 1901, and still own lands and run a bunch of horses in that vicinity. William W. Woodburn had been trading at Wibaux while ranching, and conceived the idea of establishing a business there. He bought the grocery stock of Thomas Lovell, and for four years was active head of the firm, and then in 1916 was joined by his brother.

Mr. Woodburn is a republican in politics, and has been satisfied merely to cast his vote. He took his degree in Masonry at Bellefourche in 1895, and later demitted and became a charter member of Wibaux Lodge. Besides his store building he erected another business house in Wibaux, a brick 30 by 100 feet, two-story block, this being a part of the Chappell Hotel.

The Woodburn Brothers married sisters, daughters of Peter Myers. Mrs. William Woodburn was before her marriage, which was celebrated at Deadwood in the Black Hills country, February 11, 1910, Mrs. Alice Dowdell. Mr. and Mrs. Woodburn have three children, Will, Alice and Burl.

Burl Woodburn is junior partner of the firm Woodburn Brothers, merchants at Wibaux, one of the largest and oldest concerns handling merchandise in this section of Eastern Montana.

The Woodburn brothers have spent nearly all their lives in the great west. Burl Woodburn was born in Washington County, Iowa, April 27, 1868. His father, James Lawrence Woodburn, a native of Pennsylvania, acquired most of his education by his own efforts and was a well informed man for his time. A wagon maker by trade, he worked for seven years with the Bain Wagon Factory at Kenosha, Wisconsin, and that gave him the capital enabling him to marry. Afterward he was a resident of Washington County, Iowa, until 1870, when he settled in Montgomery County, Kansas, as a farmer, and in 1877 migrating with his family, his son Burl then being nine years of age, to the Black Hills country. He established his home at Spearfish, was one of the early merchants of that town, but after four years left there and for several years was in California and then returned east and lived in Kansas and died at the Old Soldiers Home at Fort Leavenworth at the age of seventy-three. During the Civil war he was in the Twenty-fifth Iowa Infantry, and saw some of the hardest fighting of the war, though he went through without wounds or capture and seemed to suffer no impairment of bodily vigor, since he attained a good old age. He was in the siege of Vicksburg under General Grant, was in the Atlanta campaign under Sherman, in the March to the Sea, fought at Missionary Ridge and Lookout Mountain, and went up through the Carolinas until the surrender of Johnston's army at Goldsboro. He was with the victorious hosts that marched in grand review at Washington at the close of the war. He took a veteran's furlough at the end of his first enlistment, but returned to his command and helped finish the struggle and restore the Union. He was a strong republican, and in early life was identified with the Methodist Church.

In Iowa James L. Woodburn married Harriet Maria Cole, who was born in Indiana in 1844. She represented an old American family. Her grandfather Cole was with Commodore Perry at the battle of Lake Erie in 1813. Mrs. Harriet Woodburn spent her last days at Bellefourche, South Dakota, where she died in April, 1910. Her children were William W. and Burl.

Burl Woodburn acquired only a limited education, his youth being spent chiefly in sparsely settled and new localities in South Dakota. As soon as he was old enough he was doing work as a clerk in a store on some ranch. He became associated with his brother in ranching and in merchandising from the time of his majority, and they have rarely been separated since. In 1901 they left the Black Hills country with cattle and horses and came to the west end of North Dakota, where Burl Woodburn filed on a tract of land, proving up, and the brothers have maintained ranch interests in that region ever since. Their brand is the figure ten above a quarter circle, the brand being on the right thigh. The brothers operated rather extensively, shipping to the Chicago and Omaha markets, and still have a number of horses grazing in that region.

William W. Woodburn became identified with Wibaux in 1911, opening a stock of groceries in a frame building, one of the pioneer business houses of the town. In 1917 the present firm of Woodburn Brothers erected a brick two-story business house 100 by 30 feet, the upper floor being occupied by the Masonic Hall. There is a full basement for storage and warehouse purposes, and altogether this house has no superior as a mercantile center in Wibaux Center.

Mr. Burl Woodburn cast his first presidential vote in 1892 for Benjamin Harrison, and in 1896 was a follower of Mr. Bryan in his first campaign, but has thoroughly eradicated that part of his record by his subsequent actions. He took his first degrees in Masonry at Bellefourche, South Dakota, and both he and his brother are members of the Lodge at Wibaux.

At Deadwood, South Dakota, July 29, 1910, Burl Woodburn married Mrs. Clara B. (Myers) Wood. She was born in Illinois in 1875. Her father, Peter Myers, moved from Illinois to the Black Hills country and was a farmer.

J. L. Dobell has been managing editor of the Butte Miner for the past fifteen years. He has been active in the affairs of Montana during a more or less continuous residence here for over thirty years. He knows the world through many avenues of contact and experience, and before permanently identifying himself with journalism was a practicing lawyer.

Mr. Dobell was born at Loughborough, Leicestershire, England, November 9, 1868. His father, Captain I. B. Dobell, was born in Derby, England, in 1829, and became an officer in the British army. After he retired he came to the United States and settled in Coffey County, Kansas, where he acquired a large amount of farming land. In 1888 he removed to Dade City, Florida, developed a fine orange plantation, and lived there until his death on February 4, 1911. In this country he was an independent in politics, and was a member of the Masonic fraternity. He married in England Miss True Ledham Robinson, who was born at Mansfield, Ohio, in 1839, and died at Dade City, Florida, in 1900. The oldest of their four children is I. B. Dobell, Jr., who was an American soldier in the Philippine war and is now living at Point Isabel, Texas. The next is J. L. Dobell. Alice True, unmarried and a resident of London, is a talented pianist. She was in Brussels when the World war broke out, and with difficulty escaped to England. Recently she has completed a concert tour of South America. The youngest of the children, Harold H., is a wood carver living at Birmingham, England.

J. L. Dobell attended public school at Loughborough, England, also a private school at Nottingham, and came to the United States in 1881, when he was twelve years of age. He lived in Kansas for a time, attended high school at Albion, Illinois, a year, and made his first acquaintance with Montana in the summer of 1886, when he visited Bozeman. In October of that year he returned to England, and in January, 1887, went to Leipsig, Germany, where he pursued courses in political economy and the German language. He was again in England a short time before returning to the United States in November, 1887. In the spring of 1888 he was again in Bozeman, where he studied law with Judge L. A. Luce and was admitted to the bar in December, 1889. For one year he was in the law office of J. A. Savage at Livingston, and then for six months was with the law firm of Kimley, Witten & Foster at Kansas City, Missouri. That winter he went to Florida, and in the summer of 1890 again visited England, returning to the United States in the spring of 1891 and entering the office of Charles S. Hartman at Bozeman, with whom he remained four months. He then formed a partnership with Mr. Sutton, under the name of Sutton and Dobell.

In 1892 the state capital fight came up and Mr. Dobell was a staunch supporter of Bozeman for the seat of government. It was his articles in the Bozeman Chronicle which brought him first into notice as a newspaper man, and he also traveled all over Eastern Montana in support of his home city. He remained with the Chronicle as city editor until the spring of 1893. He then became city editor of the Anaconda Standard, and later went to Livingston and was with the Livingston Post until the summer of 1896. Returning to Anaconda, he and John McMurray established the Evening Recorder, which they published as a daily until 1898. In that year Mr. Dobell became city editor of the Butte Miner, in 1901 was made associate editor, and in the fall of 1902 became manager and editor of the Helena Independent, continuing until October, 1904, when he went on a visit to Florida. His present responsible position as managing editor of the Butte Miner began in July, 1905.

Mr. Dobell was a republican voter until 1896, when he became a democrat. While most of his influence has been directed through his work as a newspaper man, he served in the Legislature in 1912, sitting in the session of 1913. He was a member of the judiciary committee, chairman of the apportionment committee, member of the municipal corporations committee, banks and banking committee, legislative, health and attachees committee, and printing committee. Mr. Dobell is unmarried and resides at 30 East Broadway.

Judge Charles J. Dousman, one of the judges of the Sixteenth Judicial District, is a resident of Baker, and has rapidly earned distinction in the law and in public affairs since coming to Montana.

He was born at Sleepy Eye, Minnesota, April 12, 1881, and spent his early life along the line of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, at the different towns where his father was station agent. His Dousman ancestors were many years ago employes of the Hudson's Bay Company, and settled about Mackinac Island long before the middle west was permanently settled. The grandfather of Judge Dousman was Dr. John Dousman, who for many years was a prominent physician at Milwaukee, Wisconsin. He married Jane Paddock, and their oldest son, John, served in the Civil war. Their family consisted of four sons and one daughter.

The second son was Lyndsey W. Dousman, who was born at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, January 10, 1850, and is one of the veteran employes of the Milwaukee Railway. He is now living at Baker, but located there only recently, after four years' sojourn on the Pacific Coast. He was educated in Racine College and spent two years at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis. From the Academy he took up railroading, and his life work for forty years has been devoted to the Milwaukee company. He has been almost continuously on the payroll of that railroad. In politics he is a democrat, was brought up in the Episcopal Church, and is affiliated with the Lodge, Chapter, Commandery and Shrine of Masons. Lyndsey W. Dousman married Kittie E. Joslyn, who was born at Marengo, Illinois, April 29, 1851, daughter of Charles Joslyn. She died at Sequin, Washington, in September, 1919. Of her two sons, Hila B. died at the age of sixteen, and Judge Dousman is the only survivor.

Judge Dousman acquired a common school education, attended high school at Northfield, Minnesota, and later entered the law school of the University of Minnesota at Minneapolis. He completed his three years' course in June, 1904, and on his diploma was admitted to the bar of Minnesota, but he tried his first law suit at Parkston, South Dakota. From there he moved to Lemmon, South Dakota, and was appointed United States commissioner. He was in Lemmon from the date of the construction of the Milwaukee Railroad in 1907 until January 1, 1911. As United States commissioner he did literally a "land office" business, 4,000 applications for land entries being made through him. His office was practically headquarters for all the entries made by settlers in that region.

From South Dakota Judge Dousman came to Montana and practiced at Billings until April, 1913, when he removed to Baker and has since been a lawyer and citizen of Montana. As a lawyer he did a general practice both at Billings and at Baker, and for six years was associated at Baker with Edwin S. Booth under the firm name of Booth & Dousman. This partnership was dissolved when Judge Dousman was elevated to the bench. He was also elected county attorney of Fallon County, succeeding Martin Flasted. He took an active part in the creation of Fallon County, and was not only a candidate for county attorney but also a strong partisan for the location of the county seat at Baker.

On that double candidacy he was elected, and was re-elected, serving four years. He was the first county attorney after Baker became the county seat. Judge Dousman has always been an active democrat, though he has made no attempt to maintain his leadership in the party since going on the bench. He was appointed by Governor Stewart as one of the judges of the Sixteenth District on March 1, 1919. His associate on the bench is Judge O'Hern. While technically the work of the two judges is coextensive, the district is in practice divided, Judge Dousman presiding over the courts of the several counties in the eastern part of the district. Both the bar and the public have accorded him the credit of being a very efficient and able judge.

While at Lemmon, South Dakota, Judge Dousman met Ila Merle Blair, but they were married at Eau Claire, Wisconsin, June 14, 1910. She was born at Augusta, Wisconsin, October 21, 1888, and like her husband, is the one survivor of two children. Her parents were Charles E. and Laura M. (Horel) Blair, both natives of Wisconsin. Her father is now retired and living at Lemmon, and spent his active career as a stockman. Mrs. Dousman finished her education in the Milwaukee Normal School and was a teacher for a year before her marriage.

The Dousman home is one of the attractive bungalows which adorn the south side of Baker. They have a home modern in every respect, containing six rooms. This home has entertained club members and other social functions of Baker in which Mrs. Dousman takes an active part. She is a member of the State Federation of Women's Clubs. Judge Dousman was the second master of the Masonic Lodge at Lemmon, South Dakota, the first master being his father. He is now affiliated with Sandstone Lodge of Masons and is also a member of the Royal Arch Chapter, the Knight Templar Commandery and the Mystic Shrine. Mrs. Dousman is a member of the Eastern Star. Judge Dousman is also affiliated with the Miles City Lodge of Elks.

Jacob Stoller, one of the prosperous merchants of Plevna, is another instance of a foreign-born citizen of Montana who has been able to achieve more than ordinary success and to win the respect of his associates. He was born near Odessa, Russia, on November 29, 1864, a son of Domineck and Margaretta (Kost) Stoller. Although the Stollers had been established in the Odessa neighborhood for over forty-five years, the parents of Jacob Stoller, hearing of the better opportunities awaiting them across the ocean, decided upon making the great change, and embarked from Hamburg, Germany, on a steamer for the United States, when Jacob was eight years of age. The trip over was uneventful until the steamer came up with a lumber boat that had been rammed. The crew on this boat were in a deplorable condition, one of them dead, and the remainder starving. They were rescued, put aboard the steamer and carried with the others to New York City.

The Stollers were ticketed for Sandusky, Ohio, but conditions there did not meet with the approval of the parents, and after spending a winter in that city, during which time the children attended their first English school, they came on west to Dakota, and in 1873 the father took up a homestead and claim in Yankton County, fifteen miles northwest of what was then the territorial capital. He died before he obtained a title, and his widow proved up the claim and also one to another homestead. There she reared her children and saw to it that they were given the advantages of a public school education, living on that farm until her death in November, 1896, when she was seventy-two years of age. Her children appreciated their good mother, and her declining years were made comfortable by their loving care. These children were as follows: Henry, who lives in South Dakota; John, who lives at Leola, South Dakota; Jacob, whose name heads this review; Fred, who died in Yankton County, unmarried; George, who is a farmer near Quincy, Washington; Magdalena, who is the wife of Henry Schortzmann, of Scotland, South Dakota; and Elizabeth, who is the wife of Jacob Kost, of the same neighborhood as Henry Schortzmann. Both parents had been previously married and had children, but all of them remained in Russia.

Jacob Stoller assisted his mother and remained with her until he was twenty-four years old, when he began working as a common laborer, doing whatever honest work came to hand, for which he received the small wages of those days. At length he secured employment in a grain elevator, and there learned the fundamental principles of that line of business during the two fall seasons he remained with that concern. He then became a clerk at Eureka, South Dakota, and in 1889 went to Scotland, South Dakota, to accept a similar position, and he held it for five years. Mr. Stoller then returned to Eureka and for four years continued working as a clerk. He then bought a grain warehouse and embarked in a business of his own, and paid $1,000 cash for it, all of which he had saved out of his small earnings. On account of crop conditions and subsequent hard times, although he made some money, the business did not net him the returns he had expected, and in 1900 he took two others into partnership with him and established a general merchandise business at Java, South Dakota, and moved his grain warehouse from Eureka overland to Java and handled grain. Three years later he combined the two lines of business, using his original warehouse for the storing of merchandise and erecting an elevator for grain. In 1906 one of the partners dropped out of the firm, which then became Bauer & Stoller, which continued until February, 1915, when Mr. Stoller sold and came to Plevna. While living at Java Mr. Stoller connected himself with the affairs of the town, was a member of the town board and of the school board for a number of years, and also served as a justice of the peace, working always as a republican, and being sent by his party to represent his district in local conventions. For eight and one-half years he served Java as postmaster under the Roosevelt administrations, and was in every way a representative citizen in good standing. Since coming to Plevna he has been placed on the town board. He cast his first presidential vote for Benjamin Harrison.

After disposing of his interests at Java Mr. Stoller traveled through Oregon, Washington and Montana, and found what he was looking for at Plevna. His store building is a single story structure 24 by 50 feet, and he has a warehouse 30 by 24 feet, with basement where he stores his surplus stock. Mr. Stoller also owns his bungalow of six rooms, which he erected himself. Since he established his present store he has advanced rapidly, and now enjoys a fine patronage not only from the people of Plevna, but the surrounding country. His stocks are fresh, up-to-date, and as low in price as is consistent with their quality.

On October 20, 1889, Mr. Stoller was married in Yankton County, South Dakota, to Miss Rosina

Serr, a daughter of Michael Serr and his wife, Catherine (Ingel) Serr, all of whom were born in Russia, near the birthplace of Mr. Stoller. Mrs. Stoller is one of four sons and three daughters born to her parents, and she was the third in the family.

Mr. and Mrs. Stoller have the following children: Ida, who is the wife of W. P. Stoddard, of Ingomar, Montana; and Anetta, who for two years was a stenographer in a Miles City, Montana, bank, but is now Mrs. A. L. Morgan. Mr. Stoller belongs to the Knights of the Maccabees. In his religious belief he holds to the faith of the Reformed Church, and is generous to that congregation. A fine business man, he has known how to make money, and also how to win and hold the confidence of his community. He has given of his best to his adopted country, and it would be difficult to find a man who is more generally respected all over Fallon County than he.

WILLIAM J. BRADSHAW is numbered among the early settlers of Custer County, and many years of his life have been devoted to the stock business. He arrived in Montana in 1885 as a trailsman from Texas, delivering cattle for the Matador outfit to the "777" company at Mingusville, now known as Wibaux, Montana. He joined the outfit on the plains of the Lone Star state, whose headquarters were at Balance Springs, and for two years he was employed by them in running cattle on the range.

Mr. Bradshaw continued with the "777" outfit in Montana for about three years at different times, and then went with the Ryan outfit on the Musselshell. At one time he took a herd of their cattle to the Standing Rock Indian Agency to fill out a Government contract for beef for the Indians, and on his return from that trip he went to work for the "E2" Company at Miles City, whose cattle were ranging over the region around Ismay and all over Fallon and Carter counties, spending three years with that company. He then took up his claim at his present location, the old "C7" ranch, which had been opened up by parties who suffered disaster in the winter of 1886 by the loss of their cattle and had abandoned the improvements, Mr. Bradshaw acquiring them simply by taking possession.

He had acquired a bunch of fifteen head of cattle in 1892, but the cattle rustlers on the head of Whitney Creek took all but one of them during the first summer. This misfortune forced him to resume work for the "E2" Company, and he spent another year or so as a wage worker. Subsequently taking a bunch of cattle on the shares for A. B. Lindberg, he after a time purchased the herd and began what proved to be a permanent career in the cattle business. He has continued the "C7" brand through all the subsequent years, acquiring it from Mr. Cogshell, who in turn had obtained it with the remnant of the old outfit. His stock breeding has been carried on with the Shorthorn strain, in the belief that that animal produces a greater amount of beef than many of the more popular breeds of Montana stock.

Mr. Bradshaw entered his homestead at the old "C7," which forms a part of his present large ranch, eleven miles northwest of Knowlton. His wife's homestead, and where are located his building and most substantial improvements, was entered on Locate Creek, and on this tract the first Bradshaw home in Montana was built. This pioneer dwelling was a log cabin of two rooms, with cedar poles for roofing and covered with dirt. It is a striking contrast to the splendid modern home which has succeeded it, and the cement barn of today replaced the old stock shelter and marks the progress of time in Montana's history of development. Mr. Bradshaw has one of the most valuable hay ranches of the region, the natural meadows producing abundance of alfalfa hay for the stock during the winter months. His land embraces an area of almost twenty sections, the greater part of which is under fence, and now in the zenith of his career as a cattle grower about four hundred head are grazing under his brand.

During his life's history covering a period of a little less than sixty years Mr. Bradshaw has had more than the average amount of experiences and has traveled over many parts of the world. He was born in Lancashire, England, at Manchester, August 4, 1864, a son of Joseph and Mary (Stanton) Bradshaw. In their family were thirteen children, but William J. and a brother, Thomas, were the only ones of this large number to come to the United States. William Bradshaw completed his education in the Metropolitan Business College at Chicago in 1887, seven years after he had arrived in this country. When a boy he ran away from the parental home and made his way to Australia, stopping first at Melbourne and then going on to the island of Mauritius. He subsequently continued his wanderings to Bombay, India, where he met a neighbor from England who owned a trading vessel, and the young lad worked for him during one year, trading about among the islands and over to Madagascar. He subsequently went on board a French schooner at Mauritius, and was caught in a hurricane off the Cape of Good Hope, which cleared the ship of masts and caused her to spring a leak. The crew were compelled to subsist on a cup of coffee a day, together with cognac and claret, and finally were obliged to abandon the vessel. They were picked up by another sailing ship and landed at Falmouth, England.

Returning home after an absence of two years and surprising his parents, for they had not heard from him in all this time, he declared his intentions of leaving the sea. In 1880, however, he sailed from Liverpool, intending to embark in the rubber business in Nicaragua. With a boy companion he landed at Galveston, Texas, where he had relatives living, and while riding Texas horses over the wide range of that region he became infatuated with the life of that open country and gave up the idea of continuing the journey to Nicaragua.

For a time Mr. Bradshaw worked among his relatives, and then became associated with the Christian Brothers, gathering stock for them until he finally drifted on west and joined the Matador Company.

Mr. Bradshaw became a naturalized citizen of the United States at Miles City and began voting with the democratic party. His first presidential ballot was cast for Mr. Cleveland in Texas while yet an alien, and he again supported him in 1892. His only official public service has been as a school director in district No. 31, which he assisted in establishing.

At Miles City, Montana, in October, 1898, he was married to Miss Margaret Ross, who was born in Scotland and came to Miles City, Montana, to visit the McLean family. Two sons have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bradshaw, Joseph Ross and Alexander W. Bradshaw.

ROBERT M. HAMLIN is one of the older residents of that section of the Yellowstone Valley now embraced in Prairie County. The work that has established his favorable business rating has been as a stock raiser and farmer. Mr. Hamlin has served as a member of the Board of County Commissioners of Prairie County since that county was created, and in the opinion of all concerned has handled those responsibilities wisely and well.

He was born in Todd County, Minnesota, February 7, 1873. This branch of the Hamlin family came to America in colonial times, the tradition being that three English brothers were responsible for the name on this side of the Atlantic. The father of Robert M. Hamlin was Charles F. Hamlin, who was born at Clays, Onondaga County, New York, May 2, 1835. He grew up on a farm, had a common school education, learned the use of blacksmith tools, and followed that trade to some extent. Living in a timber country, he believed he saw an opportunity to make a fortune at lumbering, and to prepare himself for the business he went into a lumber mill as a common laborer. Eventually he became a mill owner, and followed that industry in Minnesota, where he located before the Civil war, for thirty years. When the Civil war came on he enlisted as a Union soldier in Company E of the Second Minnesota Cavalry, and though he was in the army two years he was never called to the fighting front, his duty being principally in patrolling the frontier. After the war he took a homestead in Todd County, proved it up and made a home there for a dozen years and then moved to Morrison County, Minnesota. In the early '90s he came to Montana and was associated with a son in a ranching enterprise south of Terry for ten years. The last dozen years of his life he lived at Terry, where he died September 19, 1919. He took a keen interest in campaigns and elections as a republican, and in Minnesota served as county commissioner of Todd County. In Walworth County, Wisconsin, he married Miss Phebe Bridges, daughter of Robert Bridges. She is still living, at the age of eighty-two. To her marriage were born five sons and a daughter, and those to reach mature years were: Hardy, of Todd County; Mrs. Georgie Coil, of Terry, Montana; Lewis, who died as a rancher in Prairie County, leaving a family by his wife, Alice Braley; Robert M.; and William H., of Terry.

Robert M. Hamlin spent his early life on a farm in Morrison County, Minnesota, acquired a country school education, and also gained considerable experience in the lumber woods, getting out timber, and in the mills, and that work employed his time and energies for about five years before he came to Montana.

Mr. Hamlin settled in Montana April 11, 1896, and for the first two years was a ranch hand employed on the roundup. One year he spent in a sheep camp for George Burt, and learned something of the lonesomeness of a herder and the hardships of the sheep camp. After an apprenticeship at the blacksmith's trade in Terry he bought the shop and continued the business two years. Selling out, he bought a livery barn, and conducted that until the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway was built. The following two years he spent in the service of the Milwaukee company as a grading contractor, and the last year was employed at side track building and dam construction.

These varied enterprises, while worthy of notice, seemed only preparatory to his real career as a rancher. About the time he left the railroad company he entered a homestead on the north side of the Yellowstone, and his business activities have been centered there ever since, though for several years his winters have been spent in Terry for the school advantages it affords. The first home of the Hamlins on the claim was a mere shack, 10 by 12, roofed with common boards and battens and without floor. That was only temporary, and was soon succeeded by something better. Mr. Hamlin is one of the men in this locality who have made a creditable record as a farmer. Grain is the best crop suited to the locality, and his best record per acre on both wheat and flax has been twenty-six bushels, while in one season he threshed eighty bushels of oats to the acre. His ownership extends to 1,760 acres, and of that 1,000 acres have been brought under cultivation. From first to last stock growing has been a prominent feature, and his brands are the "5H" and "YM."

For a number of years his friends and neighbors have looked upon Mr. Hamlin as a citizen who could be relied upon for advice, ideas and active participation when the affairs of the community needed them. Good schools and education have been uppermost in his mind ever since he moved his family to his ranch, and he naturally encouraged the establishment of a school and was one of the trustees of district No. 64 until 1918. He worked to build up public sentiment favoring the creation of the new County of Prairie, and was a member of the committee appointed for the purpose of waging the fight for county division. When the matter came to a vote he was a candidate on the first ticket for county commissioner, was elected in 1914, and he and Henry Kramer and Lon Fluss have constituted the board throughout the history of Prairie County. Upon them have devolved many important responsibilities, requiring a tremendous amount of time and detail work necessary to get the business of the new county established. The records of the county from which Prairie was created had to be transcribed, supplies had to be purchased, and provisions made for courthouse and other buildings. The commissioners have also carried out a large program of road building, including the grading of 200 miles, and the construction of a road across the county north and south and the Yellowstone trail east and west. Mr. Hamlin is a republican in politics, having cast his first presidential vote for Major McKinley in 1896. He is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America. He and his family enjoy one of the modern bungalow homes of Terry.

In Morrison County, Minnesota, November 9, 1898, he married Ella Campbell, daughter of Daniel and Margaret (Maxwell) Campbell. The parents were natives of Scotland, but came to the United States prior to the Civil war, in which her father served as a soldier scout. The Campbells were farmers, and both died in Minnesota. Of their eleven children seven grew to mature years: Mrs. Mary Bowman, of Crow Wing County, Minnesota; Effie, wife of George Johnston, of Hilliard, Washington; Dan, of Morrison County, Minnesota; Samuel, of Morrison County; Edward, who was drowned in the Yellowstone River, unmarried; Thomas, who lost his life by drowning in Alaska nine months after his brother's death; and Mrs. Hamlin, the youngest, who was born November 9, 1877. Mrs. Hamlin acquired her education in the country schools. Mr. and Mrs. Hamlin have a family of four children: Kathryn E., Eunice G., Sylvia M. and Roberta Luella.

JOHN C. EPLER, proprietor of the flourishing mercantile establishment which bears his name at Dooley, is one of the early settlers of this locality, and has the credit of having erected the first building in Dooley, it being completed in August, 1913, this year being the date of his entry into Montana as a permanent citizen. The first few months after he reached the state he spent at Outlook, where he was engaged in merchandising in connection with the firm of Epler Brothers, and the business at Dooley was for a time conducted under that name, but later Mr. Epler became the sole proprietor. The store he occupies is located in a two-story brick structure, with which he replaced the original one of frame. For some time after his coming here his was the center of the business life of the community, and his store is still one of the leading ones in this part of the country. In addition to his interests as a general merchant Mr. Epler is also interested in farming, having been one of the original homesteaders. He located his claim to a portion of the public domain two miles west of Dooley, and on it erected a three-room shack in which he and his family resided while he was doing his development work. While he was proving up his claim he was also conducting his store.

Mr. Epler was born near Battle Lake, Otter Tail County, Minnesota, December 11, 1886, and there the family resided for a time, and he commenced his attendance at the public schools. Later his parents moved to Austin, Minnesota, and there he took the high school course. Subsequently Mr. Epler went to Charles City, Iowa, where he worked as a clerk in a general store, and as such learned merchandising from the bottom up.

John C. Epler is a son of Jacob H. and Anice (Chandler) Epler, and was the seventh child born to their marriage. Another of their sons, George C. Epler, is also a prominent resident of Dooley, and a biography of him will be found elsewhere in this work.

The marriage of John C. Epler to Miss May Furlong took place at Austin, Minnesota, where she was born. She is a daughter of John J. and Agnes (Ryan) Furlong. Mr. Furlong was born in Ireland and was brought to the United States when a child of six years, and during his active life he was a stock farmer. For many years he took an active part in the work of the republican party in Mower County, Minnesota, and is now a member of the Lower House of the Minnesota State Assembly. Mrs. Epler was the second child born in a family of four. She was graduated from the high school course at Austin, Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Epler have one daughter, Virginia May. It is a somewhat remarkable fact that while Jacob H. Epler was a strong republican, all of his sons are equally ardent in their support of the principles of the democratic party.

Mr. Epler has always been a supporter of the schools, the good roads movement and other public-spirited institutions calculated to assist in the further development of his community. He is a man of high character and possessed of the qualities which lead men into new regions with the object of assisting in their upbuilding. While Dooley is still one of the new communities of the state, great advancement is shown, and the more progressive men like Mr. Epler and his brother have many plans in view with the idea of further developing the natural resources of the section, inducing new capital to make investments, and bringing to it additional settlers, and all of these will be carried out, for these men know how to go about such work and accomplish what they set out to do.

George A. Horkan was born July 4, 1876. His mother died when he was only five years of age and his father was drowned when the son was eight years old. He lived with his uncle on a farm and attended a country school until he reached the age of fifteen. He worked out as a cash boy to a dry goods merchant at a salary of $8.00 per month and board. He quit the job to come to Custer County, Montana, in the spring of 1893. He worked on a ranch, rode the range and attended sheep camps until the fall of 1897, when, having sufficient money to further educate himself, he went to Washington, D. C., and entered a preparatory school. He secured a position as helper in the Government printing office, working eight hours a day at a salary of $60.00 per month, attending school at night. He took the examination for clerk in the Census Bureau, and secured a position as such, at a salary of $1,000 per year. While so engaged he enlisted as a private soldier in the First District of Columbia Volunteers, and subsequently was transferred to Troop I, Third U. S. Volunteer Cavalry, which troop was organized at Miles City, Montana. He served throughout the Spanish-American war as a private soldier and was honorably discharged at the end of the war. He returned to Washington, D. C., and secured his old position in the United States Census Bureau, and in the fall of 1899 entered Georgetown University Law School, attending the same at night, and from which University he graduated in law in June, 1902.

Upon graduating from Georgetown University Law School, Mr. Horkan returned to Montana and was admitted to the bar of the State of Montana by the Supreme Court thereof, and engaged in the practice of his profession at Forsyth, Montana, where he has since resided. He was elected county attorney of Rosebud County, Montana, in 1906, and re-elected in 1908. He served a number of years on the City Council of Forsyth, and in 1917 was unanimously elected mayor of the City of Forsyth. In 1912 he was chairman of the State Progressive Republican Convention and was elected delegate to the Chicago convention which nominated Theodore Roosevelt for president of the United States. In the fall of 1912 he was nominated as progressive candidate for Congress in the State of Montana. He volunteered his services to the Government in 1918, and was commissioned first lieutenant in the army, and subsequently promoted to a captaincy. He was honorably discharged from the army in 1919. In the fall of 1920 he was nominated as the republican candidate for judge of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District consisting of the counties of Rosebud, Musselshell, Treasure and Golden Valley, and at the general election was elected by a majority of over 2,000.

On September 11, 1906, Mr. Horkan married Miss Marie Newnes, of Forsyth, Montana. There are five children, two sons and three daughters, four of whom are attending public schools at Forsyth and all were born in Forsyth, Montana.

John C. Lyndes, who came to Montana thirty years ago, has had a busy and effective career as a pioneer teacher, lawyer, promoter of irrigation and in other business enterprises and for the past thirteen years has been identified with business and the law in what is now Treasure County. He helped found and establish the town of Hysham, where he lives.

Mr. Lyndes is of New England birth and ancestry. His grandfather, of English ancestry, was among the pioneers of Vermont and at one time served as county judge. He also participated in some Indian wars. He was a whig in politics and a Methodist. He had one son and three daughters, all of whom married and had children.

The only son was John T. Lyndes, who was born in the same house as his son, John C. This house stood at Brookfield, Vermont, and John C. Lyndes first saw the light of day there November 17, 1865. Five years later in 1870, the family left the Green Mountain state and established their home in Northern Illinois, and then after fourteen years, in 1884, made another stage in their westward migration, going to Kearney, Nebraska. John T. Lyndes was a farmer, stockman and drover in Vermont, Illinois and Nebraska, and died in the latter state in 1888, at the age of sixty-two. He was a republican in politics. He married Sophia M. Collins daughter of George Collins, of Troy, New York, and she is now living at Forsyth, Montana, in her seventy-seventh year. John T. Lyndes and wife had seven sons: Elmer E., a farmer and stockman of Treasure County, Montana; Wallace H., of Treasure County; William W., who was drowned in the Yellowstone River, unmarried; Pliny E., who died in Montana, unmarried; Bert, of Billings; Clarence W., of Hysham, whose wife is postmistress of the town; and John C.

John C. Lyndes acquired his early education in Illinois and Nebraska, completing his high school course at Kearney. He began teaching in that state, his first school being at Plum Creek, now Lexington. It was with a record of an earnest and capable teacher that he came to Montana in 1890, locating on the Cheyenne Reservation where, at Lame Deer, he taught school. For the following eight years he was a teacher along the Rosebud in Custer County. While instructing the youth of that region he was diligently studying law, and finished his preparation for his profession in the law department of the University of Nebraska at Lincoln, where he graduated with the class of 1898. Several of his classmates have become well known Montana lawyers, including Judge C. C. Hurley of Glendive, O. W. Belden, speaker of the House of the Montana Legislature, Ike Pace of Whitehall, Fred L. Gibson of Livingston and William L. Wallace of Missoula.

From university Mr. Lyndes returned to Montana and engaged in active practice at Forsyth. He was the first lawyer to open an office in Rosebud County, was appointed county attorney to succeed Fred Gibson and subsequently was twice elected to the office. Besides the routine of duty he figured in the prosecution of the famous import cases and the bounty fraud cases, all well remembered by old timers.

At the opening of the Crow Reservation lands Mr. Lyndes and others bought a large tract, and constructed the first irrigation ditch, known as the Sanders Cooperative Ditch Company, now owned by the Yellowstone Irrigation Ditch Company, covering and watering 17,000 acres of land. The headgate is near Myers, and the lands watered are in the valley within five miles east of Armells Creek. Associated with John Hershberger Mr. Lyndes constructed the Low Line Ditch at Hardin, covering 10,000 acres of Valley lands the headgate being on the Big Horn, about four miles from Hardin and in the vicinity of the old Mission and covering the Sorrel Horse Bottoms. All these lands are under a high state of cultivation and have contributed enormously to the food production of Montana. Mr. Lyndes shipped the first car of wheat and the first beets that ever went out of this region. He has become extensively interested in irrigated lands aside from the ones under these systems of irrigation and individually owns some valuable properties in irrigated valleys. He has been a grower and shipper of sheep, cattle and horses for several years.

In the establishment of Hysham he was associated with Ada Channell and J. O. Lockard in laying out the town. The first day's sale resulted in the purchase of 169 lots at $5.00 apiece, that giving a substantial impetus to the foundation of the village. Mr. Lyndes was the leading factor in the organization of the Hysham State Bank, now the First National Bank of Hysham, serving as its first vice president, and with Mr. Patterson established the first hardware business, and continued to be identified with it for a number of years.

While busily engaged in these various constructive enterprises Mr. Lyndes practically abandoned his profession, but later resumed the law and had charge of the practice of George A. Horkan of Forsyth until the latter's return from the army. He then opened his office in Hysham. Mr. Lyndes has been chairman of the Rosebud County Central Committee of the republican party conducting several county campaigns, and was a leader in the movement to establish Treasure County. Besides his farming and other business interests he is associated with others in prospecting for oil and gas in Wyoming and Montana.

During the World war he was fuel administrator for Rosebud County, chairman of the Red Cross Seal Department, and subsequently was chairman of the local committee for the Roosevelt Memorial Fund. In his attitude to fraternities Mr. Lyndes describes himself as "a barbarian in school and has remained one since." His father was a Mason, and frequently gave a helping hand to unworthy persons through fraternal ties, and that, perhaps, was the chief reason why his son never took kindly to orders.

At Sumner, Nebraska, where for several years she had been principal of schools, John Lyndes married Miss Alice Mercer. Mrs. Lyndes was born at Canton, Ohio, August 23, 1874, second in a family of three daughters and one son. Her father, W. M. Mercer, was in the Civil war as a soldier under both General Sherman and General Grant. Mrs. Lyndes had a normal school training. She is the mother of five children: Mona, Ross W., Nova B., Jay C. and Alice Merle. Mona graduated from high school in 1920 and is taking the nurse's training course in St. Vincent Hospital at Billings. Ross is in high school, while Nova and Jay are pupils of the grade schools.

John K. Lambert. During the early and formative period of Montana's history, in 1884, James K. Lambert arrived within its borders and began the work of reclamation which has steadily gone forward. He was then a youth of sixteen, and his first stop in the state was in the locality where Ekalaka now stands, then in Custer County and the region was then but a wide expanse of pasture land. He came with the old Hash Knife trail herd from Colorado, he having joined the herd at Brush, that state, while it was passing from the Pecos River in Texas. Mr. Lambert spent two years with that outfit after reaching Montana, also worked for various other concerns later, covering the entire Eastern Montana country until the Milwaukee Railroad was built through, when he filed on a half section of the public domain thirteen miles south of Plevna and settled down as a farmer.

Mr. Lambert began his homestead improvements with a frame shelter 14 by 16 feet, and in this rude and pioneer dwelling he and his wife took up their abode. This, however, was his second home in Montana, his first having been located near Ekalaka and built in 1891. Mr. Lambert entered into the work of regular farming, raising the first flax in the locality, and the second crop raised on his claim was sold to the new settlers coming in and brought $3.00 a bushel. A yield of twenty-one bushels to the acre was threshed from his crop, an almost unprecedented yield, and flax and oats constituted his main crops for some years, when wheat entered importantly into his farming activities. His best yield of wheat was forty bushels to the acre. Mr. Lambert has continued his agricultural labors with success, has developed his land into fertile fields, and has increased the area of his estate to 1,792 acres. This large acreage places his holdings in the ranch class, and he was quite extensively engaged in the raising of sheep and cattle until the settlers encroached too closely upon his range, and he supplanted his sheep and cattle with horses. His improvements now comprise a good four-room residence, a barn 36 by 48 feet for his horses, and also sheds and protection for his other stock, and 600 acres of his land is under cultivation.

Although not a native westerner, Mr. Lambert was brought to the west by his parents when he was a babe, and thus the life of the free and open country has been familiar to him from his earliest recollections. He was born in Lawrence County, Ohio, March 8, 1868, but to the age of fourteen he was identified with Washington, Kansas, his parents removing at that time to Colorado and settling near Sterling in Weld County. The schooling which he received during his early boyhood days was very little, but after he was twenty-nine years old, during the winters of 1897-8, he attended school in Steele, North Dakota, making splendid progress in his studies. At the end of this training he took the teachers' examination and received an average of ninety-five per cent or better in all the branches.

Mr. Lambert's parents were Amos and Rommane C. (Litch) Lambert, both of whom were born in Lawrence County, Ohio, the father born in 1843 and the mother in 1850. Amos Lambert was a Union soldier during the Civil war, entering the army from West Virginia as a member of the Ninth West Virginia Regiment. During his service he was wounded by a shot in the leg, and after recovering returned to the service. He was in the mounted infantry, and was with General Sherman's army at the battle of Winchester. While in the army he learned penmanship, being one of but two men in his immediate command who could write at all, and he was therefore in great demand in writing letters for his comrades. He became very expert with the pen, and when his company went on to Washington, D. C., after the close of the war he was detailed as a penman to write discharges and do other clerical work connected with the mustering out of the troops.

On leaving the army Amos Lambert became a farmer in Ohio, then in Kansas, where he passed through the grasshopper scourge, and subsequently removed to Colorado. In 1897 he came to Montana, and his home is now in Ekalaka. His political support is given to the republican party. The following children were born to Amos and Rommane Lambert: John K., the Montana farmer; Reuben E., whose home is in Sumas, Washington; Rachel E., the wife of John R. Schneider, of Ekalaka; Amos L., of Fallon County, Montana; Florence M., the wife of R. J. McNish, of Hill City, South Dakota; Lulu K., wife of Tony Treberts, of Ismay, Montana; Nellie, wife of Marshall Wright, of Fallon County; and Brice, whose home is at Plevna, Montana.

Mr. John K. Lambert was married in old Custer County, January 8, 1903, to Mrs. Cora Caldwell, who was born in Eau Claire County, Wisconsin, in 1877, a daughter of John Long. By her first marriage Mrs. Lambert had three children: Nell, wife of Adam Maclay; Ethel, who married Bert James; and Ed, who died in young manhood.

Mr. Lambert began voting as a republican, casting his first presidential vote for Benjamin Harrison, and since that time he has never missed the privilege of voting at presidential elections and has never filled a public office with the exception of that of deputy sheriff under Sheriff John Gibb of Miles City. Few men of the olden days in Montana were as familiar with the life and men of the plains country as John K. Lambert. With them he shared the rough and frontier life of the times, and his reminiscences of the events of those days, of the tragedies as well as the joys of the plainsmen, are both interesting and instructive to his listeners.

Ivory Brackett. Montana has received its citizens from all parts of the United States, the wonderful possibilities of this great commonwealth drawing like magnet men from every calling, but especially from that of farming. It is a far call, however, from the bleak New England hillside farms of a few acres to the great sunny stretches of ranchland, a single property in many instances comprising several townships, and yet Ivory Brackett heard and heeded it and arrived at Miles City in August, 1898. He was born at Clinton, Kennebec County, Maine, November 13, 1877, a son of Benjamin and Ann M. (Clifford) Brackett, both of whom were born, reared, married and died in Maine. The first Brackett of whom there is definite knowledge came to America from Wales prior to the American Revolution, and from that time to the present the representatives of the name have been connected with the affairs of this country. Benjamin and Ann Brackett had the following children: Daniel W., who lives at Clinton, Maine; Nathan, who died in Maine; Prescott, who lives in Winslow, Maine; Mrs. James Donaldson, who lives at Boston, Massachusetts; Ivory, whose name heads this review; and five who died in childhood.

Growing up in his native place, Ivory Brackett learned farming from a New England standpoint from his father and probably would have remained in his native state, as his brothers have done, but his only sister had married and come West with her husband, James Donaldson, a prominent stockman of Montana. Homesickness probably made the young wife send for her younger brother, suggesting that he would find plenty of opportunity for rising in this new country, and the ambitious young man, chafing at the narrow confines of his home village, borrowed the money to take the trip and left the train at Miles City. Welcomed at the ranch, he was not content to be a visitor, but went to work and earned every cent of his pioneer wages of $35.00 a month. His experiences in the east were of but little use on the open range, and he naturally had to put up with considerable hazing as a "tenderfoot" before he learned the customs of the country.

His first work was as a sheepherder and then he "tended camp" and finally, in the fall of 1907, the Donaldson & Brackett ranch was turned over to Mr. Brackett and he has been its manager and operator ever since. Until the closing of the range to stockmen he and his brother-in-law had merely used the land for grazing purposes, but then Mr. Brackett entered a homestead on a portion of it, and they leased two townships of railroad land, acquiring townships 16 and 40, which, with the public lands entered, comprise the present ranch.

Until he took over this ranch Mr. Brackett followed his brother-in-law's wishes and handled nothing but sheep, but at that time put in a small bunch of White Face cattle, and has continued his breeding with high grade males so that he has greatly improved the character of his stock. The ranch brands are "Lazy FR" on the left thigh, "Reversed FT-Bar" on right thigh and "S Lazy H" on the right thigh worn by both his cattle and horses. Mr. Brackett makes his own shipments to the Chicago market, and raises for wool and beef purposes.

On November 1, 1911, Ivory Brackett was married at Miles City, Montana, to Ellie Ziegler, born at Saint Jacobs, Ontario, Canada, September 12, 1885, a daughter of Louis Ziegler. He was a miller of Elora, Ontario, Canada, who married a Miss Weisel. Mrs. Brackett came to Montana with George Donalson and worked on the ranch for Mrs. Donalson, and is the only member of her family in the United States. Mr. and Mrs. Brackett have one son, James Frederick.

It was after he came to Montana that Mr. Brackett cast his first presidential vote and in it sounded the keynote of his politics, it being cast for the candidate of the republican party, William McKinley. From then on he has been a stanch supporter of the principles of this party and is able and willing to defend his stand, for he is convinced that his party is the one which has always given the country its most prosperous periods. His success has come through his willingness to work and learn and his ability to handle big problems before him for solution. So far he has not rendered any public service, but he gives to the administrations of others a hearty support which is valuable and encouraging, and is admitted to be one of the most representative men of his neighborhood.

Edward O. Lentz. Among the merchants of Baker whose residence here began with the early history of the town is Edward O. Lentz. He dates his business connection with Baker from July, 1910, when he and his brother Emil purchased the R. F. Pearce stock. The firm began business as Lentz Brothers, and for eight years the enterprise was conducted as such. With the election of Emil as treasurer of Fallon County the partnership was dissolved, and Edward O. Lentz has since owned and conducted the business.

Mr. Lentz is a native of Columbia County, Wisconsin, born at Columbus March 26, 1875, and is a son of August E. and Minnie (Richberg) Lentz. August Lentz was an old-countryman, born at Frankenberg, Pommern, where Edward O. Lentz' uncle, Karl Lentz, has been burgomaster for more than forty years. August Lentz grew up in his native land and learned the trade of gun and locksmith. He came to the United States prior to the Civil war and settled in Columbia County, Wisconsin, where he worked at his trade at Columbus and continued to be thus occupied throughout his active life. He citizenized, became a democrat as a voter, moved to South Dakota and proved up on a homestead near Brooklyn, and lived on his farm until his death at the age of eighty-two years. His widow passed away three years later. Their children were: Charley, who died at Baker, Montana, leaving three children; Antone, of Brooklyn, South Dakota; Annie, now Mrs. George Haber, of St. Paul, Minnesota; Emil, of Plevna, Montana; Henry, of St. Paul, Minnesota; Edward O.; and Theodore of Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Edward O. Lentz came to Montana from St. Cloud, Minnesota, where he was a land man during his earlier history with the place but later turned his attention to merchandising. He spent eighteen years in Minnesota, going there as a young man from Brooklyn, South Dakota, where he was reared from a child and where he secured his early education in the public schools, later spending two years in the State Agricultural College. He learned the barber trade there, and when he started his career in Minnesota worked for a time at his vocation in that state. He was then connected with O. W. Korr, selling Canadian lands, Mr. Lentz' duties comprising the conducting of the loads of landseekers entering into Canada as buyers. He covered Alberta in his trips for his company, centering at Leftbridge, the headquarters of the concern. He remained with this company about two years and then came to Montana and took up merchandising. The mercantile establishment of Mr. Lentz, while once a general merchandise stock, is now devoted to dry goods and notions and drifting more to an exclusive dry goods stock. His business site is on Main Street, occupying the old site of the pioneer drug store of Baker.

Mr. Lentz was married at St. Cloud, Minnesota, September 22, 1909, to Miss Sophie Wolter, whose parents were John and Elizabeth (Bearns) Wolter. Mrs. Lentz was born at Rices, Minnesota, June 15, 1885, and is the second of seven children, all of whom except Mrs. Lentz and Edward are residents of Minnesota. To Mr. and Mrs. Lentz there have been born three children: Elizabeth, Philip and Mary Jane.

Mr. Lentz voted democratic for his first presidential candidate, supporting Mr. Bryan, but has since voted for republican candidates for President and is in reality a free lance in politics, preferring the man to the party. His other interests at Baker, aside from his business enterprise, comprise residence properties which he built as a contribution to the growth of his town. He is a member of the Board of Aldermen of Baker and has served as such several years. Mr. Lentz volunteered for service during the Spanish-American war from St. Cloud, Minnesota, entering Company M, Thirteenth Regiment, Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, under Captain McKelvie and Colonel Ames. The regiment rendezvoused at the Presidio, San Francisco, and sailed for the Philippine Islands on the transport City of Para, landing, after forty-one days, at Manila. The regiment reached there in August, and after a week entered active service, its work against the Filipinos beginning August 13. Mr. Lentz participated in the engagements of Manila, around which city the command remained for eight months after the city fell, and fought forty-one engagements on the island against Aguinaldo's troops after the Manila battle, but escaped wounds through it all. The regiment sailed from Manila for home aboard the transport Sheridan, and reached San Francisco in 1900, after two years of service. Mr. Lentz was a corporal and was honorably discharged at San Francisco in October, 1900. Taking up civil life again, he returned to St. Cloud, Minnesota, and assumed the barber business, as before mentioned. His subsequent career has been one of constant advancement, characterized by the highest type of citizenship.

Neil B. Flatt, who first took an interest in the Hysham community when he homesteaded land near there in 1907, is well known in several localities of Montana, particularly in the City of Billings, where he had an active business career for a number of years. He has been in Montana for over thirty-five years, has become successful here, and at the same time has contributed substantial advantages to every community where he has lived.

Mr. Flatt was born in County Simcoe, Ontario, Canada, July 12, 1856. His father, James Flatt, was born and married in England, his wife being Mary Fenn. About 1836 the family came to America and settled in Ontario. Their home was so far from civilization that when coffee or sugar or other groceries were required James Flatt had to follow a blazed trail for twenty-five miles to the nearest market. He carried his wheat for flour sixteen miles on his back, a bushel at a time, and after having it ground returned home the same way. He made sugar from the maple trees, cut "bee trees" for his honey, and in other ways lived the real life of the pioneer. The capital city of Toronto was then called Little York and was a mere village. James Flatt died at the age of seventy-four as the result of being thrown from a load of hay. His widow survived him at the old Canadian home to the advanced age of ninety-one. Of their eleven children eight survive.

Neil B. Flatt lived on his father's farm to the age of sixteen. He graduated from public schools and secured a teacher's certificate, but his only service in that vocation was as a supply teacher for a brief time. At the age of sixteen he began learning the painter's trade, and altogether served an apprenticeship at four trades, painting, decorating, plastering and lathing.

As a mechanic he entered the Government service in North Dakota at Fort Stevenson on the Missouri River, where he helped remodel the old adobe fort into a schoolhouse. At Fort Yates in the same state a new frame school building was erected, and from there he and other members of the crew came to Poplar, Montana, and thence to Crow Agency, where they built a frame schoolhouse which the Indians burned in 1887. It was succeeded by the brick building on the same site. He was a mechanic in the service of the Government about three years, and during that time visited as far west as Custer, Montana.

Mr. Flatt first came to the territory of Montana as early as 1883. When he left the Government employ he engaged in painting and decorating at Glendive, and continued his work in and around that place for several months. He then came further west, and for three years was engaged in farming in Lewis and Clark counties. That was his first experience in the West at farming, and it was not sufficiently encouraging to hold him. Selling his farm improvements, he then located at Billings and engaged in house painting and decorating, opening a paint and wall paper store, and did contracting in those lines. He shipped the first car of wall paper into the city, and as a contractor carried from ten to twenty men on his pay roll. He was one of the substantial business men of Billings for about eleven years, after which he moved to Hysham, his present place of residence.

During his residence of about thirteen years in and around Hysham Mr. Flatt has contributed to the development of the town, including his own modest residence and a business house on Main Street. He crossed the line from Canada into the United States in March, 1879, arriving at Fargo, North Dakota, on Tuesday morning. Three days later he took out his first citizen papers. His final papers were issued at Helena. Politically he has always been a republican, and has served as a member of the Republican Central Committee. He has been a member of the school board in Rosebud County and at present is chairman of the Board of County Commissioners.

Thomas Johnston, Jr., a ranchman on Box Elder Creek in Carter County, belongs to the pioneer period in Montana's history. He was born in Boone County, Iowa, September 6, 1877, and came into this Northwest region as a child with his father, Thomas Johnston, Sr. The son's earliest recollections of things and events are centered in Montana, for practically his entire life has been spent within the borders of this commonwealth and he knows no other home.

He grew to mature years on the ranch of his parents along the Little Missouri River, and he obtained his early education in the country schools near the home. In the main, however, his boyhood and youth were spent in ranching and wrangling the home herd of cattle. He remained with his parents until past his majority, and when he took up the burden of life for himself it was on the Box Elder, in a log cabin on the site of his present home. His ranch is located about seven miles south of the post office of Ridgeway, and he obtained a squatter's right to the land along the creek before the domain was surveyed. After the survey he entered a homestead and subsequently entered an additional tract, and both have since been patented. His brother William came into this community at the same time, and their homes are situated within a few hundred yards of each other, both having substantially improved their ranches with residences and fences.

Thomas Johnston, Jr., was associated with his father in the cattle business early in his career as a stockman, and he adopted his initial cow brand about that time. His stock is known by the "R-Y" on the left side. The brothers inaugurated their cattle industry with the White Face stock, and Thomas Johnston has continued this strain through his twenty years of active identification with the business, and is operating as extensively at the present time as he has ever done on his ranch, which embraces a section and a half of deeded land. He has been identified with the cattle shipments of the Johnston raising for more than twenty years, Bellefourche having been the point of shipment to the Omaha and Chicago markets.

Mr. Johnston came to the Box Elder before the community was organized and when but few settlers could be found in the region. He was at that time unmarried, and he and his brother lived as bachelors and carried on their ranching affairs. Thomas Johnston married in Bellefourche, South Dakota, December 23, 1903, Miss Rosa May Wise, who was born in Labette County, Kansas, January 28, 1884, one of the three living daughters of Rank and Mary (Smith) Wise. The father, who was a farmer, died at Alzada, Montana, and the mother is still living in that town. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Johnston, Sylvia, Myrtle, Vera and Cecil.

Mr. Johnston proved an efficient aid in the organization of school district No. 8, and was a contributor to the funds which erected the Johnston School House in the district. He is still serving as a member of the school board. In political matters he gives his allegiance to the republican party, always casting his vote at elections, and he is proving himself a man of experience and efficiency in every department of the life and interests of the community of Ridgeway.

Charles J. Wagenbreth. In Miles City, where he established his home in 1906, Charles J. Wagenbreth has reached the highest point of his business success. Known throughout his community as an efficient butcher and meat market man, he has expanded his efforts to include banking, real estate dealing, ranching and stock raising. His ranch is located north of Miles City on Custer Creek, also owning other lands in that vicinity, and he is a director of the Miles City National Bank. Since coming to Montana in 1889 he has been prominently identified with matters that tend to instill life into this region, and at the fairs and annual roundups he has shown an especial interest and was president of the roundup for 1919.

Mr. Wagenbreth was born in St. Louis, Missouri, December 27, 1868, and as a boy he worked at the butcher's trade. Charles E. Wagenbreth, his father, was a butcher, and six of his sons learned the same trade. The senior Mr. Wagenbreth was born in Leipsic, Germany, and was married in St. Louis, Missouri, to Annie Schmidt, but both are now deceased. Of the nine children born to them are still living and include: William, who is engaged in farming in Chesterfield, Missouri; Annie, wife of H. Fehl, of St. Louis; Charles J., of Miles City; Rose, whose home is in St. Louis; Henry, engaged in the meat business in St. Louis; Edward, assistant manager of the Independent Packing Company of St. Louis; Bertha, wife of Ed Keary, also of St. Louis; Ernest, a butcher in St. Louis; and Albert, another of the brothers following the butchering trade in St. Louis.

From his native City of St. Louis Mr. Wagenbreth went to Colorado, where he spent two years in Denver and Blackhawk County, then another year in Salt Lake City, Utah, and was returning West from a visit home when he stopped in Montana in 1889 and secured work from the Butte Butchering Company. He was an expert butcher at this period. After some time he went to White Hall, Montana, and engaged in the butchering business for himself, spending two years there, and during the time was married. For six months he was the butcher for the Anaconda Mining Company at Belt, this state, and then resumed the butchering business for himself in Helena, conducting the Rialto Market on State Street for nine months. He then purchased a shop in East Helena and continued in business there until 1906, when he sold his interests and came to Miles City, opening the Montana Meat Market on Main Street. Mr. Wagenbreth holds the championship of the Northwest as a beef and sheep dresser. During the years in which he has been engaged in the business he has developed wonderful rapidity and expertness as a butcher, and in his first contest in this state he dressed a beef which weighed more than seven hundred pounds in a few seconds over seven minutes. He makes but four strokes of the knife to the side, and removes the hide from an animal in less than half a minute. In the contest at Butte in 1895 he dressed a beef weighing (dressed) 595 pounds in four minutes and fifty seconds and two sheep in four minutes and thirty-five seconds.

In his political affiliations Mr. Wagenbreth began voting as a democrat, casting his first presidential ballot in 1888 for Mr. Cleveland, and he has ever since satisfied his political activities merely as a voter. In his fraternal relations he is an Elk and a Knight of Pythias and a member of the Fraternal Order of Eagles. During his residence here he has contributed to Miles City a business block on Main Street, and he also owns his own business house and the Irish Theatre. He also built one of the splendid homes of the town, located at 1117 Pleasant Street, and has built other residence property.

Mr. Wagenbreth was married at Butte, although a resident of White Hall at the time, February 11, 1895, to Miss Christina Gelhaus. She was born in Iowa City, Iowa, June 1, 1866, and her father, who was by trade a tailor, died in early life. She came to Montana in 1892 and located at Glendale, and it was there she met Mr. Wagenbreth. Her brother, Herman Gelhaus, resides in Dillon, Montana. Two daughters, Florence and Genevieve, have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wagenbreth. The elder, Florence, is now the wife of Schuyler E. Brockway, of Miles City, a bookkeeper for the Miles City National Bank.

Mrs. Maude Banker Wills. While one of the most alive and youthful spirits of the community of Wibaux, Mrs. Wills has a veteran's record as an educator, and her own experience serves almost as a history of the public schools system in the town and in the County of Wibaux.

Mrs. Wills, who has been the first and only county superintendent of schools of Wibaux County, was born at Atlantic, Iowa, and as a child went with her parents to Russell County, Kansas. Her father, Albert Banker, was of old Knickerbocker Dutch stock, was born at Tweed, Canada, in 1834, was liberally educated, and married in Canada Miss Florilla Comer, daughter of John Comer. In Canada Albert Banker followed farming, and after his removal to Kansas engaged in merchandising with his son Louis, and took an active part in the building up of a splendid business. He died March 27, 1917, having survived his wife many years. His children were: John, of Russell, Kansas; Louis, successor of his father as a merchant at Russell; Willard, a resident of San Francisco; James D., of Russell; Edwin A., a member of the United States Marine Band at Washington, D. C.; Charles A., of the Exchange State Bank of Glendive, Montana; and Mrs. Wills.

Mrs. Wills was reared at Russell, Kansas, graduated from the grammar and high school there, spent two years in the teachers' training course at the Kansas Normal at Salina, and for two years was a student of languages and music at Kansas University. As a girl of sixteen she taught her first term of school at Telluride, Colorado. She was there in the seventh and eighth grades for two years, and then came to Wibaux, Montana, for the purpose of visiting her brother. While here she was offered a school, accepted it, and there has scarcely been an interruption to her continued work as an educator for twenty years. When she first came here Wibaux was a part of Dawson County, the northern boundary of which was Canada, and Dawson and Custer made up all of Eastern Montana. The Wibaux schoolhouse in which she first taught has been remodeled and is now the court house of Wibaux County. At that time it was a new building with accommodations for three teachers. Mrs. Wills taught in Wibaux about five years before her marriage, and she has always entered heartily into every movement and organized work affecting the educational interests. She participated in institutes and summer schools as an instructor in old Dawson County, and has conducted the Teachers Montana Summer School, comprising almost a dozen counties in the eastern end of the state, the school being held at the most accessible points of the district. For a number of years she has been a member of the Montana Teachers Association, an institution that has acquired importance only in recent years, and is an active member of the National Education Association and secretary of State Administrative and Executive Women.

Mrs. Wills was elected county superintendent upon the organization of Wibaux County in August, 1914. At that time she defeated two opponents, though the election was not conducted on partisan lines. At the next general election she was her own successor without opposition, and her work has commanded uniform approval by the voters ever since. In 1918 her candidacy was endorsed by the opposing party and again in 1920. As county superintendent she began without equipment or office, first occupying a room in the assessor's office. She made the first county map she owned. At that time one of her districts extended from Miles City of Edgehill, Wibaux County, old No. 1, and the east end of it became district No. 1 of Wibaux County. The old Redtop Butte School was one of the first schoolhouses built in that whole region, and it fell to Wibaux County. No county superintendent had ever visited the school during the nine years of its existence until Mrs. Wills became superintendent. All the organization work fell upon her. The new county had eighteen districts, while there is a total of thirty-two in the county. Sixty-seven teachers do the work in all the schools, and except in the town schools all are separate schools. The buildings of the county are all modern except about eight, and while education is comparatively a modern thing there is a bright and favorable side to what has been done and the future is extremely auspicious. Common school examinations have been held annually, and many of the graduates continue their work in the county high school.

Mr. Sam J. Wills was born in Salt Lake, Kentucky, and was brought to Montana as an infant by his father, Simpson M. Wills, the venerable pioneer rancher now retired at Wibaux. Sam J. Wills finished his education at Dickinson, North Dakota, and as a young man began station work for the Northern Pacific Railway. Later he entered the train service as a fireman with a run out of Glendive, and on leaving the service as a result of an injury resumed ranching, an occupation to which he had been trained as a youth. After several years he became a carpenter, and now follows that trade at Wibaux. Mr. and Mrs. Wills were both reared in republican families of the stanch and regular variety, and Mrs. Wills cast her first presidential vote in 1916. Mr. and Mrs. Wills have a son, Banker S., born June 7, 1906, now a freshman in the Wibaux County High School.

Mrs. Wills was a very active patriot in the World war, served as chairman of the Junior Red Cross, and never neglected an opportunity to use her official position as a means of promoting the spirit of patriotism in the younger generation. Her musical talent has always been available to the community, and her piano has brought cheer to many a depressed spirit and added zest to many a gay and festive as well as patriotic occasion.

PAUL J. DAVIES. The record of the gentleman whose name introduces this sketch contains no exciting chapter of tragic events, but is replete with well defined purposes which, carried to successful issues, have won for him an influential place in business circles and high personal standing among his fellow citizens. His life work has been one of unceasing industry and perseverance and the systematic and honorable methods which he has ever followed have resulted not only in gaining the confidence of those with whom he has had dealings but also in the building up of a profitable business.

Paul J. Davies was born in Masonville, Kentucky, on. October 27, 1862, and is the son of Joseph and Mary (Brown) Davies. Joseph Davies was born in Shelby County, Kentucky, in 1828, and his death occurred at Masonville, Daviess County, that state, in 1868. He spent his entire life in the Blue Grass state and gave his entire attention to agricultural pursuits. He was a democrat in politics and a member of the Baptist Church. He married Mary Brown, who was born in 1827 in Shelby County, Kentucky, and who died at Masonville, that state, in 1882. To these parents were born four children, namely: Alice M., who is unmarried, is a teacher of elocution and lives at Dyer, Tennessee; Walter B. is a merchant in Union County, Kentucky; Paul J. is the next in order of birth; William J. is a professor in the college at Dyer, Tennessee.

Paul J. Davies attended the public schools of his native town and a private academy at Finchville, Shelby County, Kentucky. At the age of nineteen years he laid aside his text-books and spent the following year in work on the home farm. During the following two years he was employed as a clerk in a general store at Masonville, after which he again gave his attention to the cultivation of the home farm, where he remained until 1887. In that year he came to Bozeman and at once engaged in teaching school, which was his vocation during the following ten years. He was then appointed deputy clerk of the District Court of Gallatin County, which position he held for four and a half years. In 1902 Mr. Davies bought a third interest in the Gallatin Abstract Company, but sold his interest about eighteen months later. He then entered into a partnership with E. V. Blankenship, then county clerk and recorder, and they wrote up the set of abstract books which Mr. Davies is now using. The Blankenship & Davies Abstract Company also wrote fire insurance, sold real estate and made farm and city loans. Eventually the concern was incorporated as the Gallatin Land and Investment Company, though at a later date Mr. Blankenship sold his interests in the company. The present officers of the company are as follows: President, A. J. Powers; vice president, Ida M. Davies; secretary and treasurer, Paul J. Davies. The offices of the company are in the Story Block, where the company has control of an entire floor, though several rooms are sublet. This is now the leading abstract company in Gallatin County and enjoys the confidence of the public generally.

Mr. Davies' political views are in accord with the policies and platform of the democratic party, and he has taken an active part in advancing the success of that party. He served two years as public administrator of Gallatin County and one term as coroner, and at the present time is one of the two justices of the peace of township No. 1, which includes the City of Bozeman and vicinity. He is a member of Bridger Camp No. 62, Woodmen of the World, and of the Bozeman Chamber of Commerce.

In 1898, at Bozeman, Paul J. Davies was married to Ida Mack, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Feron Mack. The father is connected with the East Helena Smelting Company and the mother is deceased. Mrs. Davies graduated from the common schools here, taught school in this county and then served one term as county superintendent of schools just prior to her marriage.

In 1916 Mr. Davies was chairman of the County Central Committee of his party and the campaign reflected great credit on his organizing and executive ability.

James F. Hackley, a ranchman on Powder River, came into Montana in the early and formative period of 1885 and made his first stop in Missoula County. He was one of the first to locate in the Flat Head Valley, and was but a youth of sixteen when he located there. He began his Montana career as a freighter and driver for an old French Canadian, Battice Inias, and he spent a year there, teaming between Ravalli and "The Foot of the Lake." He left that region to come to the Yellowstone Valley as a drover of a herd of cattle for the Niederunghaus Brothers of St. Louis, Missouri.

At Miles City Mr. Hackley separated from this band of cattle and began range work as an employe of the Northern Cattle Company on Tongue River, Jo Scott having been superintendent of the property. Mr. Hackley also worked for Bryan and Moorehead, the "Bugg" outfit on Otter Creek and for Howes, Strevell and Miles, whose ranch was also on Otter Creek. At about this time Mr. Hackley terminated his career as a cow puncher and entered a homestead in Rosebud County, near the Cheyenne Indian Reservation, and he proved up his land and remained in that locality for eight years. It was there also that he built his first Montana home, a log cabin of two rooms, in which his children were born. After leaving this claim he engaged in the retail liquor business at Sheridan, subsequently transferring his interests to Ashland, where he erected a business house, and afterward engaged in the same business at Forsyth and Miles City, closing out his interests when prohibition carried the state. He then turned his attention again to industrial and ranching pursuits out on Powder River, where he purchased a half section of ranch land adjacent to Mizpah, the place having been formerly improved by Max Krell, and there Mr. Hackley is engaged at the present time.

He came to Montana direct from Lawrenceburg, Kentucky, his native locality. He was born on the 24th of April, 1869, and in the locality of his birth he spent the first sixteen years of his life, attending meanwhile the Lawrenceburg schools and becoming familiar with the work of the home farm. His father, Darius Hackley, was a native of that same Kentucky locality, and spent his life there. He was born October 1, 1818, and died November 29, 1883. His father had migrated from Culpeper County, Virginia, to Kentucky and established the family home in Anderson County, where he spent the remainder of his active life and died. He had married a Miss Hawkins, who bore him five children, two sons, Darius and Benjamin, and three daughters, Mrs. McAfee, Mrs. Cheshire and Mrs. Penney.

Darius Hackley married for his first wife Frances Penney, a sister of the man who had married his sister, and by that union be became the father of two sons, Oscar and Ormsby, both of whom were Confederate soldiers, and three daughters, Mrs. Delia Boston, Mrs. Mary Penney and Mrs. Julius Burrus. For his second wife Darius Hackley married Mary Penney, a sister of his first wife, and they became the parents of four children, namely: Ada, wife of Charles Crossfield, of Mississippi; John M., a physician at Mortonsville, Kentucky; Sallie, who became the wife of Thomas Searcy, of Lawrenceburg, Kentucky; and James F., known familiarly throughout his home community as Jimmy.

Mr. James F. Hackley was married at Birney in Rosebud County to Miss Sarah Roberts, a daughter of Calvit Roberts, a ranchman of Rosebud County. Three sons were born of this union, Forest and Calvit, who served their country in the World war, and Myron, the youngest child. Mr. Hackley married for his second wife Miss Evelyn Tatro, who came to Montana from Minneapolis, Minnesota, where her birth occurred on the 26th of December, 1893. She is a daughter of Fred W. and Alice M. (Parsons) Tatro, the father a native of Iowa and the mother of Minnesota. Mrs. Hackley was the first born of their three children, the two younger being the Misses Irva and Corice Tatro, who reside in Minneapolis. Mr. and Mrs. Hackley were married in Miles City, Montana, March 12, 1918, and before her marriage Mrs. Hackley was engaged in office work. Mr. Hackley was reared in the faith of democratic principles in Kentucky and has continued to give allegiance to those principles, but his political work has always been in the ranks as a voter.

Edward H. Lang for a quarter of a century has been with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, being now general traffic manager of the corporation at New York. He began his career as a telegraph operator and gained his first knowledge of Montana thirty-five years ago.

He was born in Northern Michigan at Hancock May 31, 1866. His father William Lang was born in England in 1832, was reared and married there and followed the occupation of miner. He came to the United States in 1860 and went to the mining district of the Northern Peninsula of Michigan at Hancock, where he is still living at the venerable age of eighty-nine. As an American he has steadfastly supported the republican party and is an active member and deacon in the Congregational Church. William Lang married Caroline Penrose, who was born in England in 1833 and died at Hancock in 1905. Richard B., the oldest of their children, is a merchant at Houghton, Michigan; William is foundry superintendent of the Homestake Mining Company at Lead, South Dakota. George is a machinist at Houghton, Michigan. John is a molder living at Anaconda, Montana, and the fifth of the family is Edward H. Thomas H. is assistant general manager of the Standard Oil Company at Chicago. Charles is bookkeeper for a large lumber manufacturing company at Houghton. Fred is superintendent of the Portage Lake Foundry and Machine Works at Hancock, Michigan. Sidney lives at Detroit, being an employe of the Cadillac Motor Car Company. Carrie, the tenth and youngest of the family, is the wife of Bert Crawford at Detroit.

Edward H. Lang acquired his early education in the village schools of Ripley, a suburb of Hancock, Michigan. However his best education has been acquired by active contact with the world and when twelve years of age he left school and became a messenger boy in the telegraph office at Hancock. He made good use of his opportunities to acquire a knowledge of telegraphy, and in a few years was put on the force as a telegraph operator at L'Anse, Michigan, for the Marquette and Houghton & Ontonagon Railways. In 1884 Mr. Lang removed to Duluth, and for one year was employed in the office of Charlemagne Tower, president of the Duluth and Iron Range Railroad. Mr. Lang still preserves a letter written by Mr. Tower at Duluth December 1, 1885, referring to Mr. Lang's service with the Duluth & Iron Range Railway as telegrapher operator and concluding as follows: "He has been industrious and of good conduct.

He leaves the company's service now in consequence of a reduction of force." The writer of that letter has since become a power in the financial world, and is well known for his former services as United States Minister to Russia and Germany and in other diplomatic capacities.

On leaving Duluth Mr. Lang came to Montana, and was telegraph operator at Huntley near Billings for the Northern Pacific Railway a few months. Then until 1887 he was agent for the Northern Pacific at Ashland, Wisconsin, and from there went to Chicago and was in the general freight office of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway in different capacities until 1890. The next five years he was employe of an English syndicate exploiting the mining industry of Old Mexico.

Mr. Lang returned to Montana in 1895 as clerk with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company at Great Falls. He was subsequently promoted to chief clerk of the plant at Great Falls and remained there until 1912. Since then his home has been at Butte where he was assistant traffic manager until July, 1919, and was then promoted to western traffic manager, having charge of all the traffic of the corporation in the western territory. His offices are in the Hennessy Building, Butte, with New York offices at 42 Broadway.

Mr. Lang is one of the few surviving members of the Old Time Telegraphers and Historical Association. The organizers of this association were Andrew Carnegie, Thomas Edison, Theodore N. Vail, A. J. Earling, former president of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, and others. One of the surviving members was private telegraph operator for Abraham Lincoln during the Civil war. Mr. Lang is a director of the Rotary Club, the Butte Chamber of Commerce, is affiliated with Butte Lodge No. 240 of the Elks and is a member of Silver Bow Lodge No. 48, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Deer Lodge Chapter No. 3, Royal Arch Masons, Montana Commandery No. 3, Knights Templar, and Bagdad Temple of the Mystic Shrine. Politically he is a republican.

Mr. Lang owns a modern home at 1218 West Platinum Street. In Chicago in 1890 he married Miss May O'Fallon, a native of that city. She died in 1894. Mr. Lang's only child is Vera, wife of Den Hargrove, a merchant at Great Falls, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Hargrove have one son, Edward Lang Hargrove, born August 10, 1914. In 1900 at Butte Mr. Lang married Mrs. Alice (Cochran) Praul. Her father Capt. C. C. Cochran who died at Great Falls, served with the rank of captain in the Union army during the Civil war.

J. Arthur Barclay is sheriff of Wibaux County and has been one of the citizens most closely identified in business and public spirit with that new civil unit in Eastern Montana.

Mr. Barclay was born in the locality of Appleton, Wisconsin, June 1, 1873. His father, Lawrence Barclay, was born near Edinburgh, Scotland, and was brought to the United States at the age of four years, his parents settling on a farm at Janesville, Wisconsin, and a few years later located on another farm in Outagamie County, Wisconsin. Lawrence Barclay is buried in that county, and his widow is a resident of Appleton. Their children are: Mrs. Annie McNutt, of Hortonville, Wisconsin; Miss Jennie, a trained nurse at St. Luke's Hospital in Chicago; J. Arthur; Emma, of Appleton; and Warren E., of Seymour, Wisconsin.

J. Arthur Barclay acquired a country school education, and after completing the work of the eighth grade took an agricultural course at Madison. As a young man he was employed for several years in the lumber woods as a loader, river driver and camp man. He accumulated a modest capital in that way, also ran an outfit at well drilling, and in 1894 invested in three eighties of stump and stone land, and after pulling the stumps and removing the stone fenced and cross-fenced the property and used a carload of cement in building the silos, dairy barn and other equipment. He was successfully identified with the Wisconsin dairy industry from 1895 until 1909. In the latter year he sold his farm for $100 an acre and came to Montana.

He reached Montana April 12th and located at Yates. Unlike most settlers, he did not homestead, but purchased outright two sections of land at $30.00 an acre. The region was new and he took his land at the grassroots. His first act was to fence the property, and he plowed and sowed 100 acres to oats and 300 acres to flax. His first crop of oats was 5,400 bushels, weighing forty-eight pounds to the bushel, and his flax yielded 6,700 bushels of No. 1 flax. This was a very gratifying experience, and he continued farming for six years, after which he leased his property. His farm improvements are a residence, barn, and machine sheds on both sections, his own home being a story and a half, 24 by 24 feet, while the barn is 28 by 36 feet. His granary has a capacity of 17,000 bushels. His machine shed is 44 feet square, and houses all the machinery used on the farm.

While living in the country Mr. Barclay, then a resident of Dawson County, joined actively in the movement to organize school district No. 58, and was president of the board until appointed to a county office. The district was bonded at once and a good schoolhouse built at Yates and still another schoolhouse in the Jordan locality of the district.

After leasing his land Mr. Barclay moved to Wibaux, placing his children in school, and has since given most of his time to the affairs of the new county. He was one of the men most deeply interested in creating a new county out of old Dawson, and when the Legislature responded to the popular will he was appointed one of the first board of commissioners. As chairman of the board he was associated with P. S. Hede and C. O. Oliver. These commissioners had the responsibility of organizing the business of a new municipal jurisdiction, and for a courthouse purchased an old school building and remodeled it. They also bought a complete line of road machinery, engines and graders, and road building from the first was one of the important features of the county work. One very popular move made by the new board was issuing bonds to the amount of $22,000 to pay for seed for the farmers one year.

After the expiration of his term as county commissioner Mr. Barclay entered the race for sheriff as a republican, won the nomination in the primary and at the general election defeated the independent republican candidate and the non-partisan league candidate by a small plurality. He succeeded John Jones as sheriff, taking office January 1, 1919. During his administration law and order have been maintained, except for the occasional "bringing in of beef in the night," and this crime has been checked by means at his command backed by the District Court.

Mr. Barclay was one of the original stockholders in the State Bank of Yates, served it as vice president, and was instrumental in securing the removal of the bank to the county seat, where its name was changed to the Wibaux County Bank. Here he has continued as vice president and director, and has helped give it one of the modern bank homes in the county. For several years past Mr. Barclay has been a dealer in lands, and still owns considerable real estate in eastern Montana, including much property in Wibaux. He owns the Bell home in that city.

At Grand Rapids, Wisconsin, September 25, 1901, Mr. Barclay married Miss Emma Mulroy, daughter of Patrick and Mary (Dacy) Mulroy, the former a native of Ireland. The Mulroy children were Charles, Mrs. Barclay, Katie, Maggie, Agnes, Walter, Arthur, Maude and May, twins, Loretta and Petronilla. Mr. and Mrs. Barclay have an interesting family of four children, Marie; Louis Clark, now fourteen years of age and a high school student at Wibaux; Mylon Arthur, who was born in 1911; and Margaret, born in 1913. The older daughter, Marie, is a student in the Ursuline Convent at Great Falls, Montana.

Delos Duncan Selway. The agricultural interests of Montana are of such magnitude that it is difficult for those who have been accustomed to the relatively small farms of the middle states to appreciate the work of the farmers of this region or understand their problems. Much of the land of Montana is naturally dry and was originally regarded as only fit for grazing purposes. As long as the cattlemen were allowed to run their herds on the open range there was profit in handling thousands of head of cattle, but with the opening of the public domain to settlers it was found necessary to change the method of operating this industry, and intelligent men experimented in irrigating until now they have brought about a transformation in the state. When properly watered the old time open ranges will produce banner crops, and Montana is rapidly taking its place among the great agricultural states of the Union. Too much credit cannot be given to the men who have been able to adapt themselves to the changing conditions and come out winners, as so many have done. One of these is Delos Duncan Selway, of Powder River County, who with his two brothers owns twenty sections of land, known as the Selway Ranch.

Delos Duncan Selway is a native son of Montana, having been born at Dillon, this state, on September 29, 1872. His father, John R. Selway, came to Montana in 1867 and was one of the pioneers of Dillon. A complete sketch of this estimable man will be found elsewhere in this work.

After attending the common and high schools of Dillon Mr. Selway was given the advantage of a period of schooling at Albion, Michigan, and when he returned he connected himself with the sales force of a general store at Dillon, and remained with that concern for a time, but he had been brought up on a ranch and the confinement of a store was irksome, so he returned to his father's ranch until he was able to begin operations on his own account. His family had been interested in handling sheep, his father being among the pioneers in this industry in the state, and his first operations were along this line. He occupied the old Selway ranch, established by J. Lloyd Selway, who is now in the Mizpah locality, and continued to operate on an extensive scale as a wool producer. The closing of the open range led him to curtail his business and branch out in another direction, and for some years he has been a cattle producer, running under the brands "FHL" on either or both hips, and "F P Bar" on the right shoulder. His stock handling has always been for the production of meat, and he markets at Chicago in the main. The magnificent Selway Ranch comprising twenty sections of land is the property of the three brothers, Delos D., Richard A. and R. R. Selway. It was taken in the virgin state and developed by these practical ranchmen into one of the most valuable properties in this neighborhood. The ranch lies along Pumpkin Creek for four and one-half miles and includes townships 3 and 4 south, ranges 47 and 48 east. On this ranch is impounded twenty acres of water space, the dam constructed of dirt across the main Pumpkin Creek, which reservoir has served the ranch as an irrigation project as well as water supply.

On July 6, 1908, Mr. Selway was married in old Custer County to Anna C. Sigmund, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, who was born in that city, one of a numerous family. Her father, now deceased, was for many years a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Selway have no children. While he was reared a republican, admiration of William Jennings Bryan and his principles led Mr. Selway to cast his first presidential vote for that statesman in 1896. Since then he has voted the straight republican ticket at each election. Aside from belonging to the Miles City Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Eagles, Mr. Selway has no fraternal or social affiliations, his work of developing and maintaining his large property absorbing much of his time. Busy as he always has been, when his country had need of his services, however, he was not found in the ranks of the slackers. He served as chairman of the various Liberty Loan committees of his district and saw to it that the quota was fully subscribed, and in other ways forwarded the war work. Mrs. Selway was equally active as a member of the local Red Cross Chapter.

Mr. Selway is accustomed to do everything upon a large scale, and it is impossible for him to be small in any way. His friendships are formed for life and he puts into them a hearty sincerity which naturally brings forth a corresponding warmth. While he is utterly adverse to any publicity, he can be depended upon to support any measure looking for the development of his locality, state or country, and is justly entitled to a foremost place among the very representative men of Montana.

William M. Broaddus belongs to a well known and most highly respected family of Powder River County, and he is living up to the high standards of his people and locality. His settlement in Montana dates back to 1901 when he, a young man of twenty-six years, came to this region to join his brother, Oscar Broaddus, who had located along this same river and was enthusiastic relative to the possibilities here offered. He had remained with his parents, but after the death of his father felt free to branch out for himself, and soon after his arrival he sent for his widowed mother to join him and his brother, between whom she now divides her time. Immediately after his arrival Mr. Broaddus secured employment on the ranch of John Barringer, but later worked for Frank Leitner on Bay Horse, adjacent to Powder River, remaining there for five years. At the expiration of that period he was married and then began his career as a ranchman. Out of his wages of $35.00 per month during the six years he was engaged in ranch riding he was able to save enough to buy seventy-five head of cattle and with them he established himself on his present location. He bought a quarter section of land from Ernest Broaddus. Later his wife homesteaded a quarter section and took an additional homestead later on, and together they have extended the boundaries of their ranch until they now have 800 acres. All of the improving of this ranch has been done by Mr. Broaddus with the exception of a little two-room log shack which was on the original quarter section. This was soon displaced by a four-room house of logs, which is still used as the family residence. When Mr. Broaddus began ranching he turned his cattle on the open range under the brand "DZ" on the left hip, and he still uses it. From the beginning he has gradually expanded, and during 1919 ran more cattle than in any previous year. In addition to his other interests he is a stockholder in the Broaddus State Bank, the Miles City Milling Company and the Petroleum Company of Baker, Montana. Always a friend of the public schools, he has been closely connected with their development in his neighborhood and donated an acre of land on his ranch for a school site for District No. 1. He was reared under democratic teachings and influence, and when he cast his first presidential vote in Montana it was for Mr. Bryan, but in 1904 he voted for Theodore Roosevelt for President. In 1908 he voted for Mr. Bryan, as he is a warm admirer of that statesman, and in 1912 and 1916 Woodrow Wilson received his vote. Fraternally he belongs to Miles City Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Eagles.

William M. Broaddus was born in Howard County, Missouri, August 31, 1876, a son of John and Betty Broaddus, a sketch of whom is given elsewhere in this work. His educational training has come mainly through personal study and experience. On November 29, 1905, Mr. Broaddus was married at Miles City, Montana, to Miss Dixie Foster, a daughter of John and Eleanor Leah (Leach) Foster. Mrs. Broaddus was born at Salisbury, Missouri, December 27, 1876. Her parents were natives of England and were brought to the United States as young people on the same vessel. Mr. Foster is deceased, but Mrs. Foster survives and lives at Salisbury. Mrs. Broaddus was their only child, but they adopted the four children of her brother, and they are as follows: Timothy, who is an extensive farmer of Salisbury; Stonewall, who is a merchant of Humansville, Missouri; Francis, who is a miller of Salisbury; and Christine, who married John Wheeldon of Moberly, Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Broaddus have three children, namely: William M., Jr., Eleanor and John Haston.

In any other country the success achieved by the Broaddus brothers would be impossible, but the history of Montana shows many instances like these of young men who came West with no capital but their health and willingness to work, and who were given the opportunity to establish themselves in good paying lines of business. Of course, had these men not possessed the essentials of sound and reliable manhood and known how to take advantage of these opportunities they would have remained employes at a low wage. It is to their credit that having risen in the world they do not forget their former hardships, but remain sympathetic and are willing to lend a helping hand to those less fortunate than they.

Henry B. Miller was one of the founders and is vice president and the active manager of the Northwestern National Bank of Livingston. While he was one of the younger associates of a notable group of capitalists, including A. W. Miles, in the establishment of this new bank in Southern Montana, Mr. Miller has for many years been identified with the financial history of Montana and has earned a reputation as a capable and experienced banker. He has much of the genius for business which has been characteristic of his family both in Montana and in other states.

Mr. Miller was born at Clarksville, Missouri, May 3, 1881. His father, Henry B. Miller, Sr., was born near Paris, Bourbon County, Kentucky, in 1822. When a young man he went to Clarksville, Missouri, and became interested in the building up of the business enterprise of that section. He and a relative, John O. Roberts, built and operated the Imperial Mill at Clarksville, he was also interested as an owner in a local hotel and in the hardware business, and owned and improved a model farm near Clarksville of 420 acres. That farm was notable for its production and also for its high class improvements. Its water supply was furnished by an artesian well, there was a splendid group of barns and other out-buildings, and a fine two-story brick house. Henry B. Miller, Sr., was an old-school democrat in politics and a member of the Presbyterian Church. He served in the Confederate army during the Civil war.

At Clarksville he married Martha L. Vaughan, who was born in that town and died there in 1903, having survived her husband since 1896. Henry B. Miller of Livingston is the older of two children, his sister Mary L. being the wife of Dr. C. R. Bankhead, a dentist at Clarksville.

Mr. Miller is a nephew of Jabez W. Vaughan, of Billings, and his maternal grandfather was Almond T. Vaughan. Almond T. Vaughan was born in Nelson County, Virginia, in 1827 and his ancestry went back to the time of the Pilgrim Fathers. Almond T. Vaughan was a brother of George Vaughan, who during the Civil war was a Confederate officer and was captured and condemned by the Federal Government as a spy. Just before leaving the White House for Ford's Theater, where he was assassinated a few hours later, President Lincoln, probably as his last official act, signed the pardon of this condemned Confederate officer. Almond T. Vaughan was taken to Lincoln County, Missouri, when three years old, and grew up in the famous district known as Pike County, Missouri. He worked as a Mississippi River steamboat man, but his chief interest was farming near Clarksville. He went overland from Clarksville to California in 1850 and spent two years prospecting and mining, returning home around the Cape Horn. He made his first trip to Montana in 1879 with his son, Jabez, and as member of the party of United States troops visited all the army posts in the West. In 1906, then nearly eighty years of age he again came to Montana and drew a claim in the allotment of the Crow Indian Reservation. He died at the home of his son Jabez in February, 1907. Jabez W. Vaughan was born in Pike County, Missouri, in 1859, and spent portions of the year 1879-80 in Montana. In 1883 he brought his bride to Montana, locating at Billings, where for many years he was an active merchant and business man.

Henry B. Miller received his early education in the public schools of Clarksville, graduating from high school there. He spent his early years on his father's farm and was about fifteen when his father died. He then accompanied his mother and sister to California, spending two years in Los Angeles and Long Beach. After completing his high school education he entered the University of Arkansas, where he was a student for two years.

In 1902 he graduated with first honors from the Missouri Military Academy at Mexico, Missouri. He was prominent in athletic circles, both at Arkansas and the Military Academy, playing on both the football and baseball teams. He also held a commission as captain in the Missouri National Guards for several years.

On coming to Montana in 1902 Mr. Miller entered the service of the First National Bank at Billings, beginning as messenger, and during the next five years, though earning his living, he was primarily concerned with learning the banking business in every detail. It was a thorough and splendid apprenticeship. For two years following he was deputy county treasurer of Yellowstone County, and then became first assistant cashier of the Merchants National Bank of Billings, a post he held five years. He entered the service of that institution when it was opened for business in March, 1909. In 1915 he was appointed receiver of the Farmers State Bank at Bridger, and before closing up the affairs of that institution came to Livingston in 1917 and assisted in organizing the Northwestern National Bank. He became its first cashier, and since January, 1919, has been vice president and active manager. The president is Judge James E. O'Connor, of Livingston, and Arthur W. Miles, the first president, is now chairman of the board of directors.

Mr. Miller has been active in republican politics, serving as treasurer of the Central Committee of Yellowstone County several years. He is a vestryman in the Episcopal Church at Livingston, and is prominent in both the Masonic and Elks orders. He is a member of the various bodies at Livingston, and for several years was inspector general of the Grand Commandery of the Knights Templar. He is also a member of the Mystic Shrine at Helena. He is a past exalted ruler and honorary life member of Billings Lodge of Elks.

Mr. Miller during his school days formed the acquaintance of Miss Etta M. Rice, daughter of J. O. Rice, former president of the International Bank & Trust Company of Mexico City. Mr. Miller and Miss Rice were married in New York City in 1906. They have a family of six children: Henry B., Jr., born July 17, 1908; Jabez A., born June 30, 1909; James, a twin brother of Jabez; William Stephen, born in December, 1910; Martha Virginia, born in March, 1913; and Mary Betty, born May 29, 1917.

GEORGE P. PORTER. Apart from his many sound and recognized qualifications for the office there is historical consistency in George P. Porter being state auditor of Montana. He is one of the oldest native sons of the state, and was born in the City of Helena when it was little more than a mining camp and claimed little distinction from its dignity as the territorial capital.

Mr. Porter, who has had extensive business relations throughout the state in former years, was born at Helena February 17, 1869. He is of English ancestry. His great grandfather, Richard Porter, was born in London and died there, but for many years was a captain in the English navy, commanding a war vessel. The grandfather of State Auditor Porter was also Richard Porter, a native of London. By appointment from Queen Victoria he was sent to Lower Canada as a custom house commissioner. About 1852 he settled in New York state, and for several years was cutter in a glove manufacturing establishment at Gloversville, being one of the first skilled workmen in an industry that has since made Gloversville famous. About 1856 he moved to the middle west, and lived on a farm at Walnut, Illinois, until his death. Richard Porter married Mary Roquet, a native of France, and she also died in Illinois.

William Porter, who was born at London, was six years of age when his parents came to Canada, was reared and educated in New York and Illinois, but the principal field of his experience and achievement was in the great west. His name is associated as a pioneer with both Colorado and Montana. In 1858 he crossed the plains to Colorado, and it is claimed that he was the first to display and sell a stock of merchandise in the mining camp now the City of Denver. Following closely upon the earliest pioneers he came to Montana in 1864, and settled in the Deer Lodge Valley of the old town of Stewart and engaged in the cattle business. In 1866 he moved to Helena, and for ten years was in the general merchandise brokerage business. His home was removed to Butte in 1876, and he engaged in placer mining on Silver Bow Creek, six miles from that city. His last years were spent in the Bitter Root Valley, where he lived from 1894 until his death at Woodside. In that period of his life he resumed farming and ranching. William Porter was a republican, a member of the Episcopal Church, was a prominent Royal Arch Mason, serving as the first high priest of Helena Chapter No. 2, was also affiliated with Helena Council No. 1, Royal and Selected Masons, and was one of the organizers in 1858 and held the office of master of Denver Lodge No. 5, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. He was also affiliated with Montana Lodge No. 1, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at Helena. During the Civil war he served as a member of the Home Guards at Denver. William Porter married Elizabeth Rice, who was born at Sandusky, Ohio, and died at Woodside, Montana. Jeannette, their oldest child, is the wife of J. L. Freeman, a farmer at Victor, Montana. Richard W. was a farmer and died at Butte at the age of twenty-eight years. Thomas L., who also made agriculture his work, died at Woodside aged thirty-six. Grace M., who died at Blackfoot, Idaho, was the wife of W. L. Hawley, a farmer at Blackfoot. George P. Porter is the fifth of the family and the youngest is Henry H., a farmer at Woodside.

George P. Porter acquired his early education in the schools of Helena and Butte, attending the high school in the latter city. His working experience began at the age of fourteen as cash boy for the E. L. Bonner & Company at Butte. He served that well known corporation in various capacities, eventually being made assistant manager of the dry goods department. During that time he also studied and completed a course in the Butte Business College. In 1892 Mr. Porter became cashier of the Case, Gravelle & Erwin Company, dry goods merchants at Butte, and remained with that firm until 1907. For several months of that year he did some mining work in the newly opened district of Goldfield and Tonopah, Nevada, but toward the close of the year returned to Montana and at Missoula was employed by D. J. Donohue and the Missoula Mercantile Company as bookkeeper and cashier. He left the latter firm in 1912, and served as city treasurer of Missoula under appointment by the mayor, J. M. Rhodes, until May, 1914. For several months of that year Mr. Porter lived at Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, and kept books for a contractor, James Sheridan. At the outbreak of the World war he returned to Montana in August, and in April of the following year removed from Missoula to Butte, where he was in the general office of the Butte Miner until December, 1918.

Mr. Porter was elected state auditor of Montana in November, 1918, and has administered his official duties since January 6, 1919.

During the war, in addition to his duties with the Butte Miner Mr. Porter gave a great deal of time to various patriotic causes, making many speeches in Butte and other cities of Northwestern Montana, and is a member of the national organization of Four-Minute Men. Mr. Porter was a charter member of the Butte Clerks' Union when it was organized under the Knights of Labor, and held his membership for twenty-seven years. This was probably the first clerks' union ever organized in the world. Mr. Porter is a republican, a member of the Episcopal Church, is affiliated with Harmony Lodge of Masons at Missoula, of which he is a past master, with the Independent Order of Foresters at Butte, which he served as secretary seven years, and with Hellgate Lodge No. 383 of the Elks at Missoula. He is also a member of the Montana Pioneers Society and the Montana Sons and Daughters of Pioneers.

Mr. Porter and family reside at 200 North Warren Street in Helena. He married at Butte in 1893 Miss Anna Demick, daughter of Elijah and Georgia (Teller) Demick, the latter now a resident of Kellogg, Idaho. Her father, deceased, was a carpenter and builder, and for many years a resident of Butte. Mr. and Mrs. Porter have one son, Roger, born September 18, 1910.

BENJAMIN MCDONALD. A resident of Montana for more than half of his three score years, Benjamin McDonald furnishes still another illustration of the value of perseverance and industry in the working out of a successful career and the gaining of position and prosperity. This sturdy resident of the Garneill community of Fergus County has achieved his accomplishments in the sheep industry, being known as one of the prominent sheepmen of his part of the state and during his long and active career has always maintained a reputation for honorable dealing and sterling citizenship.

Benjamin McDonald was born in Ontario, Canada, March 10, 1860, a son of Robert and Emma (Robertson) McDonald, and he inherited their pioneer spirit. His father, a native of Canada, bore the hardships and privations incident to the clearing of a farm from the virgin forests of Canada, and experienced all the developing conditions from the log cabin stage to the ownership of a modern stone house. From the wilderness he hewed him out a home, and through industry and perseverance became one of his community's substantial men. He was a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and died in that faith in 1875, when he was but fifty years of age. Mrs. McDonald, who was born in England, emigrated to Canada with her parents as a child of eleven years, making the voyage in a sailing vessel. She met her husband in the Dominion, and they became the parents of two daughters and four sons.

The third of his parents' children, Benjamin McDonald, remained on the old homestead until reaching the age of twenty-five years. He divided his boyhood and youth between assisting his father in the work of developing the home place and attending the public schools, and grew to sturdy manhood with a fair education and a splendid training in matters regarding farm work. His advent in Montana occurred in 1889, on April 1st of which year he arrived by rail at Great Falls. At that point he boarded a stage coach and went to the ranch of Bowers Brothers, working industriously and saving faithfully in order that he might send for his family. This he was able to do in the fall of 1891, when Mrs. McDonald, accompanied by her two elder sons, arrived by rail at Great Falls and were met by the stage, which carried them to Stanford. There was awaiting Mr. McDonald with a team, and the reunited and happy family drove out to U Bet and then to the ranch. Mr. McDonald continued to work for the Bowers Brothers during the following year, herding sheep on Spruce Creek in Fergus County, and then located near U Bet and entered the employ of George Jackson on the latter's ranch. After a short time Mr. McDonald preempted 160 acres of land and subsequently homesteaded 160 acres and began operations on his own account.

It was largely due to the urging of Mrs. McDonald that her husband entered the sheep business, in which he has since made such a success. She had faith in the business, and finally overcame the last of his objections when she agreed to herd the sheep if he would purchase them. Accordingly he put aside his scruples and invested in 300 head of sheep, and true to her promise Mrs. McDonald took an active part in the business of herding. Mr. McDonald gives his wife full credit for the share she had in starting him upon the road to fortune and also for the assistance that she has always given him in other ways. Gradually he developed into one of the prominent sheep ranchers of his county, and at times has owned as high as from 5,000 to 6,000 head, although at this time his band approximates but about 1,600 head. With his sons he owns in the neighborhood of 4,000 acres of land. He has never cared for public office, but votes the republican ticket, and attends the Methodist Episcopal Church, in the movements of which he has been an active and generous supporter.

On May 8, 1882, Mr. McDonald was united in marriage with Miss Ellen Beard, who was born at Toronto, Canada, daughter of Marshall and Elizabeth (McKee) Beard. Mr. Beard, who was born in Ireland, died at the age of eighty-four years, in 1912, and Mrs. Beard passed away when Mrs. McDonald, the younger of her two children, was but two years of age. Mr. Beard emigrated to Canada in young manhood, and, settling in the wilderness, developed a good farm through his industry. Of the four children born to Mr. and Mrs. McDonald three are living: John Arthur, who is engaged in the cattle business in Fergus County, where he is an extensive landholder; Marshall H., also a landowner of this county, who married Miss Gertrude Raw and has two children, Wilbur H. and Frances Louise; and Lillian G., the only daughter of Benjamin McDonald, graduated from the Montana Wesleyan College of Helena, Montana, in 1919, and studied music under Walton Perkins of Chicago.

ANDREW C. BIRKLAND. It is difficult for the layman to appreciate the importance of the work accomplished by those men who are essentially an outcome of twentieth-century progressiveness, the civil engineers. No man can enter upon this important field of endeavor without a careful and complete preparation if he expects to succeed. His training must include a sound knowledge of mathematics, physics, chemistry, hydraulics, mechanical engineering and electricity, while he must have a practical knowledge of geology, surveying and architecture, and be fully acquainted with the nature and strength of the materials which he may be called upon to use. Of the civil engineers of Montana who have risen to distinction in their profession, one whose achievements mark him as especially worthy of mention is Captain Andrew C. Birkland, former city engineer for three terms of Lewistown, and a veteran of two of this country's wars.

Andrew C. Birkland was born near Newark, Kendall County, Illinois, January 3, 1878, a son of Andrew and Anna (Alne) Birkland, natives of Norway. They were the parents of eight children: Martha, born in Norway, Arthur, Helen, Henry and Lewis, twins, Anna, Andrew C. and Clara. Andrew Birkland came to the United States with his family in 1870 and located in Kendall County, Illinois, where he is still engaged in farming and raising stock. He is a republican. Andrew C. Birkland attended the public schools of Newark, Illinois, and after his graduation went to Beloit College, where he took a course in civil engineering and finished his engineering course in a two-year term in the University of Wisconsin. In July, 1899, he enlisted in Company B, Thirtieth Regiment, United States Volunteers, and was sent to the Philippine Islands, where he served for two years, until February, 1900. On his return to the United States he secured a position with the Lackawanna Steel Company as axe man on work being done near West Seneca, New York, and subsequently held positions with the Erie Railway Company, the Niagara Power Company, on the breakwater for the Government at Cleveland, Ohio, and with the Pennsylvania Railway Company. Next he was with the Florida & East Coast Railway Company, and then returned to the Pennsylvania Railway Company, assisting in building the tunnel under the East River, New York. Coming to Fergus County, July 3, 1908, he took up a homestead sixteen miles northeast of Denton, and while living on this property and proving up also followed his profession as a civil engineer. In May, 1913, Captain Birkland was appointed city engineer of Lewistown, and in May, 1915, received the reappointment, serving in that capacity for nearly five years, with splendid ability and to the satisfaction of the people of the community. On October 6, 1917, he received his commission as captain in the Officers Reserve Corps, and was ordered to active duty December 28, 1917, at Camp Lee, Virginia. On March 10, 1918, he was assigned to duty at Camp Sherman, becoming a member of the 317th Engineers Corps, sailed for France June 10, 1918, and landed at Brest, June 19, 1918. This was the First Corps of the First Army Engineers. From that time forward he was in the thick of the fighting on the western front, but came safely through and returned to New York City March 6, 1919, receiving his honorable discharge March 29th at Camp Sherman, Ohio. His return to Lewistown was the occasion for a great celebration on the part of the people who had come to know him and his sterling qualities, and a local newspaper described the welcome as follows: "One of the largest crowds ever assembled to greet a returning soldier, fresh from the battlefields of Europe, gathered at the Milwaukee depot to welcome home Captain Andrew C. Birkland of the engineers. Captain Birkland had been in the service nearly a year and a half and the greater part of that time was spent on the western battle front. He was in the thick of much of the hard fighting, but came out of it all unscathed. The Elks' band paraded to the depot, followed by a long line of motor cars filled with friends of the returning officer. The escort turned up Main Street to the Army and Navy Club, where a reception was given, many friends shaking his hand in warm welcome. Four little Birkland tots clung to their father's neck, and it was indeed a happy family that fate had brought together again."

Since his return from the service Captain Birkland has resumed the duties of his profession and is building up a large clientele. His standing in his calling is high, as evidenced by the fact that he has served as vice president of the Municipal Engineers Society. In political matters he is an adherent of the republican party. As a citizen of Lewistown he has been prominent in assisting good movements to a successful outcome, and his personal popularity does much to advance the interests of any cause with which he allies himself.

Captain Birkland was married November 6, 1905, to Miss Jeannette A. Brombacker, who was born at Buffalo, New York, and they are the parents of four children: Grace H., Marion H., Ruth and Jeannette.

GEORGE MACE. It is as one of the real pioneers of the Yellowstone Valley that the name and career of George Mace are presented in this publication. Many experiences and achievements have given real distinction to his life. He came to Montana territory in the year that the nation was celebrating its centennial anniversary, and also in the same year that the famous Custer massacre occurred.

He was then twenty-eight years of age, and had lived rather strenuously during those early years. He was born in Erie County, New York, August 19, 1848. His parents were natives of England, and when he was seven years of age they returned to the old country and lived there until their deaths. Thus for nine years George Mace had his boyhood associations and acquired most of his limited schooling in Buckinghamshire. Following the death of his parents, when he was about sixteen, he returned to the United States, and then followed a variety of circumstances and experiences that eventually led him to Montana about twelve years later. He worked as a farm hand, and also on railway construction. He helped finish the Union Pacific, the first transcontinental railway, and was a member of the force of bridge builders in Utah when the golden spike was driven uniting the eastern and western ends of that great steel thoroughfare. A few years later he was with the building forces of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway through old Indian Territory, and for a time was section foreman of that line at Chetopa, Kansas.

Railroading being a very slow and uncertain route to fortune, Mr. Mace left Kansas for the lure of the mining districts of Colorado. He did prospecting and mining with no important successes to his credit. Once he opened a hole, but abandoned its development. Successors came along and pushed the work a little further, and found ore that constituted a modest fortune. From Colorado Mr. Mace continued his prospecting efforts into Arizona, where he and his partner spent two years in the gold diggings around Prescott. Nothing important encouraged them to remain, and they turned their faces towards distant scenes. At that time the Black Hills of the Dakotas were the lodestone attracting adventurous mining men. On the way there they reached Cheyenne, Wyoming, at which point the Government forces refused permission to further progress on account of the hostilities of the Indians. Thus diverted they turned their course toward the Big Horn country of Montana, and in the year 1876 the two strangers with their pack outfit rode into Miles City. There being nothing to encourage further activity as a mining prospector, Mr. Mace soon took a Government contract at Miles City for putting up hay and delivering wood for the troops at Fort Keogh. He also did some freighting from Fort Buford to Miles City. This was his chief line of employment until 1881, when he moved to the Yellowstone Valley, where for nearly forty years his main interests have been identified with ranching, farming and the sheep and cattle business.

He came into the Yellowstone Valley equipped to enter this industry, bringing about a hundred head of cattle. Mention should be made of his companions who were Mike Barrett, Charley French, Peter Anderson and Michael Provo. The quintet all became ranchers, but now the only survivors of these pioneers are H. P. Anderson and Mr. Mace. The latter entered desert land adjacent to the river, extending back into the hills, and eventually developed a ranch of thirteen sections for the operation of his stock business. Mr. Mace became one of the well known and prominent sheep men of the locality, and for a quarter of a century tended his flocks as well as handling extensive herds of cattle. His abandonment of the woolen industry resulted from the influx of settlers who appropriated the outside range and curtailed the pasture. As a sheep man he started with the Delaine blood, and took much care in developing a better wool growing animal than the average range stock, so that his yield of fleeces increased in proportion to the higher grade of his sheep. Mr. Mace is in a position to illustrate the fluctuations in the wool market from his own experience, since he has sold the staple at 8 cents a pound and the very top price he ever received for fleeces was 21 cents a pound, far below the average of the wool market in recent years. Prices of cattle showed equal contrast, and while the market did not offer much profit to the producer of beef, he persisted, and eventually sold steers for $14.00 a hundred.

While his efforts and experiences as a stockman have corresponded in a general way with the average of other Montana stockmen, Mr. Mace should be more properly distinguished because of his progressive efforts and initiative in behalf of real agriculture in this section of the Yellowstone Valley. Some of the Mace ranch includes valley lands, and here thirty-five years ago the first experiment at growing alfalfa was made by Mr. Mace. He imported seed from California, and the plant readily adapted itself to soil and climate and gave in those early years as well as later splendid results. For years before alfalfa was little more than a name in the minds of most Montana farmers Mr. Mace made it a regular part of his crop rotation. Three cuttings a year are harvested, and in seasonable years the yield per acre has been five tons.

With a desert claim Mr. Mace early became interested in irrigation. At his own expense he built a rude system of canals from Reservation Creek, and that little plant not only proved sufficient and efficient for the flooding of his own lands, but became the example and forerunner of important irrigation enterprises developed since. His lowlands are now under the Yellowstone Irrigation District, the chief plant of the kind along the river, and his lands have been vastly benefited by this larger system. He has adapted his crops to changing conditions, and they now include sugar beets as well as alfalfa and grains. For about five years the Mace ranch has been producing beets of a high sugar content, with a yield averaging around eleven tons per acre.

Progressive in handling his own affairs, as this brief outline indicates, Mr. Mace has not been lacking in the qualities of a public spirited citizen ever alive to the benefits and welfare of the community. Chiefly has this spirit exemplified itself in behalf of better education, and he has witnessed the multiplication of school houses since he came to this part of the valley. For twenty years he served on his local school board, but otherwise has never been attracted to political office. As a republican voter he is following an inclination which he acquired in boyhood.

Mr. Mace had barely begun the development of his ranch in Rosebud County when he established a home and family. He married in Custer County December 25, 1883, Miss Anna A. Anderson. She was a sister of Peter Anderson, one of the companions of Mr. Mace and the other pioneers to this section of the Yellowstone. Mrs. Mace was born in Minnesota and was with a party of pioneers who came up the Yellowstone by steamboat, leaving the boat at old Custer station, Terry's Landing, above the mouth of the Big Horn. Her brother, Peter, had come into this country from the Black Hills district, and is a bachelor homesteader of Rosebud County. Mrs. Mace, who with her brother represents the Anderson family in Montana, is a daughter of Elias and Beata (Hansen) Anderson, natives of Norway. To Mr. and Mrs. Mace were born three children: Anna A., who is the wife of Burrel Kimball, a rancher near Hysham, and they have two children; Bertha L., wife of Herbert Wakefield and the mother of two children; and Alfred C., the only son and youngest child. Alfred C. Mace, now assisting his father on the home ranch, was a soldier during the World war, in training at Camp Lewis and in the Presidio at San Francisco, and received an honorable discharge after the armistice.

George Horkan. Few ranchmen are better or more widely known in Southeastern Montana than George Horkan, who is located on the headwaters of Pumpkin Creek, near Stacey, which meanders lazily through his ranch. He dates his advent into Montana in the year 1882, when it was still a territory, and pioneer conditions prevailed. He was born in County Mayo, Ireland, September 8, 1851, one of the dozen children of George and Marta (Hebron) Horkan, both natives of County Mayo, coming of excellent north country stock which migrated to County Mayo at an early day. The elder George Horkan was an extensive farmer and stockman in County Mayo.

Growing up on his father's farm, George Horkan, the younger, acquired there a first-hand and practical knowledge of agricultural matters, and the high school in the vicinity furnished him with the fundamentals of educational training. He is the only one of his parents' children to come to the United States, and he sailed from Cork, Ireland, aboard the "Arizona" for New York City. The crossing, which consumed fourteen days, was a rough one, but he reached his destination without serious accident in 1880. Six years later he returned to his native land for a month, this being his only trip to Ireland.

After reaching New York City on his first arrival Mr. Horkan came as far west as Wisconsin, and there, hearing of the possibilities of Montana, came here, spending his first year in the territory at a point south of Miles City, in the Pine Hill country. Having brought with him sufficient capital to make an investment in sheep, he was one of the first to begin raising them in the state, and is one of the few men here who have held to sheep continuously during their ranching experiences, his extending over a period of thirty-seven years. In 1883 he squatted upon the then unsurveyed lands on Pumpkin Creek, and at that time was one of the very few settlers in a radius of many miles. The nearest post office, Miles City, was sixty miles away, and oftentimes weeks passed without his seeing a human being. He passed both good and bad times, has lost because of low prices, and profited on account of good ones, experiencing all of the changing conditions of the region. When the Government surveys were made he homesteaded the land upon which his ranch home is located, and for many years was content with it, not then thinking of adding to his acreage. Later, however, he was spurred on to acquire title to other lands as an investment, realizing that the open country and unoccupied lands would in time be taken up, and time has proven that he was right. During his operations here he has gathered together 18,000 acres, and in addition he is interested in the Moorhead ranch, comprising some 5,000 or 6,000 acres devoted to alfalfa and stock raising. This latter ranch is an irrigated proposition and the hay cut from it is fed to the stock the ranch handles. The climatic conditions of this region have at times been most severe. Numerous winters have brought heavy snowfalls and low temperature and fortunes of stockmen have been dissipated in one season because of these adverse conditions. Mr. Horkan has suffered heavy losses, several times losing from seventy to eighty per cent, but he possesses the "backbone" of the typical pioneer, so remained in spite of adversity, and recovered from these losses steadily and surely.

Mr. Horkan was one of the active men in organizing the Wool Growers Association of Custer County, and holds a membership in the state and national wool growers' organizations, attending the annual meetings and taking part in the discussions on the programs. As all the above indicates, he is one of the early settlers of the southern part of Custer County. Recently his ranch was divided by the boundary line of Powder River and Custer counties, so that he has the distinction of having lived in two counties without changing his place of residence. Of recent years he has lived in Miles City so as to give his son the better educational advantages afforded by that community. Mr. Horkan is a stockholder of the Billings Packing House, is a director in Lakin Brothers mercantile establishment, which he serves as president, and is a director of the Commercial State Bank of Miles City. In politics he is a stanch republican, and he believes that the record of this great party justifies his adherence to it. He cast his first presidential vote for Benjamin Harrison in 1892, and for many years has been a delegate to county and state conventions and otherwise worked for his party, but has never been willing to permit the use of his name on the party ticket.

On February 9, 1888, Mr. Horkan was united in marriage at Miles City to Miss Margaret Jordan, a daughter of M. J. Jordan, of Waseca County, Minnesota. Mrs. Horkan was born in Illinois, but her father later went to Minnesota and there engaged in farming. There were several children in her father's family. Mr. and Mrs. Horkan have one son, George Edward, who is associated with his father, the firm being known as George Horkan & Son. The firm handle both sheep and cattle, although in former times many more sheep bore the brand of George Horkan, when the country was open and grazing privileges were unlimited. At one time he had over 120,000, and a clip of 80,000 pounds was taken annually. The firm have 1,000 head of cattle on the two ranches in which father and son are interested. George Edward Horkan was graduated from the Miles City High School, and then took a mechanical course at St. Paul, Minnesota. Having learned ranching from childhood, when the time came for him to make a choice of a calling he decided to join forces with his father and is now one of the leading young ranchmen of this region. He was married to Bella Bradbury, a daughter of J. M. Bradbury of Billings, Montana. The Horkan family are connected with the Roman Catholic Church of Miles City, of which Mr. Horkan is one of the old members and a strong supporter of his parish.

The days of the open country and unrestricted grazing have passed, but the more far-sighted of the ranchmen have not suffered materially, for they provided for the change they saw was impending, and merely altered their mode of operating. They look back with regret to the old days, but enjoy life in the present, and are building up communities for the future which will insure continued prosperity to their region, and protection to the industries which are associated with the entire history of the State of Montana.

OLIVER LEE REED. In the years to come when the history of the cattle industry of Montana is written at length, proper appreciation will be paid to the men who not only were able to develop magnificent cattle interests, but who were also able to so arrange their operations that when the great change came to the state which curtailed the range privileges they could become equally important as ranchmen. Just as in former years Montana was noted for its "cattle on a thousand hills," so is it just as well known for its ranches of thousands of acres, operated upon scientific principles. Land which years ago was rejected on account of lack of moisture is now covered with waving grain because of the marvelous irrigation systems. Americans are nothing if not adaptive, and in Montana the citizens have proven themselves 100 per cent American in this, as other respects. One of these men worthy of such special mention because of their connection with the cattle industry is Oliver Lee Reed of Miles City, who has been in this region for nearly thirty years.

Oliver Lee Reed was born in Cooper County, Missouri, December 9, 1867, and was only six years old when he was taken by his parents to Colfax County, New Mexico, in 1873, the trip being made with ox teams. There were several families in the party, as was usual in those days, as it was dangerous for too small a number to try and travel over a region infested with hostile Indians. The Reed party was fortunate in not having any unpleasant incidents, and were interested in seeing herds of buffalo, and enjoyed the flesh of several killed for them by the hunters in the party. The father of Oliver Lee Reed, Mortimer C. Reed, was born in Missouri and lived to be seventy-five years old, passing away March 17, 1914. His father, a native of Virginia, was married to a lady whose first name was Matilda, and they had the following children: Gus, who died in Missouri; Duffield, who died in Colorado; Lycurgus, who died in Cooper County, Missouri; Mortimer C., who became the father of Oliver L. Reed; and "Mit," who was killed by lightning in Missouri.

Mortimer C. Reed was a soldier during the war between the states, espousing the southern side. He enlisted in the Confederate army from Missouri under General Price, and served during the duration of the war. Although he saw some very hard service, including the siege of Vicksburg, he escaped with a flesh wound, and was honorably discharged as a private in the ranks. He took but little part in politics aside from voting the democratic ticket and ardently supporting the principles of his party. Both he and his wife were consistent members of the Christian Church. He was married to Julia Brannan. Mrs. Reed died at Trinidad, Colorado, in August, 1915, aged seventy-one years. Their children were as follows: Oliver Lee, whose name heads this review; and Lucy, who is the wife of W. L. Wills, of Trinidad, Colorado.

Oliver Lee Reed received his educational privileges in New Mexico, and they did not go beyond the common school courses. When he began to be self-supporting he turned toward the work of a cowboy, or cow puncher, first with his father and later with the Peel Cattle Company. He was only twenty-five years old when a misfortune came upon his family, which resulted in their having to abandon their home, located on the Maxwell Land Grant, because they lost their suit for title. This brought Mr. Reed into Montana, and he reached Miles City January 8, 1892, by train. Having had several years of experience as a cowboy, he was not a "tenderfoot," and easily found employment with the Cross 5 Cattle Company as a cowboy. The wages paid the best of these cowboys were $40.00 per month, with board and lodging, and that is the largest wage Mr. Reed ever received. After one year with this outfit, under the supervision of the well known L. W. Stacey, Mr. Reed went to work for the Mankato Cattle Company, and was with it for a year as a cowboy. The Hereford Stock and Cattle Company next employed him, and after six months with this last named company he stopped working for others and established a little ranch of his own.

Mr. Reed's beginning as an independent cattle man was at the head of the East Fork of Otter Creek, he "squatting" upon unsurveyed land, and there he built improvements as he needed them. His shelter for himself and such stock as he had was primitive but sufficient. He was twenty miles or more from Stacey, and he occupied his original three-room log house as long as he remained on this property. Starting with range cattle of the Hereford strain bought with his savings from scanty wages, he adapted the brand "P bar under," which he bought from James Coleman, who also sold him his first cow. Of course his operations were upon a small scale, but he prospered in them, and when he moved from this locality he had 500 head in his herd, to which he added a considerable number he had brought from Texas and was on the Missouri River for three years. Mr. Reed then located twenty miles south of Miles City, where he continued ranching until 1917, when he sold his ranch. His experience in cattle raising covers a span of twenty-five years, and during that time he saw many changes. Uniting his interests with other cattle men, he helped to organize and belonged to the Montana Stock Growers Association, and he is now actively engaged in buying and selling on the range board.

Mr. Reed was married at Sheridan, Wyoming, December 24, 1895, to Miss May Shy, a daughter of Walter C. Shy, and a sister of Mrs. Charles M. Simpson of Custer County, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work. Mr. and Mrs. Reed have a daughter, Marie, who was born May 27, 1898, and she was married to Charles L. Bacheller, of Wichita Falls, Texas.

The only fraternal affiliations of Mr. Reed are those which make him a member of the order of Elks. Both he and Mrs. Reed were in full sympathy with the war auxiliary movements and plans and bought lavishly of bonds and contributed with open hands to the other drives. They are people of unusual pleasing personality, and their long residence in and about Miles City make them acquainted with the majority of the older settlers, with whom they maintain delightful social connections, and their home is the gathering place of these "pioneers" upon numerous occasions. Upright in his dealings, Mr. Reed has gained his present prominence and prosperity through his own efforts. Willing to work and save, he used his small capital for investment purposes, and so managed that all the time his money was working for him, and he was thus enabled to add to his holdings. His example is one the rising generation would do well to follow.

JOHN DONLY VIALL. Compared with some of those whose biographies appear in this publication, John Donly Viall, a ranchman on Big Pumpkin Creek, tributary to the post office of Beebe, is one of the later comers to Montana, as dates indicate late coming, his arrival having been in 1901. However, during the years of his residence here he has been actively identified with various activities which have marked the development of the state, and today he is one of the substantial ranchmen of his locality and a citizen of influence and substantial usefulness.

Mr. Viall was born January 20, 1865, at Lyons, Ohio, and as a youth went with his parents to Missouri, where his schooling was liberal, as it was also at Sheridan, Wyoming, to which latter place he went with the family in 1883, overland. Their journey west from Chillicothe, Missouri, was made through St. Joseph, across Northern Kansas and up the North Platte River and across the plains of Wyoming to Sheridan. In the train were numerous wagons, confined to emigrants, and the Viall family was headed by the venerable Ezra B. Viall, an active ranchman of the Sheridan locality of Wyoming. He settled on Soldier Creek and has developed a cattle and sheep ranch of 1,900 acres. His is a splendid irrigation proposition and is a grain and alfalfa farm as well as a stock ranch. Ezra B. Viall was born in Lake County, Ohio, March 15, 1833, his home being not far from Mentor, where the Garfields lived, and his wife taught school in that classic old town when a young woman. Mr. Viall acquired a good education, also, at Willoughby College. He had three brothers in the Union army, and all were sons of John Viall, who came to Ohio from Cuyahoga County, New York, and settled in Lake County long before the building of the Lake Shore Railroad, and when Indians and buffalo were still there. He spent his life as a farmer and is buried at Willoughby. John Viall, Sr., married Mary Hoag, and their issue comprised: Donly, Ezra B., George, Jacob, Charles, and Mary and Helen, who both died single.

Ezra B. Viall married Elizabeth Elsworth, a daughter of Chester Elsworth, a boy twelve years of age when the battle of Lake Erie was fought and who heard the roar of the cannon while Commodore Perry was annihilating the British fleet. The Elsworths came from Cuyahoga County, New York, also, and were farmers. Mrs. Viall died January 24, 1916, aged eighty-three years. She was one of a family of eight children, and she and Mr. Viall had the following children: Helen, who died in childhood; Sarah, who died at Weatherford, Texas, as Mrs. Arden Welch; Edna, the widow of Frank Kilbourne, of the Viall ranch in Wyoming;

John Donly, of this review; and Elizabeth, who married August Steil, of Sheridan, Wyoming.

John D. Viall was identified with the movements toward the development of his father's Wyoming ranch for eighteen years, and for nine years of that time "whacked bulls and skinned mules" from Custer Station to Fort Custer, the Crow Agency, Dayton, Wyoming, and Fort McKinney. He passed over the Custer battleground but seven years after the massacre occurred and when there were still scraps of blue uniforms lying about. While there he became acquainted with many of the old warriors who took part in the annihilation of General Custer's band. The Crow scout, "Curley," the only man who escaped of the Custer command, became known to Mr. Viall and the two traded horses and Mr. Viall freighted past his home at Reno Crossing of the little Big Horn River. When he first came to Montana in 1901 Mr. Viall's first location was on Rosebud Creek, on the Cheyenne Reservation, handling there a bunch of 12,000 head of sheep. The following year he moved his flock to the Big Dry, thirty miles below Jordan, now in Dawson County, and there acquired and owned a ranch at the mouth of Frazer Creek. He was in the region purely as a sheep man until 1912, but in the meantime had acquired his present ranch and begun his connection with it. He has occupied his present ranch, the old "S. L.," since 1908, and is now running sheep, cattle and horses. His cattle interests comprise some 700 head, branded with the "Lazy P-D," and his sheep interests comprise 2,300 head of ewes, while his 250 head of horses are of the Perchon blood and bear the same brand as his cattle. His output is disposed of at the Chicago market, he having become a large shipper before coming to Montana.

The Viall ranch comprises a large part of the old "S. L." ranch, and contains 10,090 acres. It is almost exclusively devoted to stock, and the little farming done is hay raising, with a semblance of crops each year. Of the thirty-five miles of fence on the ranch Mr. Viall is responsible for thirteen miles, and other improvements which he has made include a deep water well and a stock shed. He is a valued member of the Montana Stock Growers' Association. In his experience Mr. Viall has tasted both the sweet and the bitter of the stock business. In 1906-7 he lost 5,000 head of sheep by the severe winter. The low price of 9⅛ cents a pound for wool represents the lowest price he received, but he has continued holding sheep since 1888. His best price for wool was in 1918, when the Government took his crop at 63⅞ cents a pound. In 1919 the price was 55 cents a pound.

Mr. Viall was married at Lyons, Ohio, September 18, 1895, to Miss Nora A. Cole, daughter of Enoch and Minerva Cole, and a member of a family which went to Ohio from Indiana. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Viall were born children as follows: Edna, who died as a maiden of seventeen years; Harvey and Elsworth, twins, who are associated with their father in his ranching operations; and Raymond, Donly, Nora and Gladys. Mr. Viall was reared under republican convictions, for at that time his father was a republican. The senior Mr. Viall has since changed to populistic and socialistic ideas and was the socialist candidate for governor of Wyoming on one occasion. John D. Viall cast his first vote in favor of the candidacy of Grover Cleveland for President, and has frequently voted for democratic candidates since, owing to his preference for the man rather than the party. He is fraternally affiliated with the Elks, his only order.

Joshua P. McCuiston. During a quarter of a century of residence Joshua P. McCuiston has written his name large among the prominent ranchers and farmers of the state, particularly in Rosebud County, where his chief interests are today. He is one of the few men still active whose experiences go back to the historic ranch and range period of the old southwest and the far northwest, when stockmen had no competition from farmers and settlers.

Mr. McCuiston is a native of the Lone Star state of Texas, and was born in Robertson County December 18, 1863. His grandfather, Robert McCuiston, lived in Tennessee, near Nashville, and probably went to Texas through the influence of what was known as the Nashville Colony, one of the early and prominent movements into Texas in pioneer days. Robert McCuiston settled at old Franklin, not far from Calvert, Texas, and spent the rest of his active life as a cattleman and farmer. Joshua McCuiston, father of the Montana rancher, was born near Nashville, and was seven years of age when the family moved to Texas. He grew up near Calvert, but spent his later years around Valley Mills in Bosque County, on the Bosque River in Northern Texas, where he was a farmer and cattleman. During the war between the states he served as a Confederate soldier, and for a part of the time was with the commissary as a forageman. While in the cavalry he rode his own horse. He was never in politics, though he voted as a democrat, and was a stanch and working member of the Methodist Church. Joshua McCuiston, Sr., went to old Mexico with the Blalock Colony in 1906, and was murdered there. He married Mary McGuire, a daughter of Dr. John McGuire, of Nashville, Tennessee. She died at Valley Mills, Texas, in 1893, the mother of five sons and five daughters, all of whom reached mature years. Those still living are: Mrs. Mary Pervis, of Oklahoma; Noah and James, of Amarilla, Texas; Thomas, who lives in Oklahoma, near his sister; Joshua P.; Mrs. Naomi Lane, of Valley Mills, Texas; and Sally Vickory, who also lives near Valley Mills.

Joshua P. McCuiston grew up in the family home near Valley Mills, and learned farming and stock raising direct from his father, being at home in the saddle almost from his earliest recollections. He attended school at Lanes Chapel, where a community teacher presided. After leaving school he was on the ranch and range, and in this industry he traveled out of Texas into New Mexico and eventually trailed a herd of cattle from that territory north to Wyoming, spending two years at Douglas. Leaving there, he made his first journey into Montana in 1894, stopping at the Big Bend ranch at the head of the Rosebud. Ultimately he purchased a place for himself at the narrows of the valley of the Rosebud, and occupied one of the cabin shacks of the early day formerly occupied by Tuman Frazier. Here he grazed his southern range stock of several hundred head of steers, and after finishing them off shipped them to Chicago with both the Kendrick and the Hardin and Campbell companies.

On leaving this Rosebud region he went north to the breaks of the Missouri River, near the mouth of the Musselshell on Squaw Creek. Here he bought out Hardin and Johnson, whose location was ideal for ranching. His brother as a partner bought stock cattle in Texas and shipped them north to the fine grass region of Montana. Their first shipments were unloaded at Orrin Junction, Wyoming, but later rates becoming more favorable to Billings that became their unloading point. The brothers continued ranching in the Missouri River country for fourteen years, and only abandoned the district because of the inroads of dryland farmers, who cut off the range and gave the country little in return. On leaving there Mr. McCuiston moved his home to Forsyth and established his farm and ranch interests in the Yellowstone Valley. His present properties are on Wyant Coulee, and he also occupies the Lewis estate between the Reservation and Sarpy Creek. While running his stock on the range his cattle brand was "H cross" with bar on left shoulder. He retained this brand until he finally sold all his holdings. For a few years he ran a roundup wagon, beginning as the pool wagon for the Squaw Creek Pool, and with the gradual breakup of the pool he ran the wagon himself.

Mr. McCuiston made his first efforts in agriculture while on the Missouri River ranch, though they were chiefly confined to raising feed for his chickens and potatoes for home consumption. In Rosebud County he has entered agriculture as a practical and profitable business, raising both grain and beets. However, all his agricultural production is on lands under the ditches of the Yellowstone Irrigation Company. His valley lands are scattered along the Yellowstone from Forsyth west to Finch, and his acreage under irrigation comprises some five hundred acres. To the improvement and maintenance of the Yellowstone Irrigation Company he has contributed since he moved to this locality and is a member of the Board of Directors of the Irrigation Company. Mr. McCuiston is also a director of the First National Bank of Forsyth. Since moving to Forsyth Mr. and Mrs. McCuiston have built their modern eight-room home on Cedar and Thirteenth Avenue. In politics Mr. McCuiston governs his actions not by party nominations but by the character of the men who are candidates.

At Douglas, Wyoming, September 24, 1894, Mr. McCuiston married Miss Grace Dean. She was born in Iowa July 20, 1879, oldest of the six children of Henry and Kate (Hammond) Dean. The only other two children still living are Hal, of Douglas, Wyoming, and Vernon, of Santa Cruz, California, where her parents also reside. She was a small girl when her parents moved to Kansas City, Missouri, where she finished her education. Later they moved to Wyoming and she became acquainted with Mr. McCuiston near Douglas. Mr. and Mrs. McCuiston have one son, Henry, born March 31, 1909.

Thomas Whitman Longley. Of the individual and firm names associated with the livestock industry in the Yellowstone Valley and heard and spoken every day in that region twenty-five or thirty years ago, the great majority are preserved only in memory or in history. One, however, is that of Thomas Whitman Longley, better known, however, as Whit Longley. Mr. Longley came into Montana in the early '80s, was a real leader in the old range industry, saw it at its height and also at its decline, and now at the conclusion of nearly two score years in the state is handling what he describes as "the remnant of the business" on the banks of the Yellowstone, just west of Forsyth.

The brief story of his career shows that he has been in close touch with the life and affairs of the great western country for half a century. He was born in Callaway County, Missouri, October 3, 1850, and is the last survivor of the nine children, seven of whom reached maturity, of Dr. T. W. Longley. Doctor Longley, a native of Mississippi, moved to Callaway County in an early day, and continued to bear the burdens of a country physician until he was sixty-five years of age. During the war between the states he maintained himself as a neutral and served to the best of his ability both the Union and Confederate troops in a professional capacity. In Mississippi he married Miss America McGary, who lived to the age of seventy-four. Both are buried near Fulton, Missouri.

Thomas Whitman Longley was reared in a home of considerable comfort, had a good education, but soon tired of the routine of life in a central Missouri community and sought the great adventures of the west and the far west. For five years he lived in Travis County, Texas, close to the southwestern frontier. In 1872 he started for the Pacific Coast, helping trail a bunch of cattle for the firm of Harding & Riley, of Santa Rosa, California. At Elsworth, Kansas, the terminus of the railroad, the company secured a new outfit, and thence drove across to the old Emigrant road, 100 miles north of Salt Lake, crossed the Rocky Mountains at old South Pass, and went on to within 100 miles north of Winnemucka, Nevada, where the herders and their herd spent the winter. Altogether the journey consumed seven months and seventeen days, and it is said to have been the first herd that completed the long overland trail within twelve months of starting out. On reaching his destination Mr. Longley left the service of his employers and began the cattle business for himself in the Pyramid Lake region of the mountains along the line of Nevada and California. For eleven years he ran his stock in that district, and altogether it was a peaceful existence, unmarred by Indian foray or other special vicissitude.

In 1883 Mr. Longley came into Montana territory with a bunch of horses in the employ of the Green Mountain Stock Ranching Company. This was a Vermont organization. The company turned over the management of its affairs in Montana to him personally in March, 1884. His first headquarters were established on the East Fork of Armell's Creek, and a year later moved to the West Fork of the same stream, and remained there during the working season, until the company went out of business. However, winter headquarters were selected by Mr. Longley on what is well known as Cannibal Island, an island in the river of the Yellowstone, offering peculiarly attractive advantages for winter quarters. For twenty-nine years Mr. Longley's headquarters remained on that island, and he only abandoned it when the land was threatened with complete destruction by the turbulent waters. He had his stock on the island at a time when it afforded 400 acres of hay and pasture land. Now only about seventy acres lies above water, and this is disappearing with each recurring flood.

The Green Mountain Stock Ranching Company had for its object the breeding and finishing of both cattle and horses, though the chief emphasis was horses, and that became a very extensive industry beginning in the fall of 1885. The company had more than $40,000 worth of imported stallions, draft horses of the Percheron and English Shire of the Cleveland Bays. At the zenith of its business the company ran as many as 6,000 head under the brand "FUF." To this brand Mr. Longley fell heir as purchaser of the remnant of the old Green Mountain stock, and he still uses it. Among the owners of the old New England concern were Fletcher Brothers, one of whom was its president. When these brothers succeeded to the business of the corporation they continued it under the name Fletcher Brothers. They dealt in nothing but horses, and marketed their stock in many of the states and in Canada. As a result of encroachment from settlers their operations steadily declined, and eventually they offered the remnant of their stock to Mr. Longley and his nephew, J. E. Longley, who purchased it and have continued business as the logical successors of the old Green Mountain Company under the name Longley & Longley. However, this firm now concentrates its efforts on the breeding of White Face cattle, doing so rather as farmers than as ranchers, and they turn a few thoroughbreds into service by private sale every year.

Mr. Longley acquired his first tract of land on Armell's Creek, at the cow camp of the old company. His main holdings as a rancher have been acquired along the banks of the Yellowstone, and he has developed a farm of valley land with 200 acres under cultivation. His total holdings embrace between 800 and 900 acres. The ranch home on the island he abandoned in 1912, and then prepared his present residence on the south bank of the river, with the Yellowstone Highway and the Northern Pacific Railway in front. An irrigation system of his own construction, supplied by pumps from the river, put his land under water whenever climatic conditions demand it. His chief agricultural crop is alfalfa.

While livestock and ranching have been his chief and big interest in Montana, Mr. Longley was also a factor and partner in the Home Trading Company at Forsyth during its existence. Politics has not been a subject in which he has shown an ardent interest, though his eminent qualifications have made his services sought again and again by his fellow citizens. By appointment he served as county treasurer, and during his incumbency both his political opponents as well as his friends asked him to take the office for the first full term. Later he was elected and served four years as county commissioner, his colleagues on the board the first term being Commissioners Squires and Alexander and during the second period Commissioners Squires and Blakesley.

During the World war Mr. Longley was a member of the County Council of Defense, and his friends say that the Longleys "danced every set," meaning that they were participants in spirit, in action and in contribution to every war cause.

At Quitman, Arkansas, in 1904, Mr. Longley married Miss Mary Robinson Fentem, daughter of Dr. Charles K. and Cynthia J. (Longley) Fentem. Her parents were an old Callaway County, Missouri, family, and her father practiced dentistry at Jefferson City, Bloomfield and Fayette, Missouri, and for some five or six years maintained his residence at Quitman, Arkansas, where Mrs. Longley's mother died in 1905. Mrs. Longley has one brother, Professor A. L. Fentem, of Ada, Oklahoma. Mrs. Longley completed her education in Howard Payne College at Fayette, Missouri, and was a teacher in Arkansas prior to her marriage.

Peter C. Jensen. The only settler of the name of Jensen tributary to Powderville, and one of the early residents of this region, is Peter C. Jensen, who dates his coming to this ranch April 9, 1894. Mr. Jensen rode into the state on horseback from Cheyenne, Wyoming, crossing the waste of desert and prairie and heading for the "Box T" outfit, an old-time cattle company somewhere on Powder River. His companions hither were "Hobo John," as he subsequently came to be known, and James Green, cowmen bound for the Montana range. They left the "AU-7" ranch on Cheyenne River in Wyoming and started for Wagner's ranch, but owing to a heavy snowstorm which fell to the depth of a foot or more they lost the trail and wandered two days and nights, walking at times to locate the trail by foot, to keep warm and to rest their steeds, and then riding again to rest themselves. Finally they arrived at Morecroft, Wyoming, worn out and hungry, but with determination unshaken. With creeks full of slush and snow, they left there and began the second lap of their journey north. Coming to a creek, the older men persuaded young Jensen to jump his horse into the surging stream and lead the others across. Not dreaming the stream was past fording he plunged, went under with his horse, slipped from its back, and while he swam to the new shore his horse turned back to his companions. This necessitated his swimming back to his horse and the three returned to Morecroft for a fresh start.

On the following day the three travelers walked their horses across two planks on the railroad bridge over that particular stream and followed on toward Little Powder River. One night they stayed with a Mormon trapper, who impressed Mr. Jensen with his conviction on Mormonism by saying that he had seventeen daughters and he "hoped to God that some good man would come along and marry them all." The travelers came down Little Powder to the Cross Ranch, and there Mr. Jensen joined a party going to the "Box-T" ranch with horses. The old ranch house and other buildings of this historic ranch headquarters have all gone into the river, but the place of their activity is marked by the improvements of Dick Richardson's ranch. Mr. Jensen hired out to the management, and after spending six months on the range became ranch cook and worked thus for three and one-half years.

When the "Box-T" went out of business here it transferred its activities to Nebraska and Mr. Jensen went with them and spent six months more as a cook, their ranch being on the Niobrara River. He came back to Montana then, having purchased previously the interests of the company in their horse ranch on Cow Creek, and to this he returned to begin ranching for himself. His beginning was a modest one, his first purchase being nine cows and three yearlings of W. G. Comstock, another old-timer of this region. He pursued a course of labor for others in the summer, running his cattle with others for the time being, and spent the winters on his own ranch and sheltered himself under his shack roof on Cow Creek. He worked three years in this way for Major Dowson, gained credit in the meantime and accumulated cattle from his earnings on the Dowson ranch, and made some headway toward independence. He took his homestead along the creek, upon which his buildings and improvements stand, much of his quarter being hay land, which is the most valuable portion of his ranch. He has acquired title to a half section and the leased lands make him a ranch of nine sections.

Cow Creek is a semi-living stream and along its low banks the switches which Mr. Jensen found here upon coming into the region have become well matured patches of timber. Its flood waters served him for limited irrigation for some years, but the beaver has spoiled all this by taking possession of his "gate and dam" and controlling the water to suit itself. The little shack which Mr. Jensen first lived in is a part of the ranch bunkhouse and it was succeeded by the comfortable ranch home in which he is rearing his family. His strain of cattle have been the Herefords and he bred them up well and introduced into them the Durham blood—two crops of Hereford and one of Durham. His cow brand is "PJ," the initials of his own name, and his market has usually been Chicago but occasionally he ships to Omaha. Like many of the old cattle men, he mixed his industry with sheep and ranched sheep for nine years, and with excellent profit to himself.

Mr. Jensen is a director of school district No. 2, and during the World war was chairman of the Custer County Council of Defense, and every bond drive and every other demand for war funds was oversubscribed. In his politics he began voting as a republican, casting his first presidential ballot for Colonel Roosevelt in 1904, and has been a county committeeman of his party. Aside from his ranch interests Mr. Jensen is a stockholder of the Bank of Broadus and of the hotel company there.

Mr. Jensen was born at Racine, Wisconsin, January 30, 1869, and his growing-up occurred there until he was nine years of age, when his parents moved to Seward County, Nebraska, where he came to his majority on the home farm. His education is of the country school kind, and he secured very little of that, but is a man of broad information along general lines. His father was Soren Jensen, who came out of Denmark to the United States in 1867 and brought his wife and two children across the ocean, starting from his old home four miles southwest of Copenhagen. He resides at Jonesboro, Illinois, at the age of eighty-nine years, and Mrs. Jensen is eighty-six. Their children are: Andrew, of York, Nebraska; Thomas, who was killed by a mine slide at Leadville, Colorado; Peter C., of this notice; Mary, the wife of Jacob McClune, of Springfield, Illinois; John, also of that city; and Anna, who married John Byrd, of Jonesboro, Illinois.

Peter C. Jensen was married at Labelle, Missouri, December 22, 1907, to Miss Charlotte B. Sykes, a daughter of Edwin E. Sykes. Mrs. Jensen came to Montana as a young woman and a teacher and met Mr. Jensen at Ekalaka. She was born at Labelle, Missouri, in February, 1879, and was a student in the Spearfish (South Dakota) Normal School and also in the Gem City Business College at Quincy, Illinois. In the family of Mrs. Jensen's parents, Edwin E. and Anna E. (Seber) Sykes, there were the following children: George, of Ekalaka, Montana; Mrs. Jensen; Bruce, of Chicago, Illinois; Frances; Ellis, of Calgary, Canada; May, the wife of Asa Bartlett, of Roberts, Idaho; Harry E., of Labelle, Missouri; and Frank D., now associated in ranching with Mr. Jensen, was wounded in France while fighting with the Ninety-first Division of the American Expeditionary Forces. Mr. and Mrs. Jensen have three children: Mary Frances, Charlotte B. and Jeannette Sykes. Mr. Jensen is an apprentice in Masonry and a member of the Odd Fellows.

Frank A. Wright. In the legal profession of Montana as represented at the thriving city of Lewistown one of the younger members who has already won success and standing is Frank A. Wright. A native of the city in which his entire professional career has been passed, he has been identified with a number of important cases which have come before the courts, and in addition has also been connected with public life, having served Fergus County as county attorney one term.

Frank A. Wright was born at Lewistown, Montana, December 19, 1890, a son of Edmund and Lizzie M. (Gudgell) Wright. There was another son born to his parents, Robert G., also a resident of Lewistown. Mr. Wright received his early education in the public schools of Lewistown, being graduated from the high school with the class of 1909, and at that time entered upon an academic course in the University of Minnesota, from which he was duly graduated in 1913. His legal studies were pursued in the University of Michigan, from which institution he received his degree of Bachelor of Law as a member of the class of 1914, and in the same year he was admitted to the Michigan bar. Returning to Lewistown, he received permission to practice before the bar of Montana, and since that time has built up an excellent professional business at Lewistown, where he has offices at 309 Montana Building. During the same year that he embarked in practice at Lewistown Mr. Wright was elected, November 10, 1914, as county attorney of Fergus County, and served one term. He accounted for the duties of his office in an able manner, one in which he displayed the possession of thorough knowledge of the principles of his calling, and his skill and native talent have since been developed in a way that have served to place him among the leaders of his vocation in the city of his birth.

Mr. Wright was married June 29, 1914, to Miss Katherine Breitmeyer, who was born at Detroit, Michigan, daughter of Philip and Katherine (Grass) Breitmeyer, the former born near Detroit and the latter at Philadelphia. There were two children in the family: Harry and Mrs. Wright. Mrs. Wright's father was one of the prominent business men of Detroit, and was also a leader in civic affairs, having served at one time as mayor of Detroit. Mr. and Mrs. Wright are the parents of two children: Katherine Elizabeth and Hazel Lucile. Mr. Wright belongs to the county, state and national law associations and has an excellent reputation among his confreres as a lawyer who recognizes and respects the highest ethics of his calling. Fraternally he is affiliated with Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Judith Lodge No. 30, Knights of Pythias; and the Theta Delta Chi college fraternity. His political support is given to the principles and candidates of the republican party.

Sever Hagen. Among the pioneers of Rosebud County whose experiences do much to illustrate the history of development in that region, one is Sever Hagen of Ingomar, who has lived there for twenty-one years and is one of the leading sheep men of the region, and also a citizen whose public spirit has brought him into active contact with many local affairs.

Mr. Hagen was born at Lom, an agricultural community of Norway, July 3, 1876, son of Mr. and Mrs. Austin Hagen. His father died soon after his birth, and when five years of age his widowed mother brought him, her only child, to America and settled on a farm near Whitehall, Wisconsin. She remained at the head of her modest household while her son was growing up, but subsequently became the wife of Louis Kelly and is now living at Broderick, Canada.

Sever Hagen early gained a sense of responsibility, grew up in a home of modest comfort, and acquired an education in the public schools of Wisconsin. He lived with his mother until past his majority, but at the age of fourteen was working out as a farm hand, and as a wage worker he performed his chief role in Wisconsin and also in Montana until he was twenty-five years of age.

Mr. Hagen came to Montana from Trempealeau County, Wisconsin, in 1899, and reached here with only a few dollars saved from his wages. He was attracted to Montana by the better wages paid in the northwest and also the better opportunities for a man without capital. Another motive probably was to lay the foundation of a home of his own, since three or four years later he returned to Wisconsin and claimed a bride. On leaving the train at Forsyth he hired out to David Nelson, a well known stock man whose ranch is some twenty miles east of Ingomar. General ranch work and tending sheep camp for Mr. Nelson employed him a year and a half, and he was then in a similar service for Gould Brothers near Forsyth until the spring of 1903.

Mr. Hagen then went up Big Porcupine and located land of his own fifty miles northwest of Forsyth, though his claim for a couple of years was only a squatter's right. In the fall of 1903 he bought a bunch of sheep, and at the same time returned to Wisconsin and was married. For the past seventeen years his chief business has been handling sheep, and he has been through all the ups and downs of that industry. His wool has gone to market at a price as low as 15 cents a pound, while again it commanded 64 cents a pound. The high tide in his business as a wool producer came in 1919, when he sheared some 2,000 head of sheep, and the best clip taken in that year averaged a little more than twelve pounds a head. His sheep have been the Rambouillet and Lincoln blood. He has also been more or less identified with the cattle industry through all these years, his cattle brand being "CM." He has shipped out many cattle from his ranch and in the fall of 1918 sent the best carload of steers that ever went from this part of the state. They were eighteen head of three year olds, and at market they secured the top price of $222.50 a head on the average.

As the nucleus of his ranch Mr. Hagen entered a quarter section, and from time to time has increased his holdings until he owns a body of nine sections. While the first improvement was a log house of a single room, he has invested a large amount of work and capital in increased equipment and now has a comfortable home of five rooms, barn, bunk house and ample sheds for stock. Two large reservoirs have been constructed to supply stock water during periods of drought.

He has not kept all his interests on his ranch. He helped organize the school in the Ingomar district and has served on the school board for eight or nine years. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce at Ingomar, is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America, and is a republican in politics, having cast his first vote in Montana in 1900 for Major McKinley.

December 16, 1903, at Hickston, Wisconsin, he married Miss Margaret Lanphere. She was born at Whitehall, Wisconsin, February 17, 1882, the oldest of the four daughters of Arthur and Helene (Klose) Lanphere. Her father was a native of LaCrosse, Wisconsin. Her three sisters are Mrs. Ida Evenson, of Minong, Wisconsin; Mrs. H. W. VanDuzen, of Roundup, Montana; and Mrs. George Riechers, of Ingomar, Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Hagen have three children: Sybil, Eva and Arthur.

WILLIAM T. CRAIG A man who has all the assets of youth, William T. Craig is at the full tide of achievement as a business man and citizen of Rosebud County, being cashier of the First National Bank of Ingomar, head of several of the important industries of the village, and a prominent wool producer and also a member of the Board of County Commissioners.

Mr. Craig was born in the suburb of Ravenswood, Chicago, December 4, 1892, son of Andrew and Helen (Thomson) Craig. Both his parents were born in Scotland. His father, a native of Edinburgh, had the experience and training of an operator on the North British Railway as a youth, came to the United States when a young man, and entered the service of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company as a bookkeeper in the auditor's office. He remained with that company twenty-five years and died in the service in 1910, at the age of forty-four. He was an artist with the pen, and wrote resolutions and cards for various lodges in Chicago. He was married in Omaha, Nebraska, his wife being a native of Motherwell, Scotland, and daughter of William Thomson. She died in 1907, the mother of two sons and two daughters, William T. being the oldest. The other son is Robert, cashier of the Melstone State Bank of Melstone, Montana; Mary lives in Denver; while Evelyn resides at Palmyra, Wisconsin.

William T. Craig acquired a public school education in Chicago, spending one year in high school and a commercial course of six months in a high school. He paid for his own education, and studied more outside of school than he did inside. Beginning as a boy, he spent four years as a clerk in the office of the vice president of the Milwaukee Railway Company, E. S. Keeley. Leaving that position in 1910, at the age of eighteen, he came West when the first steel trains were put on the Transcontinental division of the Milwaukee system, and as ticket agent at Miles City sold the first tickets for these trains. After one year he left the railway service to take up different work and became bookkeeper and receiving clerk for the First National Bank of Miles City. A year and a half later he became cashier for the Western Commissary Company at Lewistown, and remained there until he came to Ingomar in 1914 and entered banking.

His first association with banking here was as cashier of the bank of Wiley, Clark & Greening, which later became the Ingomar State Bank and subsequently the First National Bank. He has been cashier through these various changes and is also a member of the board of directors.

In the fall of 1918 Mr. Craig entered the sheep and wool industry at Ingomar as a partner with S. O. Mysse, under the firm of Mysse & Craig, one of the large individual concerns in this section of the state. The partners stocked their ranch with flocks of half-breed Coteswold and Rambouillet, a selection that has shown adaptability to the range and climate. The firm reached the acme of their efforts in 1919, when they clipped 60,000 pounds of wool. Mr. Craig is treasurer of the Ingomar Shearing Company, owning what is said to be the best equipped shearing plant in the United States, located at Ingomar, and with a shearing capacity of 5,000 sheep per day.

Mr. Craig is also president of the Ingomar Milling Company, operating the flour mill and elevator and also the electric light plant of the village. He was elected county commissioner in November, 1918, succeeding J. M. Williams, and is a member of the board with R. W. Blekesley and Charles M. Dowlin. The important work of the board has been the bond issue for the construction of the County Hospital and also the issue of bonds for road work in conjunction with the Federal appropriation for that purpose. Mr. Craig cast his first vote at Ingomar, supporting Charles E. Hughes for President. He was reared in a republican household. He joined the Masonic fraternity at Miles City, and is a member of the Lodge, Chapter and Knights Templar Commandery at Forsyth.

At Forsyth, Montana, November 2, 1913, Mr. Craig married Miss Sophia Barthelmess. She was born at Fort Keogh, Custer County, Montana, December 25, 1891. Her father was a sergeant in the regular army, saw active service in the Spanish-American war, and lost his life accidentally at Fort Keogh. Her mother is now Mrs. Cort Hanson. Mrs. Craig, who is one of seven children, has one son and one daughter, William T., Jr., and Helen Ruth.

HUGH R. DAWES. In these modern days of specialization along all lines of human endeavor it is not surprising to find that many progressive ranchmen and agriculturists of Montana are centering their energies upon one special feature of their work rather than distributing their labor over a broad field. An example is found in Hugh R. Dawes, of the Garneill community of Fergus County, who, while a general ranchman, makes a specialty of breeding and selling high class horses. Mr. Dawes has passed all of his life since he was seven years of age in his present locality, where he is well and favorably known, and is carrying on the business started by his father many years ago.

Mr. Dawes was born in Adair County, Missouri, July 9, 1875, a son of John A. J. and Margaret (Crockett) Dawes. His father, born in Virginia, died February 14, 1910, at the age of sixty-nine years, and his mother, born in Missouri in September, 1839, still survives and is a resident of Idaho. Of the nine children in the family seven are living, and Hugh R. was the fourth in order of birth. John A. J. Dawes served in a Virginia volunteer infantry regiment in the Confederate army during the Civil war, and after the close of that struggle came West to Missouri, where he married and engaged in farming and stock raising in Adair County. In 1881 he left his Missouri farm and traveled to Bozeman, Montana, by rail, then journeying overland with an eight-horse team to the Judith Basin, where he located on Government land. From that time forward he continued successfully as a cattle raiser and ranchman, and at the time of his death, February 14, 1910, was accounted one of the substantial men of his community. He was also prominent and influential in civic affairs, and for several years administered justice in his community in the capacity of justice of the peace. His political belief was that of the democratic party.

Hugh R. Dawes was seven years of age when he accompanied his parents to Lewistown, Montana, and here his education was secured in the public schools. He grew up in the atmosphere and amid the surroundings of the ranch, was thoroughly trained by his father in all the details of its management, and when the elder man died stepped into his shoes and has since carried on operations in a capable manner. He is engaged in raising sheep, cattle and horses, and at the present time has about 900 head of sheep and from seventy-five to eighty head of cattle. As before noted, however, a specialty is made of breeding and selling high-class horses, and at the present time there are from forty to fifty head of Shire horses on the ranch. Mr. Dawes is known as an excellent judge of stock, and in business circles his reputation is equally high. He is a member of Gordon Lodge No. 68, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at Straw. His political faith makes him a democrat.

On January 1, 1912, Mr. Dawes was married to Miss Dazie M. Glazier, who was born in South Dakota, a daughter of Aaron Glazier, an agriculturist of this state. Mr. and Mrs. Dawes have one son, Hugh G.

BERTRAM PERRY MELCHERT. A leading contractor and builder, Bertram P. Melchert has been prominently connected with the industrial interests of Lewistown since 1902, and his standing in business circles has been gained through a career of honorable and straightforward dealing. In addition, he has been extensively engaged in ranching in Fergus County, a field in which he has likewise made a success and maintained a high reputation.

Mr. Melchert was born at Davenport, Iowa, September 25, 1877, a son of William and Grace (Perry) Melchert. His father, also a native of Davenport, was for years a railroad builder and contractor of Iowa and one of the most prominent men in his line in the state, where his death occurred in 1903, after he had rounded out a most successful career. Mrs. Melchert, a native of Paris, France, still survives. There are four children in the family, of whom Bertram P. is the eldest. Bertram P. Melchert received his literary education in the public schools of Davenport, following which he prepared himself for a commercial career by a course in the Davenport Business College. At the age of twenty years he embarked in the contracting business, starting to build highways, and May 8, 1902, came to Lewistown, Montana, which has since been his home. He has done a large and prosperous business in contracting for and building highways, and his reputation for efficiency in this line is unexcelled by any contractor in the county. In addition to his activities in this direction he has met with success in his operations as a cattle raiser and dealer, being the owner of a ranch twenty miles from Lewistown, which he is still conducting. He formerly owned a ranch of 1,240 acres, which he operated for the growing of wheat, but found his other interests too exacting, and disposed of this property in January, 1919. Mr. Melchert is a member of Lewistown Lodge No. 37, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Hiram Chapter No. 14, Royal Arch Masons; Lewistown Commandery No. 15, Knights Templar; Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine; and Lewistown Lodge No. 456, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. In politics he is a republican.

On June 6, 1906, Mr. Melchert married Miss Effa May Pratt, who was born in Iowa.

THOMAS C. SCOTT was for many years widely known throughout Custer County as a ranchman, and at one time the Scott ranch embraced an area of 7,800 acres, developed from a single section of land. During a period of nineteen years Mr. Scott carried on his work of development here, at the head of Little Pumpkin Creek.

He was born in far off Wayne County, New York, July 11, 1869, a son of Joel Scott and a grandson of Thomas Scott. The last named subsequently moved from Kentucky to Kansas, and died in Linn County of the latter state, where a son, Cullen Scott, and a daughter, Mrs. Artie Burnett, lived. Joel Scott, who died in 1869, married Emily Sandusky, who was born in Kentucky, but whose parents came from Virginia. The following children were born to Joel and Emily Scott: Will, whose home is still in Kentucky, at Monticello; and Thomas C., of Miles City, Montana. Mrs. Scott married for her second husband James Phipps, and by this union she became the mother of five children. Her death occurred in Kentucky.

Thomas C. Scott spent his years on a Kentucky farm until he reached the age of sixteen, acquiring in the meantime a limited country school education. He then started out to make his own way in the world, and as a youth of sixteen, alone and unaided, he journeyed to Texas, where he worked on the range until 1895. He spent many years in the Panhandle region of the Lone Star state, saw Plainview in Hale County in its infancy, and witnessed the growth and development of many of the west Texas county seats and metropolises. He went out to that country as a cowboy, and among his Texas employers were the owners of the historic "XIT" ranch. He subsequently ran a bunch of cattle of his own. He was in Lamb County when there was not a woman within its entire boundaries and when it cast but seven votes, and Mr. Scott helped select a companion cowboy for the office of sheriff.

In 1895 he left that Southwest country and made his way to Montana, arriving here when yet a young and unmarried man and his first work was as an employe of the electric light plant in Miles City. After a year he was chosen steward of the Miles City Club, and during the two years he remained in that office he also ran a small bunch of cattle on Fallon Creek, and when he left the club he began ranching in earnest on Little Pumpkin Creek. He in time established a cattle ranch of pure bred Herefords, and for a time was associated in the cattle business with A. T. McAusland. At the present writing Mr. Scott is a stockholder in the Miles City National Bank, and has in the past served on its directorate. He is also interested in mining at Cook City, Montana, a member of the company operating the Glen Gary copper, gold and silver mine, a property formerly known as the old Scotch Bonnet, just outside Yellowstone Park. This mine gives promise of being one of the richest properties of the region.

Mr. Scott married in Miles City May 22, 1902, Miss Grace Cratz, who was born in Jasper County, Iowa, and went from there to Texas. Her death occurred at Rochester, Minnesota, January 10, 1917, when she was forty-eight years of age. She became the mother of one daughter, Emily Belle Scott, who was born in October, 1903, and is now in school in Des Moines, Iowa. Mr. Scott in his political affiliations upholds the principles of the democratic party, but in local matters he votes for the man whom he regards as best fitted for office. He is a member of the fraternal order of Elks.

Martin Luther Woodman. A man of wide experience, keen appreciation of values, excellent business judgment and marked industry, Martin Luther Woodman has attained a position of prominence in business and banking circles of Lewistown. The success which he has achieved in life is all the more creditable in that he was denied many of the privileges that youth regards as its inalienable right and that he entered upon his career in the capacity of a bound boy. His life is but another example of self-made manhood, another instance of indomitable spirit and determined ambition overcoming all obstacles.

Mr. Woodman was born on his father's farm in Rock County, Wisconsin, August 18, 1858, a son of David and Rebecca (Sly) Woodman. His father was born at Bath, England, and was married at London, England, to a native of that city. After the birth of the first of their seven children the parents immigrated to the United States and located in Rock County, Wisconsin, as pioneers. In their community the country was largely unsettled and much of the land was covered with timber, so that it was a difficult matter for the new arrivals to bridge over the few years which necessarily intervened ere the land could be properly prepared for the production of paying crops. The father was an industrious man, but in the time between his arrival and his death, in 1869, he was able to do little in the way of putting aside means, and as a result left his family in straightened circumstances. While he had been possessed of but little, with what he had he was liberal, being particularly generous in his donations to the Methodist Episcopal Church at Fairfield, Wisconsin. He was a republican in his political affiliation.

Martin Luther Woodman received only meager educational advantages, and when his father died he was but eleven years of age, so that his boyhood and youth knew much of hard work. He was bound out to a neighboring farmer in Rock County, with whom he remained until attaining his majority, in 1879, and at that time went to Nebraska to make a start for himself. For three years he was employed as a farm hand, but in February, 1882, went to Helena, where he was variously employed until the fall of the same year. That time found him in the Judith Basin of Fergus County engaged in the cattle, horse and sheep business, in which he has been engaged ever since, although for the past twenty years he has made his home at Lewistown. Mr. Woodman does things upon a large scale, and the manner in which he conducts his transactions leads his associates to place the utmost confidence in his ability and entire integrity. He was one of the organizers of the Empire Bank and Trust Company, of which he is at present vice president. He has various important civic and social connections, and is a leading and influential democrat.

Mr. Woodman married Miss Loretta Barnes, who was born at Helena, Montana, daughter of J. P. and Rose (Beatty) Barnes. The late Mr. Barnes was one of the prominent men of the state during his day. He was a pioneer of Montana, serving as a member of the first territorial Legislature, for a number of years conducted a flouring mill at Lewistown, where he was also interested in the banking business, and was one of the proprietors of the Barnes King Mining Company in Fergus County. Various official honors came to him, and after he served as receiver of the United States Land Office at Lewistown and as county commissioner of Fergus County he was elected mayor and gave the city an excellent administration. He was a democrat. Mr. and Mrs. Woodman are the parents of one daughter, Rosa Mae.

Goodwin Taylor Paul. Dillon has always borne the reputation of being a community of live citizens. When those citizens have co-operated on any plan of development for the best interests of the community, Goodwin Taylor Paul has usually been among the leaders and helpers. He has been a resident of Dillon nearly forty years. He has initiated and given substance to several big business enterprises of his own. For many years he has been a merchant, also a cattle man and rancher, and is president of the Beaverhead State Bank, which was opened for business in May, 1917.

Goodwin T. Paul was born at Marion, Linn County, Iowa, November 9, 1856. He comes from sterling pioneer stock. His paternal ancestors were Scotch-Irish and settled in Pennsylvania in colonial times. His grandfather, George Paul, was a resident of Greene County, Pennsylvania, where he died in the late '50s. He was a farmer by occupation. Alexander Paul, father of Goodwin Taylor Paul was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, in 1823, and in the fall of 1844 moved out to a section of the almost uninhabited West, Linn County, Iowa. He developed a farm from the woods and the prairie, and for a half century was an Iowa agriculturist and stock grower. In 1895 he left his farm and moved into Marion the county seat, where he died in 1906. He was a democrat, was a member of the Masonic order and was a regular and faithful member of the Methodist Church. He married in Cedar County, Iowa, Justan Taylor, who was born in Henry County, Indiana, in 1831 and died near Marion, Iowa, in May, 1876. Her father was Goodwin Taylor, of French and English stock. The Taylors came in colonial times to this country. Her grandfather, Taylor, was killed in the War of 1812. Goodwin Taylor was born in Virginia in 1806 and he moved to North Carolina where he was married to Jane Griffin a native of that state. They became early settlers in Indiana, and in 1836 removed to Black Hawk Territory, now the State of Iowa, where they followed farming and merchandising. He served as a member of the Iowa Legislature and had a wide acquaintance throughout the West. In the early '70s they removed to Nebraska and associated themselves in farming and stock raising with their only son William Taylor who had large holdings in Dakota County of that state. Mrs. Taylor died in the late '70s and Mr. Taylor died in 1881. William Taylor later moved to Idaho and is now a resident of Alberta, Canada, and although past eighty takes an active interest in farming and stock raising.

Goodwin Taylor Paul is the oldest of eight children. The next in age is William Thomas, who is a rancher in Kit Carson County, Colorado. Dr. Irvin N. is a physician and surgeon at Perry, Iowa. Jane is the wife of Julius F. Jenal a fruit grower and real estate broker at Los Angeles, California. O. K. was a merchant and died at Lima, Montana, in 1904. Frank J. died at Whittier, California, at the age of twenty-two. Dr. Charles E. was a physician and surgeon at Litchfield, Nebraska, where he died in 1919. Bert H., the youngest recently retired from merchandising and is now engaged in ranching and stock raising at Monida, Montana.

Goodwin T. Paul acquired his early education in the public schools of Linn County, Iowa, and at Cornell College, Mount Vernon, Iowa, one of the prominent colleges of the middle west. He left college in 1880, taught school for a while, farming in the meantime, and was also employed with a grading outfit for the Northwestern Railway. From his earnings he paid his way to Montana, arriving in Dillon in August, 1881. From that date to the present his work and his interests have been closely identified with this thriving district. For four years he clerked in a store, and in 1885 established the Dillon Furniture Company. It was a stock company, but in 1892 Mr. Paul acquired all the interests, still continuing it as the Dillon Furniture Company. This is the largest store of the kind in Southern Montana. He is associated with his brother Bert in the ownership of a ranch of several thousand acres in the Centennial Valley in the southern part of Beaverhead County. They use this land for raising cattle principally. Mr. Paul is also interested in mining and oil properties, being vice president of the Butte and Zenith City Mining Company of Butte.

Like most of our active public spirited men, Mr. Paul has occasionally taken a hand in the political game and has borne his part in the responsibilities of local government, but only when urged by the necessities of the occasion. His membership on various school boards aggregates nearly twenty-five years. He was president of the Beaverhead County High School Board seven years and a member of the State Board of Education twelve years, having been first appointed by Governor Joseph K. Toole. He has also served on the Dillon City Council. In 1898 he was elected a member of the Legislature, serving in the sixth session, and was chairman of the appropriations committee. He is a democrat in politics, a charter member of the various Masonic bodies of Dillon, is Past Master of Dillon Lodge No. 16, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Past High Priest of Dillon Chapter Royal Arch Masons, Past Eminent Commander of St. Elmo Commandery No. 7, Knight Templars, and a member of Bagdad Temple of the Mystic Shine at Butte. He is also a non-affiliated member of the order of Royal and Select Masters.

Quoting from a former History of Montana we find the following: "Mr. Paul is a man endowed with fine eloquence and logic, and is much sought to convey at public meetings the wishes of the people of the vicinity in matters of general interest. It has been said of him 'His ease and readiness of speech make him eminently fitted for this work and it is a foregone conclusion that when Mr. Paul is called upon to express a sentiment that it will be expressed with accuracy and eloquence.'"

In 1889 Mr. Paul married at Dillon Miss Mary Bourret, daughter of Joseph and Mathilda (Giroux) Bourret. Mr. Bourret was a pioneer of the West and conducted a harness and saddlery business in Dillon for several years before his death which occurred in 1895. Mrs. Paul's mother is now living in Houston, Texas, and is a sister of Joseph L. Giroux, long one of the most prominent figures in mining circles in Montana, Arizona and Nevada, now a resident of Los Angeles. Mrs. Paul's only brother, Joseph J. Bourret, is a resident of Houston, Texas, and is engaged in the cotton business. Mr. and Mrs. Paul have three children: Hortense is graduate of the Beaverhead County High School and of the State Normal College at Dillon, is the wife of John Anthony Nolan and their home is in Chicago. They have a son George Paul now six years old. Mr. Nolan is a travelling representative of a commercial house of Chicago. Lucile Justan is also a graduate of the Beaverhead County High School and of the State University at Missoula in the class of 1918 with the degree A. B. and was a member of the Delta Gamma Sorority. She is now connected with her father's bank in Dillon, having recently returned from Washington, D. C., where she held a position in the Income Tax Department. Frank Goodwin, the only son of Mr. Paul, graduated from Morgan Park Military Academy at Chicago in 1920. At his graduation he held the rank of Brevet Lieutenant in the National Guard of Illinois, issued by Gov. Frank O. Lowden. Frank is now a student of the University of Missoula. He spents his vacations on the ranch in Centennial Valley and is greatly interested in that line of work.

Clyde E. Lewis came to Montana at the age of seventeen with an engineering party, and for over twenty years his work and study have been in irrigation engineering, and at the age of thirty-eight he has charge of one of the Government's big irrigation projects, that of the Crow Irrigation project.

Mr. Lewis was born at Pitkin, Gunnison County, Colorado, September 15, 1882. His father, John Lewis, was born in Wales May 7, 1852, and twelve years later, in 1864, accompanied his parents to America. The family home was established at Flint, Michigan, and in 1878 John Lewis came West and located at Leadville, Colorado, later at Pitkin, being a miner in both places. In 1884, leaving Pitkin, he moved to Montrose, where he became connected with irrigation and for several years was a ditch engineer for the Travellers Insurance Company in Colorado. He continued in this work until 1912, when he located at Hardin, Montana, where he is engaged in farming. John Lewis married Addie L. Hart, who was born at Camden, Oneida County, New York, in 1856, member of an old and prominent rural family of that section of New York. The children of John Lewis and wife are: Edith, wife of E. A. Cornwall, of Forsyth, Montana; Clyde E.; Arthur D., associated with his brother in engineering work at the Crow Agency; Kenneth A., a bank employe at Los Angeles; and Donald J., a student of architecture in the University of Michigan.

Clyde E. Lewis spent most of his early youth at Montrose, Colorado. As a boy he became interested in the practical and scientific aspects of irrigation engineering, and spent much of the time when not in school following his father. He attended the public schools of Montrose, and continued to be a student for a number of years after coming to Montana. He took an engineering course at the University in Bozeman, and also courses in irrigation and mechanical engineering in the International Correspondence School of Scranton, with which he earned a diploma.

The chief engineer of the party with which he came to Montana was W. B. Hill, though the engineer in chief was W. H. Graves. The work under construction at that time was the Big Horn Canal. Mr. Lewis did his first work for the Government on that canal. He has had a progressive career of increasing responsibilities, and in 1912 became project engineer on the Crow Reservation. He has had a hand in the construction of two different units, that of Upper Little Horn Ditch No. 2 and the Reno Ditch. These units, 80 per cent completed, now supply water to about 7,500 acres of land under cultivation. Improvement and maintenance of various units comprise a large part of the program of work, and include the Forty-mile Ditch, Lodgegrass ditches Nos. 1 and 2, the Reno Ditch, the Agency Ditch, Big Horn Canal, Soap Creek Ditch, Pryor Creek, Lost Creek and Coburn Ditch, and also the Government's interests in Two Leggins Ditch. A number of small individual ditches scattered over the reservation come in for a share of the time of the Agency irrigation force for maintenance, and the area supplied with water by the various projects mentioned total about 74,000 acres.

Mr. Lewis loves his work and profession, and has found in it all the diversion he needs. He has been a Mason since 1918, being affiliated with St. John Lodge No. 92, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Hardin. At Columbus, Montana, May 25, 1905, he married Miss Marie B. Ross, daughter of Hector and Mary Ross. Her father was born in Scotland but was married in the United States and was miller of the Crow Agency when he died. Her mother is now living at Hardin, Montana. Mrs. Lewis' brother, Robert P. Ross, is with the Stockman's National Bank of Hardin. Three daughters have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Lewis: Vivian, Evelyn and Helen.

THOMAS PENSON is a cattle ranchman on the Rosebud and the proprietor of the Big Bend Ranch, which is located in Big Horn County, seven miles south of Kirby and about twenty-two miles down the Rosebud from Montana's southern boundary line. This ranch is famous as the site of the battle of the Rosebud, which was fought by General Crooks' regulars a few weeks before the Custer massacre, and in the engagement the general's troops were outnumbered and were forced to retreat.

Mr. Penson was born at Mason City, Iowa, February 2, 1873, a son of Charles and Betsy (Wainright) Penson, both of whom were born near London, England. The mother died in 1898, but the father is still living, and has for many years been connected with the water department of Mason City, Iowa. He has spent the greater part of his life in that Iowa town, for he settled there immediately after landing in America. In their family were the following children: George, also of Mason City; Libbie, the wife of Fred Venable and a resident of Oscaloosa, Iowa; Thomas, the Montana ranchman and farmer; and Mrs. Mattie Burrows, whose home is in Des Moines, Iowa.

After completing his training in the public schools of Mason City, Thomas Penson worked for a time in a butcher shop and for a cattle feeder, and thus obtained some knowledge of the cattle business before he embarked so extensively in the enterprise in Montana. He formed the idea of becoming a resident of this state as the result of seeing a Northern Pacific map of the commonwealth hanging in the butcher shop in Mason City where he was employed, and he worked on with the plan of eventually making the state his home. It was on the 23d of April, 1893, that he arrived at Miles City by rail, spending his first night there at the old McQueen House. He was accompanied on the journey by a youthful companion of about his own age, and both hired to the representative of the old "OD" ranch, who were attending a stockman's meeting at Miles City at the time. Six years were spent by Mr. Penson as a cow puncher with the old "OD" ranch, now a part of the Cheyenne Reservation on the Rosebud, but during all this long service he kept his eye on his earnings, and for three years scarcely left the place. He eventually invested a part of the money thus saved in a quarter section of his present holdings. It was an unimproved tract save for a log house, which he occupied as his bachelor quarters and also used as a family shelter after his marriage.

Mr. Penson's first efforts in the stock business was with a bunch of Southern cows brought from Texas by George Kirby, which were the old Texas long-horns of the early days. Mr. Penson turned them loose on the range under the brand "T bar P," and for years at the roundups he branded the calves, and in the fall the entire bunch was gathered together and the calves were weaned and the cows were turned back on the range to forage through the winter months. The breeding of this kind of cattle into blooded White Faces and the production of better animals necessitates better care of the stock and the growing of feed for their use during the winters. So after years of constant care in breeding the Rosebud locality is stocked with a high grade of White Face animals, as good as are produced in any other region of the state.

Mr. Penson began farming with a quarter section of land, which he early seeded to alfalfa. He has continued this mode of farming until practically all his available agricultural land is in hay. Although he puts up hundreds of tons of hay it is all fed to his own stock, which are marketed at Omaha and Chicago. The Big Bend Ranch, so named because it lies at the bend of the Rosebud, now covers an area of 1,250 acres, fenced and cross-fenced and watered by ample wells of good water. The Big Bend has been the home of Mr. Penson since 1899, and here he has achieved his success and won for himself a place among the leading cattlemen and farmers of the region.

At Sheridan, Wyoming, he married Miss Mabel Barton. She came to Montana in 1898 to be with her sister, Mrs. Ferguson, and she was married to Mr. Penson on the 9th of April, 1900. Her parents lived at Irvington, Illinois, where she was born July 19, 1875, a daughter of Leicester Charles and Francelia (Ford) Barton. The father was born in Sussex County, New Jersey, in 1836, and died January 28, 1916. He was a son of Samuel V. and Sarah (Newman) Barton. In 1858 he went to Southern Illinois, and he took part in the breaking up of some of that prairie country with ox teams. His farm was located less than three miles from Irvington, and he spent thirty-five years of his active life there. Mrs. Barton, who was a Miss Hollander before her marriage, died August 2, 1918. They were married in 1871, and became the parents of the following children: Lena, the wife of W. J. Ferguson, of Big Horn County, Montana; Samuel V., of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; Mabel, now Mrs. Penson; George, whose home is in Nashville, Illinois; Bertha, who died as Mrs. Claude C. Rugg, of the Rosebud community; and Clara, who has recently come to Montana and has acquired a homestead on the Rosebud. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Penson, namely: Charles V., Howard Harold (who died in childhood), Francelia Marie, Gregg V., Clara and Marjorie Leona.

Mr. Penson has always taken a citizen's interest in political matters, and he cast his first vote in Montana. He generally attends the local county conventions of his party, and on national issues upholds the principles of republicanism. During sixteen years he has given efficient service to his school board.

Claude Cyrus Rugg. The ranch of Claude Cyrus Rugg lies along the Rosebud, and there he is extensively engaged as a ranchman and farmer. He has been identified with the interests of Montana since 1902, when he established his home where it now is, purchasing the old George W. Kirby ranch. It was at that time a tract of 160 acres, improved with a cabin which could scarcely be called a dwelling, and his log barn was the pioneer one of the locality. With the passing of the years and with the success that has come to him as a Montana rancher he has replaced his first primitive dwelling place with a modern home of eight rooms, and the old barn which he first used has given place to a modern basement structure with granaries and mow room for many tons of hay. The dimensions of the ranch has also grown apace with its other improvements and now comprises 2,000 acres of deeded land, where cattle has constituted the main industry, but where farming has also been carried on as an aid to his feed production.

Mr. Rugg traces descent to the New England states, and his grandfather, Giles Rugg, was a sturdy New England farmer, and lived to be almost ninety years of age. His wife, who was before marriage a Miss Mears, recently died in Los Angeles, California, at the age of eighty-seven. Of their children Joseph E. was the first born, and the others are Charles E., of Cheyenne, Wyoming, Mrs. Edward McGee, of Los Angeles, and Mrs. Eva Lane, who died in Fairfax, Vermont.

Joseph E. Rugg was born in the Village of Fairfax, Vermont, but when a young man he left New England and journeyed west as far as Des Moines, Iowa, where he spent the winter, being too short of funds to continue further. But in the following spring he went on to Cheyenne, Wyoming, and engaged in the sheep business, but the first winter in that industry netted him a loss of 5,000 head and one herder, and he then gave up the sheep business and secured a bunch of cattle. He followed ranching on Horse Creek, using first the brand "RUG" but later inaugurated the "J bar O," a brand which descended to his son on the Rosebud. In time the senior Mr. Rugg abandoned ranching and engaged in the lumber business at Lusk, Wyoming, then at Douglas and still later in Boise City, Idaho, but he is now living in Chicago. His political affiliations are with the republican party.

Joseph E. Rugg married Ella Whitcomb, who was also a member of a New England family, and was born at Essex Center, Vermont. Claude C. Rugg is the only child of that union, and he was born at Cheyenne, Wyoming, August 24, 1881. His birth occurred while his parents were living on their ranch, but shortly afterward removal was made to Lusk and then to Douglas, where the son attended the public schools, and later was a student in the military school at Portland, Oregon. Several years before reaching his majority he began ranching as a cowboy, spending his summers on the range and remaining at home during the winter months. His first employer after he arrived in Montana was United States Senator J. B. Kendrick, on whose ranch, the "OW," Mr. Rugg spent one year, and from that service he came to the Rosebud and engaged in ranching for himself. He embarked in the business with a bunch of steers, and for a time extended his industry over the open range, but gradually the settlers have been coming in and curtailing the range until the stockman must needs look to his own lands for pasture. But with the diminishing of his stock range Mr. Rugg has dealt more extensively in better breeds of cattle, handling the Herefords, headed by males from Ed Dana's White Faces of the "2ABar" at Parkman, Montana. During many years he has been a shipper to the Omaha market, and during the years in which he has been engaged in the industry his ranch has had the good fortune to produce stock without an epidemic of a serious character.

Mr. Rugg was unmarried when he settled in the valley of the Rosebud, and for several years he not only did his ranch work but also performed the work of the home. On the 1st of June, 1915, he married Miss Malinda Gravez, a daughter of Adolph Gravez, of Perry County, Indiana, where Mrs. Rugg was born. She came to Montana in 1911 and engaged in teaching near Kirby, and it was there she first met Mr. Rugg. She subsequently taught two years at Kalispel before her marriage. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Rugg, Mary Josephine, three years of age, William Harold, a little lad of two, and Ella Marjorie, now one year old.

Mr. Rugg's connection with community affairs is well known, and for some years he was one of the school trustees of the Kirby district. He has also served as precinct chairman of the republican party, and while living in Rosebud County he was appointed a delegate to a county convention at Forsyth. His fraternal relations connect him with St. Johns Lodge No. 92, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and with Algeria Shrine at Helena. He is also a member of the Elks fraternity at Sheridan, Wyoming, Lodge No. 520.

Mark I. Draper of Custer has known Montana for over thirty-five years, largely through the eyes and experience of a stockman and rancher. His arduous activities gave him the affluence which he now enjoys. His home is one of the historic spots in the Pease Bottom. While the achievements of his life make an interesting record, it is possible to claim for Mrs. Draper many of the unusual experiences such as few living Montana women have enjoyed.

Mr. Draper was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, April 4, 1862, son of George W. and Mary (Ryan) Draper. His father was a native of Hagerstown, Maryland, while his mother was born in County Cork, Ireland, and as a girl made the voyage across the Atlantic, being six weeks on a sailing vessel. She was married soon after she reached the United States at Baltimore. After their marriage in 1836 they left the old Draper home at Clear Spring, Maryland, and went to Walnut Hill near Cincinnati, where all their children were born. George W. Draper was an Ohio farmer, but right after the close of the Civil war made another stage in his westward journey to Leavenworth, Kansas. No railroad had yet reached the Missouri River at Leavenworth, and the family traveled by steamboat from Cincinnati. George W. Draper died at Leavenworth in 1900, being survived by his widow about two years. Of their eleven children nine grew to mature years, Mark being the youngest. Those still living are Kate, widow of Alexander Garden of Kansas City, Missouri; Lizzie, Mrs. D. T. Parker of Kansas City; Mrs. Etta M. Billings of Enid, Oklahoma; Annie D., wife of George C. Richardson of Kansas City; and Mark I.

Mark I. Draper acquired his early education in Leavenworth and soon after reaching his majority he embraced an opportunity to get into the cattle industry. From Leavenworth he went South to Texas, and at Albany in that state bought some 600 cattle, which he put with the holdings of the Ohio Cattle Company, and assisted in driving the entire herd of 3,000 head from Albany, Texas, up over the northern trails to Montana. This drive required about five months, and the stock was turned loose on the Musselshell River September 4, 1884. Mr. Draper ranged these cattle on the open domain until 1892. During the first winter he built the first ranch house in what is now the Cat Creek oil field. His own livestock was run under the brand of "VD" and he shipped the surplus from Custer to Chicago markets.

On leaving the Musselshell he changed his location to Pease Bottom. The Draper ranch is located on the site of old Fort Pease. Mrs. Draper owned this site, originally 160 acres of railroad land which she had contracted for. When she and Mr. Draper married this became the ranch headquarters. This historic tract is in Section 35, Township 6 North, Range 34 East. Since then the Drapers have acquired the entire Section 35, and also have hill lands embracing many hundreds of acres. The ranch became an agricultural proposition as well as grazing ground, and besides cattle they have been in the sheep industry and have bred Percheron horses. From the business activities as well as the history associated with the spot the Draper ranch has become one of the noted places of the Bottom.

It was in this valley of the Yellowstone country that Major Pease and his associates started a colony in July, 1875. After a turbulent existence and after several of the members had been killed, the survivors were driven back into the Gallatin Valley. One of the number killed was Mr. Edwards, who was slain at the mouth of what is now Edward's Coulee where it enters the valley, while in company with Paul McCormick who succeeded in making his escape. A tablet appropriately inscribed and provided by the Montana Historical Society has been erected on the spot where he fell, and the same society has located an appropriate iron monument on the site of old Fort Pease, this monument being on the lawn of the Draper home.

Mr. Draper continued for twenty-three years in the active and strenuous work of stock ranching. In 1907 he sold the stock, rented the ranch, and with Mrs. Draper started to see something of the United States. They spent a year in Oregon, another year in the noted resorts of California, two winters in Kansas City, and after a brief stay in Florida went on to Cuba and for a year were at Camague. Returning to the United States they were in New Orleans, and soon afterward bought two plantations aggregating 825 acres near Baton Rouge, Louisiana. Here they did farming on a large scale, growing oats, corn and hay and introduced oats into that section. This land was sold the following year and returning to Montana they have since been residents of Custer. In addition to the Pease Bottom ranch they own two ranches near Custer, irrigated valley lands devoted to sugar beets, a new and coming crop of this region. Mr. Draper also helped organize and is a stockholder in the Custer State Bank.

Mr. Draper grew up in a democratic household, and has been a member of that party, though he cast his first presidential vote for Colonel Roosevelt in 1904. He was reared a Catholic and is a member of the Knights of Columbus.

Mr. Draper had been in Montana about eight years when on January 4, 1892, he married Mrs. Ida Woolfolk. She came into Montana in 1882, and is one of the few Montana women now living who had the experience of traveling by boat to different river points in the early '80s. Navigation of the Big Horn and Yellowstone was possible before the advent of the railroads and the Missouri River was regarded as the great thoroughfare after the breakup of the ice in spring. The coming of mail and supplies up the Big Muddy was the great event of the year to those who depended upon this primitive means of transportation. Mrs. Draper went up that river as far as the head of navigation at Fort Benton, ascended the Big Horn to old Fort Custer and the Yellowstone to old Colson, now Billings, as a passenger on a little flat-bottomed craft that served the purpose of a steamboat.

She came to Montana as the wife of Capt. C. P. Woolfolk, a noted character and steamboat man on the Missouri, Yellowstone and Big Horn rivers. Mrs. Draper was born in Lewis County, Kentucky, March 1, 1858, daughter of Charles and Uella (Drennan) Chunn. Her father was a native of Virginia and her mother of Kentucky. The Chunn family left Kentucky on the first trip of the steamer James K. Turner up the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, landing in Carroll County, Missouri. Her parents lived the rest of their lives at Carrollton where her mother died in 1872 and her father in 1914. Her father was a Missouri farmer but subsequently engaged in the drug business at Carrollton. He had been a merchant in Concord, Ohio, during the Civil war spending his last days at Carrollton, Missouri. Mrs. Draper was reared and educated at Carrollton, and married Captain Woolfolk there. Mrs. Draper has a sister, Mrs. Dean Loos, of Seattle, Washington, and her brother John D. died in St. Louis. Mrs. Draper by her first marriage has two children. Dora is the wife of D. T. Dunlop of Gotebo, Oklahoma, and is the mother of two children, Agnes and Mark. Early Draper, who took his stepfather's name, is a resident of Custer, and by his marriage to Edna Waddell has four children, George, Mark, Gene and Berl.

FRANK A. MAXHAM. Among the settlers of the Rosebud community and the ranchmen of Big Horn County is prominently numbered Frank A. Maxham, who has spent many years of his life in Montana and has aided in its advancement and upbuilding. His ranch lies in the locality of Kirby, and although he has paid taxes in three counties he has never changed the place of his residence, the boundaries of the counties instead having changed. He arrived in Montana in April, 1884, and his first summer here was spent on Tongue River, in the employ of a sheep man, James Sharp, and when his ranch was purchased by Peter Wylie Mr. Maxham remained on the place and continued in Mr. Wylie's employ. In 1885 he entered the Government service in the Cheyenne Reservation, having charge of the Indian beef cattle, but a year later, in 1886, he came up the Rosebud and secured his ranch, locating upon the public domain, where he began his career as a ranchman and awaited the Government's pleasure to survey and open the land for settlement. He entered a quarter section and placed the first improvements on the land, and here he has spent the years which have since come and gone, and has become well known as a stockman. His place has the distinction of being the only ranch from the mouth of the Rosebud which has never changed ownership.

Frank A. Maxham was born in Windsor County, Vermont, December 20, 1858. and he remained in that region until twenty years of age, when he left it, never to be again identified with it and never to return to it save but on one occasion. His father was Addison E. Maxham, who was born near the county seat town of Woodstock, Vermont. He followed various occupations during his life time, having sold monuments and dealt in agricultural machinery, and also for a time was engaged in the life insurance business. He passed away in his native locality in 1877, when forty-nine years of age, and his wife, who was before marriage Lizzie Kibling, died in 1870. Their children were: Frank A., the Montana ranchman; Fred, who died in Pennsylvania; Ned W., whose home is still in Vermont; and Ben B., of Littletown, New Hampshire.

Frank A. Maxham left his New England home for the middle west in 1878, and his first stopping place was Janesville, Wisconsin, where he soon found work as a farm hand. The locality at that time was new western country, where the Eastern lad found conditions very different from those in which he had been reared. He was given $18.00 a month for his farm work, a considerable advance over the farm wage he had received in Vermont two years previously, when $10.00 cash or $12.50 in farm produce was the prevailing wage paid. From Wisconsin Mr. Maxham continued his westward journey on to the Jim River country of South Dakota, where he worked as a ranch hand by the month. He arrived in that locality in 1881 and remained there but a short time, going on then to the Black Hills, where he spent a year in placer mining, however without success.

Deciding then to leave that country for Montana, he sent home for a loan of $50.00 with which to make the journey, but before he reached Miles City he had little of the money left, for he assisted two companions to make the journey. They crossed over by the "burro route" and reached Miles City with two of these animals, worth $10.00 apiece.

When Mr. Maxham came to his present locality he was part owner with Frank Lowrey in a wagon, team and harness, two old ponies and about $35.00 worth of food. The young men lived together and improved the Lowrey claim first. Then Mr. Maxham sold his interest to his partner and moved to his own claim. He inaugurated his cattle interests by purchasing twenty head of mixed cattle for $200, and he turned them loose here on the range under the "FM" brand. He carried on the business by breeding and raising young stock, and in the zenith of his career as a stock man he ran as high as 200 head, making a practice of feeding his cattle during the winter months, a custom contrary to that of the other cattle men of the country. By successive additions of land under the entry acts he also expanded the boundaries of his ranch to contain 650 acres, and his farming activities have been largely devoted to the raising of hay. A threshing machine has visited his farm to shell out his grain but three times during all the years of his residence here on the Rosebud.

Mr. Maxham's first home was the usual log cabin of that early day in Montana. Its dimensions were 14 by 18 feet, with a lean-to kitchen, and he lived a bachelor's life there for ten years and carried on his stock industry. In 1898 the pioneer log cabin was replaced by his present frame residence of six rooms. Among the many other improvements which he has made on his ranch is his barn, a stone structure 28 by 78 feet, with mow room for twenty-five tons of hay. It is a combination horse and cow barn, and is one of the best along the creek. Granaries, machine sheds and stock shelters have also been built, and the Maxham ranch has been a busy place since the time when the range was open and the stock could come and go at will.

Mr. Maxham married at Sheridan, Wyoming, December 13, 1893, Sophia C. Long, who has the distinction of being the oldest white person along the Rosebud born within the boundaries of Montana. Her birth occurred at Missoula January 24, 1877, and she is a daughter of John J. and Joanna (Childs) Long. The father came to Montana from Pennsylvania soon after the close of the Civil war. He was a Union soldier from Pennsylvania during that conflict, and was an officer in his company. For some time after locating in Montana he followed mining in the vicinity of Bannock, but subsequently secured a ranch south of Missoula and developed a farm there. He owned the tract of land on which the University of Montana now stands. A few years before his death he lost his eyesight as a result of a sunstroke, and he passed away in March, 1889, but he is still survived by his widow, who now resides in Seattle, Washington. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Long were as follows: Maggie, the wife of Ernest Edmunds, of Seattle; John L., who is a railroad engineer with home at St. Regis, Montana; Sophia C., who became the wife of Mr. Maxham; Mrs. Mary Smith, whose home is in Sheridan, Wyoming; and Richard C., a ranchman of the Rosebud Valley. Mrs. Maxham received a liberal educational training in the public schools of Missoula, and supplemented this training by a course in the Ada, Ohio, Normal College. In the Maxham home were born two children. The elder, Bertha Viva, was born October 9, 1894, and is now the wife of Clifford A. Randall, of Birney, Montana. They have one son, Frank Walter Randall, born July 30, 1918. The only son of Mr. and Mrs. Maxham, Richard, was born May 18, 1896, and died on the 22d of September, 1898.

When Mr. Maxham reached the age of maturity he exercised his right of franchise with the republican party, and he remained in its ranks until 1916. Since then he has been an independent in his political affiliations. Mrs. Maxham was the first woman to cast a vote in her precinct after the ballot was given to the women of the state. Her first presidential vote was given to Woodrow Wilson in 1916.

Abner R. Farnum. While those who go into a region in advance of the army of settlers certain to come after a way is blazed have the advantage of a choice of location and securing land at a very low figure, they earn everything they obtain because of the privations and hard work inseparable from such an experience. Many of the pioneers of Montana faced other difficulties because of the scarcity of water and the lack of proper transportation facilities which lost to these hardy settlers many thousands of dollars before lands were irrigated and railroads had been built. The modern ranchman has no idea of what he owes to the efforts of these earlier laborers in the agricultural field, but to such men as Abner R. Farnum on Cottonwood Creek in Custer County they are very real, for he participated in them, and brought his present valuable property of 2,800 acres to its present condition through his own industry and foresight.

Abner R. Farnum is proud that he can trace his ancestry back to hardy Welsh stock, his progenitors having come from Wales some time prior to the American Revolution and sought better conditions in the New England colonies, locating in New Hampshire and Vermont. The Farnum family became very numerous in the vicinity of Concord, Vermont, and representatives of this honored name entered all of the professions and many of the callings, and are to be found all over the country. The great-grandfather Farnum served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and the grandfather, Abner Farnum, was a farmer and lumberman, who had six sons and three daughters. His son Hiram Farnum was the father of Abner R. Farnum, whose name heads this review, and he was born in New Hampshire, where he developed valuable interests both as a lumberman and farmer. He married Lucretia Ramsdell, a daughter of a Vermont farmer, and their children to reach maturity were as follows: Lucretia, who died in young womanhood; Abner R.; and Joseph E., who is a resident of Miles City, Montana.

Abner R. Farnum was born at Concord, New Hampshire, August 13, 1850, and was there reared. He was given the advantage of an excellent public school education, which was supplemented with attendance at Colby Academy. After completing this training he went into the lumber regions of the White Mountains and helped to get out millions of feet of pine and hemlock logs to the saw-mills. The last four years he spent in New Hampshire he was engaged in a milk business at Concord. Mr. Farnum was ambitious and the narrow confines of a New England village irked him, so with the optimism of youth he severed his business ties and started out for the West, arriving in Custer County, Montana, in April, 1883. He stopped on the Tongue River, in the vicinity of Garland, and looked after two bunches of cattle driven into Montana from Oregon by the Concord Cattle Company, and while wintering there sought a permanent location for the company's ranch, finding one to his satisfaction on Mizpah Creek, and located at its mouth in 1884. This ranch is now owned by Frank Murphy. For three years he remained there as a squatter, and then, still acting as manager for his company, moved to Cottonwood Creek, eight miles above its mouth, bringing to it the stock he was holding. At that time the range was open all over this region and nothing interfered with the cattle industry until the building of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad opened up the land for settlers and the old grazing days were over. Realizing that he could no longer carry on his business in the old manner, Mr. Farnum sensibly entered his own homestead, on which he still resides and to which he later added two sections of railroad land and he also leases other land, so that he has a large amount of property under his control. The little log shelter he erected on his homestead still stands, but it is almost hidden by the additions and improvements. As they were needed Mr. Farnum has erected barns, cattle sheds, granaries and garage, and he has built some five miles of fencing. He first handled high grade Durham cattle, but subsequently brought in for his company from Clayton, New Mexico, cattle of the Texas breed, which were grazed and prepared for market and shipped from Miles City. All these years he has been running under the brand "3-2-Bar" and his ranch is known as the "E-2." Of recent years his cattle industry has been curtailed, as has that of every cattleman, by the settling up of the country, but he has turned his attention to other lines of agriculture. For a dozen years he operated a sheep ranch at Knowlton, Montana, but during the greater portion of this period the condition of the market was such that neither mutton or wool brought a price which repaid his expenditure, in fact he lost money to the extent of $3,000 on his flock until finally he was able to dispose of his holdings at a slight profit, which he invested in his cattle industry. Until 1907 he continued to act as manager for the old Concord Cattle Company, but during that year he bought the remnant of the business, much impaired by the opening up of the public domain to settlers, and this concern went out of existence.

On February 21, 1871, Mr. Farnum was married at Concord, New Hampshire, to Mary P. Dow, a daughter of Horace P. Dow, her two sisters being Mrs. Clara Stevens of Ayers Village, Massachusetts, and Mrs. Edla Bean of Concord, New Hampshire. Mr. and Mrs. Farnum have the following children: Hiram C., a ranchman on Cottonwood Creek and stock inspector for Custer County, married Mary L. Johnson, and they have three children, Clayton, Abner and Esther; Edla married Reginald Billing, of Van Norman, Montana, a ranchman, and has six children, namely: Howard, Edith, Roswell, Curtis, Billie and Ruth; Edith May is the wife of John G. Milroy, a ranchman on Cottonwood Creek; and Glen B. was born in Custer County, Montana, May 22, 1892, married Elizabeth Bircher, has a son, named Glen Abner, and is engaged in ranching. As will be noticed, the sons are all ranchmen, and they are practical cattlemen, their father having started them as "cow punchers" when only ten years of age, and taught them every detail of what he expected would be their life work. At the same time he did not neglect their minds while developing their bodies, but sent them all to school at Miles City, the schools in his neighborhood being then in a primitive state. In order that the children of the present generation might be educated at home he has exerted himself in their behalf and Cottonwood district now has excellent schools as a result. Mr. Farnum is one of the old school republicans, and has never failed to cast his vote for the presidential candidate since the time he cast his first one for General Grant in 1872. His fraternal connections are with the Knights of Pythias and Elks, and he is past chancellor of the former. Growing with his section, Mr. Farnum is typical of the West in its best phase. He has been engaged in the two lines of industry which have so developed Montana, cattle and sheep raising, and has merged them into the more modern occupation of ranching, and in all of these callings has always been a hard worker and efficient man. Personally he is genial and sympathetic, and wherever he goes makes friends, for he has the qualities which win confidence and affection and inspire respect.

GEORGE W. MYERS. The fabric of the men and women who have made the many colored tapestry of our state history is woven more often than not from good old Revolutionary stock. Of such sturdy and dependable stuff is George W. Myers, the register of the United States land office at Miles City.

The great-grandfather, William Paul, of Maryland, died of wounds received in the Revolutionary war. Another, Robert Myers, enlisted from Kent County, Maryland, though very young, and served during the Revolutionary war. Later having married Polly Paul, daughter of William Paul and Keturah Eaglyn, he moved over the "Wilderness Trail" to Kentucky. Their eight stalwart sons and two daughters became well-known and respected citizens of Indiana, Missouri, California and Kansas.

Ephraim Myers, their eighth son, through his own efforts acquired a collegiate training, was admitted to the bar and in early manhood moved from Kentucky to Illinois, thence to Missouri. Very active in politics, he represented his district several times in the Assembly and was a member of that body when General Price and Governor Jackson endeavored to take Missouri out of the Union. This act he vehemently opposed, although General Price had been his life-long friend.

His wife, Nancy Williams, was a direct descendant from Colonel Williams. They had five sons and five daughters, of whom Alfred, Ben and Maria, with their children, are also identified with the history of Montana.

Ephraim Myers died at the age of eighty-six, and his funeral was the epitome of the life of an active and well beloved man. It was under the auspices of the Masons, in which he had reached the highest degree, and over two miles long, and in it could be seen every condition of life, every shade of color and every religious belief represented in that state.

George W. Myers, the eighth child of Judge Ephraim Myers and Nancy Williams, was born on his father's plantation near St. Joseph, Missouri, March 1, 1851. He was admitted to the bar in 1874 in Missouri, and for a time practiced in Andrew County, but in May, 1879, being convinced that in the territory of Montana he could find the opening for which as an ambitious young man he was looking, he came to Bozeman, Montana, from Ogden, Utah, by stage. It had been his intention to engage in the practice of law in Bozeman, but discovering upon his arrival that there was a better opening for a stockman than a professional man, for a year he bought and sold stock in partnership with a Mr. Martin. Later his brother joined him and the firm of Myers Brothers was organized and Mr. Myers came to Miles City as the representative of the firm.

Upon his arrival at Miles City Mr. Myers called upon the acting commissary at Fort Keogh, as his firm had been awarded the contract for keeping this fourteen company post supplied with cattle for beef. General Miles was then in command at Fort Keogh, and a few months later completed the conquest of the Indians in this region.

At the time Mr. Myers reached Miles City, June 28, 1880, the place was a log and tent town of a few thousand people. His "pioneer" herd of cattle was run on Pumpkin Creek and Tongue River, in a county absolutely innocent of fence and almost of people for many years. The firm of Myers Brothers handled thousands of cattle, and besides those required for the military post, shipped many herds East. They were the first to ship Montana cattle over the Northern Pacific Railroad. The first two train loads were driven from the Shields River ranches across Montana to the railroad at Mandan, Dakota, and ferried across the river. They were grazed along the way and reached the railroad as fat as cornfed animals. They were shipped to the commission firm of Adams Burke.

While giving considerable attention to his cattle interests Mr. Myers very soon opened a law office in Miles City, and has since been engaged in general practice. In capital crimes he always was for the defense and took part in the trial of a score of murder cases. He was chief counsel for the defense of Joe Hurst, charged and convicted of the killing of Sheriff-elect Kavanaugh, and although his efforts toward modification of the jury findings were unremitting and the case was carried to the highest authority, nothing was accomplished and Hurst paid the penalty. Associated with Mr. Myers in the case was C. R. Middleton.

One of the most noted civil cases Mr. Myers fought through the courts was that entitled "Bender vs. Northern Pacific Railroad Company." The company held a patent for five years to the land Bender claimed. He fought them on and off for twenty years, and under the rulings of the Court of Appeals in the Nelson case he believed he could win a title in the suit, and it was brought by Mr. Myers. Bender was defeated in the local court, but in the higher court the railroad company submitted voluntary and arranged a compromise with Bender, relinquished title to the land, paid him damages and retired without prejudice.

Another hard-fought case which Mr. Myers defended was that of "Montana vs. Bailey." Bailey was charged with murder, was convicted and his counsel fought the case for two years, and the date for his execution was twice set, but upon the discovery of new evidence the court granted another trial to be held in Dawson County. A jury could not be found competent to try the case, and it was transferred to Miles City and an acquittal was secured.

Still another case was that of the State of Montana against Harpster and others, which Mr. Myers fought alone and secured an acquittal for his client from the charge of stealing freight from the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. At the crucial point the failure of the state to identify beyond question a manila rope served to convince the jury that the defendant was not guilty.

Mr. Myers began to take an active part in Montana politics from the time he crossed the Yellowstone River, which was regarded of such value that during Cleveland's administration he was appointed register of the Miles City land office, then the largest and the most important in the United States. It comprised the vast scope of territory extending east of Helena to the Dakotas, and from Canada to Wyoming. Mr. Myers held the office during the administration of President Cleveland and was reappointed to the same office by President Wilson, beginning his second term in May, 1915, and still holding this very important position with the Government. Now the territory of this local office is much smaller, but the office is the largest in the United States in point of business, exceeding others by about 800 entries a year.

In this region thousands of soldiers of the great war are seeking homes. Several oil fields are becoming productive, and as a result the work of the register of the land office is really burdensome. None but he and his close associates know what it means to handle expeditiously and effectively the 800 to 1,200 signatures received daily.

Mr. Myers is one of the most capable men serving the Government in this capacity, as he, as one of the old settlers of the state, knows conditions and values and not only attends to the duties of his office but gives expert advice to those seeking to found homes. There are few more enthusiastic supporters of the democratic principles than he, and he has attended almost every state convention of Montana since he arrived, and was alternate to the Chicago convention which nominated William Jennings Bryan for President. He was at the national convention of his party held at Kansas City, Missouri, but only as a spectator.

George W. Myers was united in marriage September 6, 1877, with Miss Mary E. Bowman, a daughter of Frank and Barbara Frances (Wood) Bowman, both descendants of Colonial families and fighters in the Revolutionary war.

Mr. and Mrs. Myers have two daughters. Mildred G. is the wife of Harry F. Schlosser, of Knowlton, Montana. They have three sons, Weyand Myers Schlosser, Fredericks G. Schlosser and John Bowman Schlosser. Alma May has been final proof clerk for several years in the local United States land office. Alfred, a son, died in infancy. Mr. Myers is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Elk Lodges.

ALBA M. VANNETT. It is proper to judge of a man's life by the estimation in which he is held by his fellow citizens. They see him at his work, in his family circle, hear his views on public questions, observe the operation of his code of morals, witness how he conducts himself in all the relations of society and civilization and are therefore competent to judge of his merits and demerits. It is not too much to say that no family in Powder River County holds a higher position in the esteem of the people than that of Alba M. Vannett, who has been identified with Montana since 1884. The members of this well known family have conducted themselves honorably in all the relations of life, their duty being well performed whether in private or public life. Industry and integrity have been the keynotes of their actions and the secret of the success which has attended their efforts.

Alba M. Vannett was born in Calhoun County, Michigan, on July 14, 1864, and is the son of Cicero and Louisa (Bushnell) Vannett. Cicero Vannett was a native of Ohio. He became a carpenter by trade, later moving to Calhoun County, Michigan, where his remaining years were passed, his death occurring in 1876. He was survived a number of years by his widow, who died near Alzada, Montana, in 1910. Alba M. was the only child born to that union. He was reared in Calhoun County and secured his education in the public schools of that community. When about eighteen years old Mr. Vannett went to Sac County, Iowa, where he was employed in a brick yard and on a farm. He had heard of the splendid opportunities in the great Treasure State for the man of ambition and energy, and in 1884 he came to this state, stopping first at Miles City, where he obtained employment on a dairy farm at a wage of $40.00 a month, which was almost double what he had earned in Iowa. He worked for others for several years, driving stage in winter on the Miles City and Spearfish trail and putting up hay or working for ranchmen in summer. In the early '90s Mr. Vannett engaged in business on his own account, starting with a few horses, in partnership with his stepfather, James Thomas. A few years later they exchanged the horses for cattle and continued to range the stock along Thompson Creek. About the time of his marriage he dissolved this partnership and continued the cattle business himself. Later he removed to "the Ridge" and a few months later went over into Wyoming, sold his cattle and engaged in the sheep business. A year later he sold out that business and spent the winter in the gold mines on Bald Mountain in the Black Hills. In the spring of 1899 he returned to Montana, settling on East Fork of the Little Powder River, where he leased a band of sheep and for three years conducted the business profitably. During the following few years he divided his attention between cattle and sheep, the latter proving profitable, but the former not so. He then moved over into the Pilgrims Creek Valley, bringing along a few head of horses. A little later he bought ninety head of cattle and branded them "AV," which is still the evidence of his ownership of stock.

Mr. Vannett entered his homestead and a desert claim on East Fork, which he proved up and improved. In Pilgrim Creek Valley Mrs. Vannett entered desert land, and the family home is located on it. The residence is one of the most attractive homes in all this neighborhood. It was erected in 1913, comprises eight rooms, and is comfortably and conveniently arranged and tastefully furnished. Fine flowing water is at the door and the homestead improvements are of a character that indicate the owner to be a man of good judgment and common sense. In addition to stock raising Mr. Vannett also does some farming, raising corn and wheat, and also alfalfa, the latter especially proving a splendid crop, being irrigated from a reservoir which Mr. Vannett has constructed.

On February 21, 1895, at Belle Fourche, Mr. Van-nett was married to Christine Johnstone. She was born at Moingona, Boone County, Iowa, November 1, 1876, daughter of Robert and Janet Johnstone. She was fourteen years four months old when her father died. In 1894 her mother was married to Mr. George Whitney, and eleven months later Miss Christine became the bride of Mr. Vannett. Mr. and Mrs. Vannett had the following children: Howard on the ranch with his father enlisted in the army during the World war, spending nine months in France and a part of the time with the Army of Occupation; he escaped wounds and capture and was discharged from Hospital Corps No. 29 in July, 1919. The two younger children are Hazel, a student in a business college at South Bend, Indiana, and Freda.

Politically Mr. Vannett is nominally a republican and supports that party in national elections, but in local elections he disregards political lines and supports only those men and measures which in his judgment will be to the advantage of the public good. He has always taken a strong interest in educational matters and for seven years he has rendered effective and appreciated service as a member of the school board of District No. 23, it having been during his incumbency that the new schoolhouse was erected. By a straightforward and commendable course he has made his way from a somewhat humble beginning to a respectable position in the business world, winning the hearty admiration of the people of his adopted state and earning a reputation as an enterprising, progressive man of affairs and a broad-minded, charitable and upright citizen.

Samuel D. Goza. It is a commonplace remark in Montana that Sam D. Goza has a wider personal acquaintance throughout the state than any other man. For twenty years he has been the Montana General Agent of the Northwestern Life Insurance Company. That designation, however, only expresses one phase of his twenty years' activities in the state.

In all matters political and in most civic matters, he has been one of the real leaders in Montana affairs.

Mr. Goza has never sought public honors for himself, but has exerted a great influence in the inner councils of the leaders of the republican forces in the state. He is generally accepted as Governor Dixon's closest political friend and adviser, as he was likewise an intimate associate of the late Senator Thomas H. Carter during his lifetime.

While he has never attended a political convention in an official capacity, yet he has probably exerted as great an influence in the politics of the state as any one single individual.

He was a sincere follower of Theodore Roosevelt and when the 1912 presidential campaign developed was one of his trusted leaders, both in Montana and at the nominating convention in Chicago.

During the World war he was a member of the Hoover Food Administration activities in Montana, as well as the various relief organizations that were formed during and after the war.

He was born in Bolivar County, Mississippi, October 21, 1866, son of Samuel D. and Mary (Pickett) Goza, the former a native of Louisville, Kentucky, and the latter of Mississippi. The father was a Mississippi planter and a Confederate soldier. He died in 1867, having lost the greater part of his property during the war.

By the death of the mother soon afterward, Samuel D. Goza was left an orphan, and spent most of his early years in the home of an aunt and uncle, who, in 1879 removed to Leadville, Colorado. He had little opportunity to attend school after the age of thirteen, but some years later spent two terms in Denver University, and by diligent self effort acquired the equivalent of a college education.

Mr. Goza entered the service of the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company in 1890, writing business at Aspen and Leadville, Colorado. He soon proved a man of splendid qualifications for the exacting role of life insurance, and eventually was made district manager for Western Colorado with headquarters at Denver. In May, 1902, the company sent him to Montana as state manager, and later gave him added territory in the northern part of Wyoming. During his first ten years as general manager of Montana, he increased the business in his territory from a little less than $4,000,000 to $10,000,000.

Mr. Goza, though a southerner by birth and son of a Confederate soldier, became affiliated with the republican party early in life. One of his early experiences in Colorado was conducting a newspaper at Aspen in the support of the Harrison campaign of 1888. He was in the newspaper business there until he took up the life insurance work.

February 9, 1890, at Leadville, he married Miss Etta Newby, who was born in Iowa February 9, 1872, daughter of J. L. and Martha (Williams) Newby. Of the four children born to their union, two grew up, Ned S. and Samuel D., Jr., both of whom saw service in the United States army during the late war.

Fred A. Priess, a merchant at Ismay, began his business career with the history of Ismay as a railroad town. He arrived in Montana in 1908 and immediately entered a homestead six miles from the town, where he built a little shack 14 by 14 feet, and this pioneer home sheltered him and his family while he was proving up his claim. His farming experience had been gained in Minnesota, and of the four crops he planted on his Montana land he harvested three, his farming experience thus marking a single failure. When he decided to take up work along a different line he rented his farm, but has still clung to its title. He came into the country without capital, and when he left the farm he took from it in addition to its improvements about $700 or $800, all of which had been made from the land.

Mr. Priess left his farm to take charge of the Ismay Hotel, but after a year spent as a hotel proprietor he engaged in the clothing business as the successor of Jo Schaivitsch, beginning the industry with a stock of men's and ladies' furnishings valued at $2,600, and he is still identified with Ismay's business activities as a clothing merchant.

Mr. Priess came to Montana from his native state of Minnesota, where he was born in Ottertail County December 16, 1882. He remained on the farm until reaching his nineteenth year, obtained his education in the country schools with an additional year in a business college at Fergus Falls, and then entering his brother's store at Beroun, Minnesota, as a clerk, obtained his first experience as a merchant. From this position he went to Holloway, Minnesota, from there to Farwell, serving a clerkship in both towns, was next in Portland, North Dakota, and there terminated his connection with the middle west, making his way out to Montana and taking up a new career in a new location.

Mr. Priess' father, Adolph Priess, was of German birth and although he came to the United States before his marriage he wedded a lady from his native place, Christina Pfeffer, in Minnesota. They became the parents of fourteen children, nine sons and five daughters, and of this large family twelve survive, eight sons and four daughters.

Fred A. Priess was married at Buxton, North Dakota, December 14, 1907, to Miss Lottie Cooper, who was born in North Dakota in 1883, a daughter of George and Mary (Rouck) Cooper. The father was born and reared in Canada, was married in North Dakota, and spent his life as a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Cooper became the parents of seven living children, three daughters and four sons. Two children, Ethel and Leroy, have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Priess.

Mr. Priess owns his own business house in Ismay, and also erected his own home there, and he is serving his fellow townsmen as a member of the Board of Aldermen and as a school director. He cast his first vote as a republican, having been reared in the faith of that party, and is an entered apprentice in Masonry.

Guy T. Haywood, M. D. Rosebud County and the community of Forsyth in particular have a high respect and appreciation for the professional abilities and service of the medical firm of Cotton and Haywood. Of this firm Doctor Haywood has carried the burdens of his profession here for six years, and is also well known to the citizenship of the county as a native son.

He was born at the south end of the county, on the old Fred Ramsey ranch, then in Custer County, on August 28, 1887. His father is the weli known and prominent pioneer character James Haywood of Birney, Custer County. James Haywood was born at Tignish, Prince Edward Island, Canada, in 1859, son of a well-to-do miller and farmer. The Haywoods were English pioneers in Canada, coming prior to the seven years of French and Indian wars, and were granted lands from the domain in which General Wolf's claims were allotted. James Haywood practically grew up in the atmosphere of his father's grist mill, an old time water plant. When his father married a second time he left home and came to the United States, and in the summer of 1874 made the interesting voyage on a river boat up the Yellowstone to Miles City. From that year to the present, more than forty-five years, he has lived in as close touch as possible with the wilderness aspects of the northwest. For the first ten years he was a trapper and hunter, and was one of the old coterie of hunters to which the noted Oscar Brackett of Ismay belongs. He and his cousin, Archie McMurdy, one of the best known buffalo hunters of the day along the Yellowstone, were partners. In their expeditions they hunted all over the Porcupine and Sarpey country and over much of what was then Custer County. When it came time to settle down James Haywood located on what is now the Northern Cheyenne Reservation. When those lands were designated as the home of the Indians he was compelled to give up his location, and subsequently moved to Birney. However, he remained on the reservation as Boss farmer for the Northern Cheyennes a few years, and gave those wild and untutored Indians their first instruction in agriculture, performing thereby a useful service both to the Government and to the tribe. Since removing to Birney he has maintained a modest home and a modest business as a farmer and rancher, and is still an enthusiastic sportsman with rod and gun.

The mother of Doctor Haywood bore the maiden name of Elizabeth Miller. She was born at Wick, a small town in the north of Scotland, where the chief industry is herring fishing. Her father was James Miller and her mother a member of the Southerland family. When she was a small girl her parents came to America and settled at Tignish, Prince Edward Island, where her father continued fishing and also as a sailor on coasting vessels. At Tignish, Elizabeth was well educated, but finished her education in Boston, becoming a teacher, and for a time was employed as a governess in the prominent Tainter family of Boston. In 1886 she married James Haywood. They were married in Chicago and as a bride she came to Montana and as a woman of distinctive culture she rendered many services outside her home interests. She taught school in Custer County and later was elected county superintendent of Rosebud County, and was serving her first term when she died September 11, 1909, at the age of forty-five. She was the mother of three children: Dr. Guy T.; Gertrude, who died in young womanhood; and Miss Edna, who owns and operates a cattle ranch at Birney.

Dr. Guy T. Haywood spent the first nine years of his life in the Birney locality, and then accompanied his mother back to her home community at Tignish in Prince Edward Island, where he lived to the age of nineteen. He received most of his early education in that town, but later from his own work provided the means for his professional training. For three years he did preparatory work at the University of Iowa, and in 1913 graduated from the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia. After a year in hospital work and general practice at Philadelphia he returned to Montana, practiced at Ismay two years, and since then has been busily engaged in his profession at Forsyth as a member of the firm Cotton & Haywood. This firm represents as physicians and surgeons both the Milwaukee and the Northern Pacific Railways of Forsyth. Doctor Haywood is also the present county physician of Rosebud County.

He was reared in a democratic home and his mother was elected on the ticket of that party as county superintendent of schools, though Rosebud County was normally republican. Doctor Haywood cast his first presidential vote for President Wilson. Fraternally he is a member of the Masonic Order, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World, and is a member and director of the Forsyth Commercial Club.

For his first wife Doctor Haywood married Miss Pauline Schrag, a native of Germany. By this union he has one son, Guy, Jr. At Forsyth December 26, 1919, Doctor Haywood married Miss Ethel Drake. She was born in Green County, Wisconsin, in 1889, and was liberally educated as an artist and musician. She graduated from the Valley City Normal of North Dakota, finished her musical education in the Warren Academy at Warren, Illinois, and also attended the Academy of Fine Arts at Chicago. For four years before her marriage she was a teacher of music and drawing in the Forsyth High School.

Josiah J. Sigafoos. Starting his career in Montana as a ranch rider thirty-eight years ago, Josiah J. Sigafoos is today one of the wealthy, prominent and influential stockmen, farmers and landowners of Fergus County, and in more recent years has come into prominence as an inventor. The success which has awarded his efforts is but the just reward of industry and perseverance, for everything that he owns has been self acquired, and in its acquire-ment he has held steadfastly to the code of honorable and straightforward dealing.

Mr. Sigafoos was born in Holmes County, Ohio, March 2, 1852, a son of Daniel Sigafoos. As he was but eleven days old when his mother died he naturally has no recollection of her, and as his father did not like to discuss the subject of his bereavement in later years the son has no record of her maiden name. Daniel Sigafoos was born in Holmes County, Ohio, a son of a pioneer of the Western Reserve, and died when seventy-four years of age, in 1893. In that state and county he continued to be engaged in agricultural pursuits until the year 1861, when he removed to Louisa County, Iowa, and was engaged there in farming and raising stock up to the time of his death. In politics he was first a whig and later a republican.

The youngest in a family of four children, Josiah J. Sigafoos received his education in the public schools of Holmes County, Ohio, and Louisa County, Iowa, and later spent two years, those of 1875 and 1876, in attending the Iowa State Agricultural College at Ames, Iowa. His initial venture on his own responsibility was launched in Leavenworth County, Kansas, where he was engaged in farming until the spring of 1882, at which time he came to Montana to take up the work which was later to bring him fortune and position. From Dillon, Montana, which point he reached by rail, he made his way by stage coach to Helena, and then went sixty miles north of the latter city and began his work of riding the range as a cowboy. In the fall of 1882 he changed his base of operations to White Sulphur Springs, continuing to ride the range until the fall of the following year, when he went to U Bet, Meagher (now Fergus) County, still riding the range.

Mr. Sigafoos' real career started in the spring of 1884, when he homesteaded a tract on Ross Fork, two miles from U Bet, a community in which he has continued to centralize his activities to the present time. From his original homestead he has built up holdings aggregating 1,980 acres, on which he has from 600 to 750 head of cattle. In the year 1918 he put 100 acres of his land into wheat and 150 acres into barley, while in 1919 he devoted 600 acres to these two grains. His operations have always been carried on in the most approved style, and his aggressiveness, untiring energy and perseverance have been backed by an intimate knowledge of the science of his vocation and of soil and climatic conditions.

More recently Mr. Sigafoos has come into prominence as the inventor of the Sigafoos Automobile Steering Device. This invention provides one of the most novel, simple and practical devices of its kind that has ever been brought before the public. This invention enables the operator of an automobile to steer the car as easily with his feet as with his hands, so that when he desires he may rest his hands. Mr. Sigafoos' reputation is that of an honorable man of business. He has never cared to enter the lists as a candidate for political office, but is politically a staunch republican. He has never married.

Frederick Wilmore Peckover. In May, 1887, Frederick Wilmore Peckover came to Montana. He has had a great variety of business experience, but for a number of years has been one of the leading real estate and insurance men in Anaconda.

He was born in Nicholasville, Kentucky, April 7, 1865, but was reared from very early babyhood in Cynthiana, Kentucky. Both his father and grandfather belonged to that old school of dentists who were also physicians. For many years, Richard, the grandfather, practiced his profession in Lexington, Kentucky, where he died in 1877.

Edmund, father of the Anaconda business man, was born in 1837, and in 1861 he enlisted in the Union army. All through the war he served in the Quartermaster's Department. He was a republican, a very active member of the Episcopal Church, and belonged to the Masonic fraternity. He died at Cynthiana, Kentucky, in 1875. His wife was Jane Elizabeth Ridgley, a member of the Colonial family of that name. Her death occurred in Florida in 1920.

Frederick W. Peckover attended school in Cynthiana, but from the age of fourteen has been earning his own way in the world. As a boy he learned telegraphy and was employed at Cynthiana as an operator until 1879, when he became telegraph operator at Covington, and, later, at Cincinnati. In 1882 he joined the staff of the Denver and Rio Grande Railway at Colorado Springs. In 1884 he transferred to the Union Pacific as timekeeper and division clerk at Pocatello, Idaho, in the motor power department.

In May, 1887, Mr. Peckover came to Anaconda to take a position as timekeeper with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, under Mr. Marcus Daly. He remained in this position for two years, after which he conducted an independent mercantile business until the fall of 1890, when he joined the Great Northern Railway as chief clerk of construction during the building of their line from Havre, Montana, to Spokane, Washington. Upon completion of this construction he entered the train service as conductor.

In 1895, at Anaconda, Mr. Peckover married Miss Martha Harwood Durston, a daughter of John H. Durston, Ph. D., and Mary Harwood Durston.

In 1896 Mr. Peckover returned to Anaconda and became deputy clerk and recorder, under Martin Martin. In 1898 he entered into a partnership with J. T. O'Brien and engaged in the real estate and insurance business. Later he bought the O'Brien interest and in the course of another year consolidated with G. P. Welcome. The firm name became Welcome and Peckover, and the business expanded to include, on a large scale, both ranching and cattle raising. In 1914 the partnership of Welcome and Peckover was dissolved, and Mr. Peckover engaged independently in the insurance and coal business.

Mr. Peckover is an independent voter and a member of the Episcopal Church. He is affiliated with the Anaconda Lodge of Elks, Rotarians, Country Club, Anaconda Club, Angler's Club, Good Roads Association, Bowlers Association, and the Gun Club of which he has been president for five years. At different times, especially during the war, both he and his wife have given much time to Government, charitable, school or other public activities.

Thomas J. McDonough. One of the largest commercial organizations in the northwest is the Stone-Ordean-Wells Company, wholesale grocers. With headquarters at Duluth, the business ramifies over many states, with distributing centers and branch houses from the Great Lakes to the Cascade Range. The manager of the branch house at Billings is Thomas J. McDonough, who began with this company as a city salesman, and as branch house manager is now head of a business that exceeds in volume most of the independent establishments at Billings.

Mr. McDonough was born at Superior, Wisconsin, January 17, 1877. His grandfather, F. H. Mc-

Donough, was a native of Ireland. He brought his family to Canada, where he followed his trade as a carpenter, but after fifteen years went back to Ireland and died there. His son, Henry McDonough, was born at Quebec, Canada, in 1826, grew up and married in his native province and became a skilled wood worker. In 1862 he moved to Superior, Wisconsin, where he followed his profession until his death in 1882. He was quite active in democratic politics, and served as supervisor of Douglas County, Wisconsin. He was a Catholic in religion. Henry McDonough married Ellen Kegenay, who was born in 1837 at Hochelaga, Canada, and died at Superior, Wisconsin, in 1899. She was the mother of seven children, Thomas J. being the youngest. A. J. McDonough, the oldest, is manager for Armour & Company at Superior, Wisconsin. Michael, who died at the age of thirty-two, was dock foreman for the Youghiogheny-Lehigh Coal Company at Superior. Anna died in childhood. John H. is connected with the Peevey Elevator Company at Superior. Charles H. lives at Superior and is with the Motor Traffic Company. George F. is an employe of the Great Northern Railway Company at Superior.

Thomas J. McDonough, after leaving school at the age of fourteen, went to work in a grocery store and acquired a thorough knowledge of the retail business by a period of service lasting for six years. Then for five years he was with the Duluth branch of Armour & Company, spent four years with the Tuohy Mercantile Company of Superior, and in 1905 entered the service of the Stone-Ordean-Wells Company at Superior as city salesman. He was with the firm there 3½ years, and in 1909 was sent to Billings to take the management of the branch house. The plant and offices at Billings are on Twenty-seventh Street and Montana Avenue, and the building is one of the finest business structures in the city, being of modern type of commercial architecture, expressly equipped and fitted for the utmost efficiency in handling a wholesale grocery business.

The branch houses of the Stone-Ordean-Wells Company are located at Minneapolis, Fargo, Grand Forks and Minot, North Dakota, Billings, Great Falls and Missoula, Montana, while storage houses are located at Casper, Wyoming, and Bozeman, Helena and Lewistown, Montana. The officers and chief executives of the business, all residents of Duluth, are A. R. Orlean, president; James E. Granger, vice president; R. A. Barthold, secretary; W. L. Mackay, treasurer; R. A. Horr, general manager; and W. K. Gill, vice president of the coffee mills.

The plant under Mr. McDonough's supervision has a total working force of twenty-four, including seven road salesmen, with eight office employes and nine warehouse and truck employes. Mr. McDonough in politics is independent, is a member of the Catholic Church and is a third degree Knight of Columbus, being affiliated with Billings Council No. 1259. His home is a modern bungalow, built in 1912, and located at 42 Lewis Avenue.

Mr. McDonough married at Deer Creek, Minnesota, in 1907, Miss Anna L. Nelson, daughter of O. H. and Ellen (Wilson) Nelson, the latter now deceased. Her father is an old time Minnesota resident, and has lived at Deer Creek for forty-two years. He is a retired farmer. Mrs. McDonough is a graduate of the North Dakota Normal School at Fargo, and was a teacher in Minnesota before her marriage. She has been prominent in social and civic affairs at Billings, was president in 1915 of the Woman's Club, a federated club, and is now a member of the Billings Board of Education.

John Francis Roche came to Montana from the Middle West where he was born and reared, made himself valuable if not indispensable to several of the electric power corporations of the state, and recently, much to the regret of his many friends in Butte, Billings and elsewhere who know him as "Jack" Roche, he returned to the Middle West at Chicago, where he is assistant to the president of the Edison Electric Appliance Company, Inc.

Mr. Roche was born at Rickersville, Iowa, April 23, 1874, son of Michael and Catherine Roche. His parents came to this country with their parents in 1849, and spent their lives as farmers at Rickersville, a little village twelve miles west of Dubuque.

Though the evidence proves that Mr. Roche has made something more than an ordinary success of life, he did so merely by converting very commonplace and humble opportunities. He never attended a grade school, and all his schooling was comprised between the ages of seven and fourteen. After all the work on the farm was done he went to school, but only for the winter term closing about the first of March. As he looks back on that part of his career Mr. Roche is of the opinion that the instructors and the quality of instruction were decidedly inferior. The duties of his father's farm were his compelling interest and work until 1898, when at the age of twenty-four, he started west with some idea of participating in the Klondike rush. Stopping off at Sanders, Montana, he worked on a cattle ranch thirty days, in May went to Billings, and finding nothing else available took a job at the Burlington Railway section house washing dishes and waiting on table at $15 a month and board. For a time he blacked stoves for the A. L. Babcock Hardware Company at Billings, and in 1899 removed to Laurel, Montana, where he was employed in the store of C. W. Gardner. Mr. Gardner being a crank on home cooking made his employe do the cooking for both, as well as the routine duties of the store.

These items are mentioned merely to show how Jack Roche employed his time during his first year or so in Montana. He might perhaps, taking his cue from these early experiences, have developed as a successful rancher, railroad man or merchant, but destiny really attended him when in the fall of 1899 he returned to Billings and went to work in the office of Colonel H. W. Rowley, then manager of the Billings Water Power Company. In the service of that corporation he remained until the spring of 1908, and in the meantime his responsibilities had increased until they were designated by the office of secretary-treasurer. At that time the company's business was sold to the Billings and the Eastern Montana Power Company, Mr. Roche succeeding to the management of the new company. Subsequently this business became part of what is now known as the Montana Power Company, and after eight years at Billings Mr. Roche was transferred as district manager of the Montana Company to Butte, in charge of all the business of the company at that point.

Apparently his chief success with these companies was in "extension work," popularizing the service the companies had to offer. Mr. Roche was the first man in the United States to introduce electric stoves as a part of domestic equipment and he carried out a number of other successful campaigns for the more general use of electrical devices. It was this feature of his record that brought him to the attention of the manufacturers of electrical equipment, resulting in his leaving Montana and going to Chicago as assistant to the president of the Edison Electric Appliance Company on January 22, 1920.

During his residence at Billings and Butte Mr. Roche was not altogether absorbed in business. He was chairman of the State Vocational Training School, a park commissioner five years, was president of the Chamber of Commerce of Billings from 1914 to 1916, and chairman of the Good Roads Association and a member of the Executive Committee of the State Freight Rate Association. He is a charter member of the Billings Rotary Club, a member of the Butte Rotary Club and was president of the Butte Automobile Club in 1917-19. Mr. Roche is a democrat, is a member of the Knights of Columbus and the Elks, is a Catholic and belongs to the Billings Country Club, Butte Country Club, is a director of the Butte Silver Bow Club and a member of the Billings Club.

May 30, 1904, at Helena he married Bertha B. Buchanan, daughter of Hon. Frank Buchanan, state senator at Billings. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Roche are Jack Jr., Helen, Francis, Grace, Burke, Jane, Martha and Virginia, eight in all.

Frank Porter. The interest attaching to this well known citizen of Flathead County is divided between his practical achievements, his varied experiences and his personal character. Life has been with him a great adventure, and he has never sought the path of least resistance, but has gone into those things requiring strength, courage, audacity and on the whole his success has been due to the fact that he has never been afraid of failure.

Mr. Porter was born in Wisconsin February 14, 1867, fifth among the seven children of John J. and Kate (Kelley) Porter. His father was an honored soldier of the Union army during the Civil war, being a member of the Eighth Minnesota Regiment. Frank Porter attended a log cabin school in Polk County, Wisconsin, but as he says, the best part of his education was acquired while driving a six ox team at a logging camp. When he left home, a young man, he went to St. Paul, where he learned the trade of stone cutter and bridge builder. Possessing a wonderful physique, he attracted the admiration of his friends and associates by his ready abilities as a boxer, and for a time he underwent the training for the pugilistic ring. Gradually he became disgusted with the class of men who were the backers and followers of the sport, and he broke away from this as a vocation altogether. He then resumed work as a bridge foreman, and was employed building bridges in Minnesota for different railroads and contracting firms.

Mr. Porter came to Montana in 1897 as superintendent of construction for the railroad bridge across the Flathead River at Coram. Later he was foreman on a number of big bridges throughout this section of the Rocky Mountains. His skill and ability naturally commanded good salaries, but, always generous, he dispensed of his means about as fast as the income arrived. He had a good eye for opportunities, and while working in the northwest the Flathead country made a special appeal to him. On leaving bridge building he engaged in the logging industry, beginning in the Flathead country as an employe of others, since he had no capital to engage in such a large scale operation. The first firm he logged for was the Sommers Lumber Company, and another was the Eureka Lumber Company. He was thus employed, part of the time on his own capital, from 1901 to 1918.

Nothing could have proved so complete a satisfaction to Mr. Porter's fighting spirit as an opportunity to have gone into the front line during the World war. He sought every opportunity to do so, offering his services without remuneration to the State Council of Defense. That body secured for him an opportunity to serve with the aeroplane construction department, but his one desire was to go to France with the Engineer Corps. The offer was finally accepted but too late for him to go across.

Mr. Porter is an extensive landowner, having about 1,140 acres in the Flathead country. His own comfortable home is at Kila. He is a staunch republican, and during 1920 his favorite of the candidates for the party nomination was General Wood. He is affiliated with the Elks and Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is a member of the Catholic Church at Kalispell. He gave liberally to this church and his name appears on the Memorial window Mr. Porter has lived in close touch with humanity, especially those who earn their living by work, and he is very popular in laboring circles. He has ordered his own life along lines of complete integrity, and is proud that he has never received a dunning letter for anything he owed.

At Kalispell he married Annie Belle Strong, a daughter of W. M. and Mary (Spencer) Strong, of Scotch-Canadian ancestry. Mrs. Porter's father was a Civil war soldier from Michigan, in which state she was born. At the age of thirteen her parents moved to Minnesota, where she finished her education. Mrs. Porter came to Montana in 1891. For twenty-one years she has been an active member of the Maccabees, belongs to the Presbyterian Church, and during the World war was very active in Red Cross circles. Mr. Porter is a typical westerner, public spirited, popular, generous, and believes in enjoying the best things of life. In June, 1920, he and Mrs. Porter left their home and began an automobile tour that carried them to the coast, taking in all the wonderful scenic attractions along the way.

Edwin S. Booth, of Baker, Montana, is an able, trustworthy attorney, one in whom clients can place implicit confidence and whom courts from the highest to lowest will hear, and to whom they give full weight of consideration, respect and accord. From the bar, where he had distinguished himself both as a lawyer and man, he was called by a confiding people to the legislative body of his state, where he exchanged the quiet of the courtroom for the fierce forum in debate among men. Since he attained to manhood's estate it may be truly said of him that he has been singularly honest, conscientious and upright in all his ways; clean clear through his soul; always active and performing with courage every duty that falls to his lot better than is expected of him, and never disappointing the best of his friends. He is strong in thought, clear in statement, logical in argument, is ever mindful of the feelings of others, never stooping to innuendoes or biting sarcasm to humiliate an opponent at the expense of the dignity of debate. Because of these characteristics Mr. Booth has always been a wielder of a mighty influence and the builder of character so strong and towering that he commands the profound respect and admiration of all with whom he comes in contact.

Edwin S. Booth was born at Keokuk, Lee County, Iowa, March 24, 1865, a son of Edwin C. Booth, a native of Sheffield, England, who came in young manhood to the United States, and soon after his arrival located at Cincinnati, Ohio, where he became a contractor and builder. There he was married to Mary Sigsworth, also a native of England, and they moved from Cincinnati to Keokuk, Iowa, where they spent the remainder of their lives. Only four of their large family of children reached maturity, and of them Mrs. George C. Getz, of Portland, Oregon, and Edwin S. Booth survive.

Growing up in his native city, Edwin S. Booth attended its schools and the college of law located there, in which he completed the regular course and took the degree of Bachelor of Law. He tried his first lawsuit in Scotland County, Missouri, it being an ordinary civil case in a justice court, and won it. While he has been engaged in both civil and criminal practice in Montana, his connection with prosecutions has given him a state-wide reputation as a prosecutor and a successful and fearless one.

Mr. Booth has been associated with the history of Montana since May, 1887. When he come here he had been but recently admitted to the bar and sought an opening for the practice of his chosen profession. He had made a brief stop in Dakota, but conditions there were then so adverse that he decided to look for better opportunities, and finally selected Butte, where he located permanently in December, 1887. His financial condition was at a low ebb, he being actually "broke," as he himself often declares, for he has no false pride, and he also states that his first job in his new community was that of carrying dishes in a restaurant.

At the close of his nearly two years in the employ of the city Mr Booth was made deputy county attorney, and held that position for four years, during that period securing convictions in a number of criminal cases, some of which were appealed to the Supreme Court. In every case these convictions were sustained by the higher court, these cases now being precedents for the present courts. Some years after he retired from the county attorney's office he was elected city attorney of Butte, and served as such for about two and one-half years.

Entering politics, Mr. Booth allied himself with the republican party, and was elected to the State Assembly from Silver Bow County. He entered the Fourth Session, and was made chairman of the Code Committee, which reported the first code adopted by the state. It was this session which placed the educational institutions of the state on a firm footing. Although he served in the Lower House but one term, Mr. Booth has never missed a session of the Legislature since the admission of Montana to statehood, being present either as a member of one or other of its Houses or as a private individual interested in the passage of constructive legislation.

In 1909 he left Butte and spent three years on his ranch in Yellowstone County, being for that time out of the practice of his profession. Mr. Booth has put in a good deal of time and effort on the development of this ranch, which is still owned by him. Having accomplished what he set out to do when he located on this ranch, he left it and, coming to Baker, re-entered the professional arena, although when he came here that had not been his intention. However, upon his arrival he found his interests enlisted in the county seat fight as an advisor, and before he had completed it he had assembled an excellent clientele. The creating of Fallon County absorbed him, and after he had succeeded in having it established, with Baker as the county seat, he kept on threshing out the various questions of law involved in the county division. The decision of the higher courts cleared these questions so that no further contention can be made relative to them.

In 1918 Mr. Booth was named by his party for the State Senate, and was elected in November of that year. He made the race against the serious opposition of the democratic party, as well as of the Non-Partisan League, and won the election by a majority of about 200 votes. Senator Booth entered the Senate of the Sixteenth Assembly, a republican body, and was made chairman of the railroads and transportation committee, and a member of the judiciary committee, and was one of the most active figures of that session. It is no exaggeration to state that a large percentage of the bills presented to the Senate were of his drawing, and many of those introduced in the House were reviewed by him so as to make them read properly and legally as measures for legislative consideration.

Senator Booth has been a member of the Republican Committee of Montana frequently and has figured in the management of party affairs for years. He has attended national conventions and was a delegate to the convention of 1916 held at Chicago, and supported Charles E. Hughes as the party nominee in the ensuing campaign. The effectiveness of his work as a campaigner is known and recognized all over the state, and his services are in great demand for public occasions and in political movements. As a lawyer Senator Booth has organized many of the corporations of Baker, and has been identified with them at times in a financial way. At present he is the attorney of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad.

The first wife of Senator Booth bore the maiden name of Etta Pinkham, and they were married at Butte, Montana. By this marriage he had the following children: Iowa F., who is the widow of T. J. McKellips, of Yellowstone County, and has two children, Eudora and Alena; and Edwin W. Senator Booth was married secondly to Mrs. Esther B. (Garrett) Hughes, born at Chester, Flintshire, England, a daughter of Joseph and Anna Garrett, of Manchester, England. By her first marriage Mrs. Booth has a son, Harold Hughes Garrett, who is now a student of the Montana State University.

In his fraternal affiliations Senator Booth is a member of the various branches of Oddfellowship, is a Knight of Pythias and an Elk. He is past grand of the Odd Fellows, past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias and past chief patriarch of the Encampment. The family residence of the Booths is at No. 111 Fifth Street East, Baker.

The excellent judgment and power of clear analysis that has always been such a strong asset of Senator Booth, and which he put to such good purpose while acting as city and county attorney, soon caused him to be recognized as one of his party's leaders in the state, while his disposition to recognize and endeavor to reconcile the conflicting opinions of his associates in the Senate have given him an independence of thought and action that make him a tower of strength to any cause which he may espouse.

A. M. Davidson. The president of the Flathead County State Bank at Polson, A. M. Davidson has for a number of years been a prominent factor in the business and banking life of Montana.

He is one of many eastern Canadians who have found homes and dignified achievement in Montana. He was born in King's County, Nova Scotia, a son of G. N. and Mary (McColy) Davidson, being the eighth in their family of eleven children. He acquired a public school education in his native country, and as a young man spent two years in the vicinity of Boston. In February, 1887, he arrived at Bozeman, Montana. He later also engaged in farming and stock raising in Madison County, Montana. In 1913 Mr. Davidson moved to Missoula and in July, 1914, took up his residence at Polson, where he had previously bought a controlling interest in the Flathead County State Bank. Besides handling the affairs of this financial institution he has done an extensive real estate business, buying and selling lands and city property.

Mr. Davidson married Miss Emily Boardman, a native of Illinois, and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Boardman. Her parents were early settlers in Montana, locating at Helena in 1885. Mrs. Davidson acquired her education in the public schools of Helena and at Deer Lodge. Six children were born to their union: Roscoe, Edgar, Erma, Esther, Clinton and Douglas. All except the two eldest attended the Bozeman High School and Roscoe was a student in the Missoula Business College and the Agricultural College at Bozeman, and Edgar was a student of the Huntington Architectural School of Boston, Massachusetts. Erma is a graduate of the Bozeman High School and now is attending the State University. Esther Davidson was a graduate of 1920 class at Polson, Montana. The son, Edgar, enlisted and went with the colors, going into training at Camp Devens, Massachusetts, in November, 1917. He was with the Twenty-ninth Engineers, and in February, 1918, went overseas, and saw much active duty until the signing of the armistice and subsequently accompanied the army of occupation to Coblenz, Germany. The son Roscoe is a young man who has taken a great interest in his father's bank and is cashier. Mr. and Mrs. Davidson have been at great pains to educate their children and fit them thoroughly for life's duties. Mrs. Davidson is a member of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Davidson is a Mason and is a republican voter. He has shown an ever ready interest to support movements for the welfare and improvement of the Flathead country and his civic loyalty is given in full measure to the entire State of Montana, his home for over thirty years, and the arena in which his efforts have been most productive and successful.

WILLIAM J. FERGUSON is one of the earliest ranchmen on the Rosebud, and he has the unique distinction of having lived in Custer, Rosebud and Big Horn counties without changing the place of his residence, the boundaries of the counties instead having changed. He came into Montana in February, 1890, landing at Hutton on the 16th of that month, and he was then a young man, had been reared on a farm and had done little else but farm labor save for a short time spent as an employe of the Illinois Central Railroad Company. His birth occurred in Washington County, Illinois, near Centralia, March 23, 1868, and his life was passed there until he left the Prairie state to come into the West. His meager educational training had been received in the common schools.

James Ferguson, his father, was born in Dumfrees, Scotland, in 1828. He came to the United States at the age of seventeen and stopped for a time in the State of New York, finally going on to Illinois and locating first near Dundee. He moved from there to Centralia with his family with ox teams, and he became a farmer in that vicinity, developed a home and spent his life as a farmer. His life was lived privately and quietly, and no man knew him other than as a friend. In his religious affiliations he was a Presbyterian, and he gave his political support to the republican party. His life's span covered a period of forty-nine years, years that were devoted to home, friends and the good of his community. He married Margaret Barnett, who was born in Ireland. She has a twin brother, Robert, living in Illinois, and a sister, Mrs. Thomas Bentley, in Toledo, Ohio. Mrs. Ferguson lived to the age of fifty-two, dying in the year of 1887. In the family of Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson were the following children: Jennie, of Sheridan, Wyoming, who has spent her life as a teacher; Mary, the wife of Tuman Fraser, also of Sheridan; Robert, who was the pioneer of the family in the West; Sadie, who died in Illinois as a teacher; Nettie, whose home is in Sheridan, Wyoming; and William J., of Kirby, Montana. The son, Robert, who preceded his brother to Montana about five years, was engaged in ranching here when his life was sacrificed by the cowardly and murderous assault of a marauding band of Cheyennes. While riding over the Crow Reservation in search of some horses it is believed he came upon a bunch of Cheyennes butchering Reservation cattle against the law, and to hide the evidence against them they trailed and waylaid him. He was missing for several days before any trace of him could be found, and then some searchers discovered his wounded horse. Encouraged by this evidence of foul play a continued search revealed the end of a lariat sticking up out of a loose sand bed in the bottom of a washout, and a little digging with the hands uncovered his body and then his saddle. Detectives were put into the Cheyenne Reservation who ran down the murderers. They were arrested and jailed, but before the day of trial arrived the commandant of Fort Keogh had seen to it that no evidence against the three "braves" under arrest would be presented by "fixing" the witnesses, the prosecution failed to convict and the murderers of Robert Ferguson went unpunished.

William J. Ferguson came to Montana to join his brother Robert, who had arrived here in 1885, and leaving the train on the Northern Pacific Railroad at Rosebud he went from there by stage to Hutton and soon found work on Corral Creek as a cowboy for Hubbard & Thompson, continuing in their service for three summers, his winters in the interim having been devoted principally to pleasure. On leaving that outfit he embarked in the stock business for himself, succeeding to the small bunch of stock cattle his brother had under the brand "R-7," and for a time held them at the mouth of Corral Creek. Later on, when the Crow Reservation was surveyed, it was found that this location was inside the boundaries of that reservation and Mr. Ferguson then moved his cattle up on the Rosebud and made his home with Mrs. Tuman Fraser. He continued to look after his stock on the open range until he established himself at his present location, March 4, 1895. His postoffice is Kirby, and in this location he has spent a quarter of a century as a builder and developer of his community. He purchased the improvements of the man who had entered the homestead and succeeded W. P. Dale as the owner of the land. This man was known to the settlers of the region as "Bloody Knife," a name he had gained through an encounter with a neighbor over a trivial matter.

Mr. Ferguson began his career on his homestead with about sixty head of cattle, a team and a few saddle horses. A garden spot was all of the place at that time under cultivation, and the log building which he now uses as a granary was the pioneer dwelling place. Into that rude shelter Mr. Ferguson established his home, and he occupied it for some time after his marriage. His cattle occupied him to the exclusion of all other work save the seeding of the ranch to alfalfa hay and a little grain, which has constituted his chief farming venture here. In time his pioneer log cabin gave place to a more comfortable frame residence, and this in turn was succeeded by the present home of the family, a splendid modern home built in 1915. It contains nine spacious rooms, is equipped with the J. M. Swanstrom fresh water system, a Warner special lighting plant and furnace heat and a basement laundry. This home has the distinction of being the first one in Big Horn County with an electric lighting system. Mr. Ferguson erected his barn, a modern structure 40 by 60 feet, in 1915. It has a mow capacity for forty tons of hay and granaries for the housing of about 900 bushels of grain, also stable room for eleven horses and for six milch cows.

As a cattle man Mr. Ferguson has been handling the grades which he has improved through the years by the introduction of blooded White Face males, and his own recorded brand under which he has operated is the "MHF." His market has been in Chicago, but during recent years his output has been curtailed by the closing up of the open range as the country has become more thickly settled.

He has reared a numerous family in Montana, and has therefore been a factor in the school matters of district No. 17-K. He served as chairman of Liberty Loan drives during the recent World war for the Kirby district, all of which went over with the exception of the last two, and he was also chairman of the Red Cross drive and active in the support of all auxiliary war work. His political support is given to the republican party, and his first presidential vote was cast in Illinois for Benjamin Harrison. He has never affiliated with fraternal orders or become a member of a church, but Mrs. Ferguson and their son, Leicester, are Methodists.

At Centralia, Illinois, December 16, 1897, Mr. Ferguson was married to Miss Lena A. Barton, a sister of the wife of Thomas Penson, whose biography appears elsewhere in this work. Mrs. Ferguson was born at Centralia March 2, 1873. The children born of their union are: Leicester B., who finished his high school work at Crafton, Pennsylvania, a suburb of Pittsburg; Harry V. and George W., twin sons, who took two years of high school work at Crafton; and Dwight S., Helen Teel, Thomas James and Ruth Maxine.

ARTHUR G. BAKER of Miles City, formerly railroad construction engineer for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, retired in 1916 after forty years of continuous service which brought him into contact with some of the most important expansion of railroad activities in this and other states. He was born at Cawnpore, India, on February 22, 1853, a son of Col. William T. Baker, an officer in the British army, who retired from active service in 1864 and returned with his family to England. After a stay of six months he came to Canada, but after a period at Lenoxville, was soon persuaded to come to the United States and located at Decorah, Iowa. His twenty-two years of service in the army taught Colonel Baker the value of systematic application and he entered the industrial field as a manufacturer of woolens at Decorah, continuing in that line for ten years with gratifying results, and then retired and continued to live at Decorah where he died in 1899, aged seventy-six years. He was born in Kent, England, and was a graduate of the British military academy which corresponds to West Point, and participated in the Sepoy Rebellion of 1857-9, receiving his promotion from captain to colonel on account of his services in that outbreak. On one occasion he prevented the native troops under his command from carrying out their plans which included mutiny, marching to Simla and murdering the white inhabitants, among whom were his wife and children, and for this he received thanks from Queen Victoria. Colonel Baker is from a family of soldiers, his father John Baker being in the East India service, akin to the military service, and after the Sepoy Rebellion was included in the latter. John Baker went to India in 1824. His wife bore the maiden name of Lydia King and she belonged to that family of heavy landed interests of County Suffolk, England. Colonel Baker was the eldest of the nine children born to his parents and all of them became soldiers in the British army except one who ran away from home, came to the United States and served his adopted country as a soldier in the Union army during the war between the Union and the Confederacy.

Colonel Baker was married to Elizabeth Vincent, a daughter of Gen. William Vincent, also of the East India Company, and an officer in the army during the Sepoy outbreak. Mrs. Baker died at Decorah, Iowa, in 1909, having been the mother of the following children: William Vincent, who lives at Chicago, Illinois; Mrs. Charles V. Lloyd, of London, England; Arthur G., whose name heads this review; Eldred R., who also lives at Chicago; Charles K. T., who lives at Kansas City, Missouri; and Frank W., who lives at Chicago.

Arthur G. Baker attended the public schools of Canada and Decorah, Iowa, before he became a student of Professor Breckenridge's private school at Decorah. Subsequently he took a course at the Rensselaer Polytechnic School of Troy, New York, the oldest engineering school in the United States, and was graduated therefrom in 1876. For the next two years Mr. Baker looked for a job and finally found it as axman on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad at Algona, Iowa, under William H. Sheldon, locating engineer, one of the big men of his day in the field of location engineering. During the summer of 1878, Mr. Baker worked for Mr. Sheldon, rising from axman to chainman and then to rodman on construction work. In the fall he was promoted to transitman under F. W. Kimball, who was in charge of locating parties. Mr. Baker ran transit from Sheldon, Iowa, to the Missouri River through the then entirely unsettled part of Dakota Territory. now South Dakota, to Chamberlain on the Missouri. He was also transitman for a year in Minnesota and Wisconsin and on preliminary surveys from Ortonville to Aberdeen, and the same year took charge as resident engineer of construction for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad. In 1883 he was placed in charge of his first locating party of that road as chief of that party, locating lines from Aberdeen south and west to the Missouri River at Evarts. Following this service Mr. Baker was invited to Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and attached to the chief engineer's office under D. J. Whittamore, where he remained until 1886 when he went to Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, in charge of the relocation and reconstruction of the McGregor and Prairie du Chien Railroad and pontoon bridge then owned by Gen. John D. Lawler.

For the subsequent ten years Mr. Baker was engaged in location, construction and maintenance work in Iowa, Wisconsin and Minnesota, and had charge of the party locating the line of road from Muscatine to Ottumwa, Iowa, and this was followed immediately by the construction of the line. From 1902 to 1904 he was engaged in explorations for a transcontinental line from the Missouri River to the coast, the trip of some 3,000 miles being covered by him and two men, on horseback. On this exploring tour he passed through Miles City, Montana, outfitted here, and accompanied by another engineer and driver, drove to Butte along the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul line now in operation. He went through the Bitter Root Mountains and then jumped to Missoula and explored over these mountains as well as the Cascades to Seattle, Washington. In 1906 he bought a home at Miles City, and has continued to make it his headquarters and home ever since.

The next activity of Mr. Baker was the construction of a line of road for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Company from Marmath to Melston, and upon the completion of it was ordered to South Dakota for the construction of about 300 miles of branch lines. Following that he constructed about 300 miles of road in Fergus County, connecting Lewistown and Great Falls, and other branches from Lewistown, and completed his work with his company by taking the physical valuation on their property in connection with the Federal Government. As a final touch to his forty years of service the company asked Mr. Baker to write a history of the construction of the Puget Sound Line knowing that no one else could do it so thoroughly and satisfactorily.

In addition to his home Mr. Baker is a stockholder and director of the State National Bank of Miles City, and has for some time been actively engaged in developing one of the large additions to Miles City, which appropriately bears his name.

On October 9, 1889, Mr. Baker was married at Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, to Miss Mary C. Savage, a daughter of Thomas A. and Elvira (Smith) Savage. Mr. Savage was a Virginian, but his wife was a native of Vermont, and they came to Prairie du Chien in 1836, where Mr. Savage established himself as a merchant, and there he died at the extremely advanced age of ninety-six years, having been the father of five daughters and two sons. Mr. and Mrs. Baker have a son, Arthur Abbott, and a daughter, Dorothy, whose education was completed at Madison, Wisconsin. Both young people are living at home. Mr. Baker is known all over Montana, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa and the Dakotas, and the work he accomplished in the opening up of new sections by his construction work will never be forgotten nor can too high a value be set upon it. Since coming to Miles City he has been equally progressive, and never fails to give due attention to civic affairs. His property interests are large in this locality, for ever since he made his first visit to the place, he has had faith in it and proven this by investing in its realty and other enterprises. The example of so important a man and so shrewd an investor has had a salutory influence upon others and much of the influx of capital and people may be directly traced to Mr. Baker.

Robert L. Westover. As a comparatively new industry, the automobile business has attracted into its ranks many of the younger men of the western communities, this applying particularly to the thriving cities which are located on the well traveled trails used by tourists who make their pleasure trips in the popular vehicle which has revolutionized traffic. In this industry, these young and progressive business men have found prosperity and an opportunity of placing themselves in positions of business stability. Robert L. Westover belongs to this class which has recognized opportunity and grasped it, and the Westover Yellowstone Trail Garage, at Billings, Montana, of which he is proprietor, is one of the most popular and largely patronized in this locality. Mr. Westover was born at Lincoln, Nebraska, August 30, 1886, and is a son of J. A. and Minna C. (Fushia) Westover.

The Westover family is of English origin, but has been located in the United States for a number of generations, and Amasa Westover, the grandfather of Robert L., was born in Michigan in 1815. As a young man he became a pioneer into the newly-opened territory of Nebraska, where he experienced the hardships of frontier life, but eventually overcame all obstacles and became a prosperous agriculturist. In his declining years he moved to the City of Lincoln, where his death occurred in 1895, at the age of eighty years. J. A. Westover was born in Nebraska, March 17, 1859, and was reared at Lincoln, where he secured a public school education. For some years he was the owner and cultivator of a fruit farm in Nebraska, and being a man of business sagacity and great industry was successful in his operations, and invested his capital in realty at Lincoln, which he still owns. In 1917 he practically retired from active pursuits and came to Billings, where he now makes his home. He was married at Lincoln to Minna C. Fushia, who was born in 1861, and they became the parents of the following children: George A., an attorney residing at Columbus, Montana; Edward J., in business with his brother, Robert L., at Billings; Robert L.; L. D., with his brothers in the same business; J. F., identified with the Curtiss Aeroplane Company, at Hempstead, New York; and Florence, twin of J. F., the wife of Merle E. Smith, identified with the Metropolitan Insurance Company at Billings.

Robert L. Westover was educated in the public schools of Lincoln, where he was graduated from the high school with the class of 1905. During the season of 1905-1906 he was a student at the Lincoln Business College, and following this pursued a course of one and one-half years in mechanical engineering at the University of Nebraska at Lincoln. Leaving that institution in 1908, for a time he worked as a mechanic at Lincoln, gaining experience, and eventually became the proprietor of a shop of his own which he conducted successfully for three years. In 1913 Mr. Westover came to Billings and established the Westover Yellowstone Trail Garage, situated at No. 2312 First Avenue, North, which has become one of the leading garages of Southeastern Montana. The establishment has a floor space of 75 by 100 feet on the ground floor, and 75 by 50 feet basement, and in addition to storing and repairing automobiles, Mr. Westover sells parts and accessories and used automobiles. He and his brother Edward J. (Ed.) are the owners of the business, and through their good management, industry, mechanical skill and unfailing courtesy, built up a business second to none in this part of the state.

Mr. Westover was married in 1908 at Lincoln, Nebraska, to Miss Helen Hansen, and they are the parents of three children: Robert W., born in 1910; Lucille, born in 1912; and Annabelle, born in 1913. The pleasant family home is situated at No. 51

North Broadway, and in addition to this Mr. Westover owns other realty and has a number of lucrative business connections. He is an independent voter upon political issues, and as a fraternalist belongs to Billings Council No. 1259, Knights of Columbus, in addition to which he holds membership in the Billings Midland Club. He and his family belong to the Roman Catholic Church.

CHESTER WEED SWEET, manager of the Bozeman division of the Montana Flour Mills Company, is member of a notable pioneer family of Montana and besides his successful record as a business man is former mayor of the City of Bozeman.

He is a son of William Thompson and Emma Iola Sweet. His father a native of Scioto County, Ohio, was a Union soldier in the Civil war and soon afterward started for the Northwest, traveling by steamer up the Missouri River and reaching Fort Benton in 1866. He had the distinction of establishing the first stock of general merchandise in Jefferson County at the old Town of Boulder. The interesting experience of his career as a Montana pioneer are recited more at length on other pages of this publication. His wife was born in Kalamazoo, Michigan, and came to Montana by steamboat from St. Louis in 1866, also landing at Fort Benton.

Chester Weed Sweet was reared and educated at Boulder, attending high school there, and from school went to work in the general store of Bach, Corey & Company at Boulder. Subsequently he was city salesman for Lindsay & Company at Helena but for a number of years his chief interest has been in the sales departments of some of Montana's leading flour mills. He was sales manager for the Royal Milling Company of St. Paul, subsequently sales manager and secretary of the Bozeman Milling Company, and now has the general management of the Bozeman division of the Montana Flour Mills Company, an organization represented by four mills in the state, with a daily capacity of 4,000 barrels of flour. Mr. Sweet is financially interested in the Montana Flour Mills Company and also in the Waite McClave Company.

Mr. Sweet gave Bozeman a thoroughly effective and business like administration of its municipal affairs during his two year term as mayor, from which office he retired in May, 1921. He is a republican in politics, is affiliated with Bozeman Lodge No. 18, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Bozeman Lodge No. 46, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, is a member of the Rotary and Commercial clubs and of the Episcopal Church.

At Chicago September 19, 1907, Mr. Sweet married Miss Mary Eleanor Sullivan. Her father M. J. Sullivan was superintendent of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway during the construction of that road from Chicago to St. Paul, and continued to be officially identified with the company until his death. Mr. and Mrs. Sweet have one daughter, Mary Eleanor Sweet, born in 1915.

ALFRED O. ENGLET. A tragedy that took away two young and prominent Montana business men and citizens occurred March 25, 1921, when an automobile overturned and instantly killed its two occupants, Alfred O. Englet of Lavina and Fred Sibley a rancher in the Emory country. In the death of Mr. Englet the Lavina community experienced a sense of irretrievable loss, since he had become widely and favorably known all over that section as a banker, and was really the active head of the Lavina State Bank. Mr. Englet had also shared in pioneer work in that section of Montana, having homesteaded, proved up and at the time of his death still owned his claim in Musselshell County.

To a large extent the following facts regarding his family and life were obtained from Mr. Englet more than a year before his death and are therefore a reliable account of his interesting experiences. He was born near St. Ansgar, Iowa, June 3, 1878. His father Gregory Englet was born in Germany in 1826, was reared in his native country, served six years in the regular army, and came to the United States soon after his discharge. After some experiences elsewhere he located at Freeport, Illinois, was married in that state, and in 1862 enlisted in the Union army in Company K of the Seventy-first Illinois Regiment. He was on active duty until injured in the battle of Murfreesboro and for the greater part of his remaining service was confined to a hospital. He was a pensioner after the war and soon removed to Worth County in Northern Iowa, where he farmed and in 1880 moved to another farm in Hancock County, Iowa, where he spent the rest of his life. He died near Corwith in 1891. He was a republican, and an active member of the German-Evangelical Church and was also affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic. Gregory Englet married Elizabeth Kelm, who was born in Germany in 1838 and died at Belmond, Iowa, in June, 1908. They were the parents of eleven children: Anna, a resident of Biggs, Oregon; George, a farmer living at Winlock, Washington; John, of Minneapolis; William, a baker who died at Fort Dodge, Iowa, at the age of twenty-six; Fred G., a passenger conductor with the Illinois Central Railway living at Chicago; Jacob, a farmer at Lavina, Montana; Joseph, a contractor and builder at Kanawha, Iowa; Edward, a farmer who died at Minot, North Dakota, at the age of thirty-four; Lou, a rancher at Lavina, Montana; Tillie, who died at the age of three years.

The youngest of his parents' family was the late Alfred O. Englet, who was not yet forty-three years of age when his energies were stilled by death. He was educated at Belmond, Iowa, graduating from the high school there in 1896. Following that he had a serious business training as clerk in stores at Belmond until 1903. In that year he went to Sawyer, North Dakota, and was manager of the local plant of the Rogers Lumber Company until January 7, 1907. For a few months following he was bill clerk for the Soo Railway at Glenwood, Minnesota, but during the panic in the fall of 1907 returned to Belmond, Iowa, to look after his mother who had been in ill health, and after her death he remained there until the spring of 1909.

Mr. Englet came to Lavina, Montana, May 26, 1909, and immediately filed on a homestead of 160 acres. His residence was on his claim until May, 1911, and he commuted it and made of it a valuable farm. While on the homestead in December, 1910, he entered the Lavina State Bank as assistant cashier. He was in its service continuously until April, 1916, when he removed from Lavina and became cashier of the Belmond State Bank. Then in June, 1919, he returned to the Lavina Bank as cashier and active head. This bank was established in April, 1909, as a private institution by D. W. Slayton, L. C. Lehfeldt, A. C. Bayers, H. J. Ries and L. Sandsmark. It was incorporated under a state charter in 1911, and has a working capital of $20,000, surplus and profits of $11,000, and deposits of $150,000. The bank home is at Main Street and First Avenue, and there was seldom a day when Mr. Englet was absent from his post of duty there.

However, he had other business interests, being vice president of the Lavina Consolidated Oil Company. He was president of the Lavina Commercial Club, served as school trustee of Lavina from 1912 to 1916 when he resigned to remove to Belmond. In politics he was a republican, and was Worshipful Master in 1918 of Lavina Lodge No. 107, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and was also affiliated with Billings Chapter No. 6, Royal Arch Masons, and Miles City Council Royal and Select Masters, and was Worthy Patron of the Eastern Star, while Mrs. Englet was Worthy Matron. He was a delegate to the Grand Lodge of Masonry.

Mr. Englet and family lived in a modern home on First Avenue in Lavina. He married at Belmond, Iowa, October 25, 1899, Miss Sadie E. Cuppett. They were classmates and both graduated from the Belmond High School in 1896. Her parents were David L. and Lucretia (Hubbard) Cuppett, the latter now deceased. Her father is a retired business man and early settler of Belmond, Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Englet became the parents of four children: Edward, born April 30, 1905; Harold, who died at the age of six months; Ruth E., born March 18, 1912; and Eileen, born April 17, 1915.

From an account of his tragic death which appeared in The Lavina Independent may appropriately be quoted a few sentences that voiced the general esteem felt for Mr. Englet: "The sudden death of Mr. Englet was a severe shock to the whole community as well as to his family. His work in the above named banks and in other offices he has held brought him in close touch with many individuals, most of whom were won to his friendship through his open heartedness and genial disposition. He had an enviable faculty of getting acquainted with people and making friends. He did not wait for those in need of a friend to seek him, but he sought them instead, and his friendship can be interpreted through his actions and work. The sentiment of 'let me live in the house by the side of the road, and be a friend to man,' found lodgment in his heart. He put it into practice and those many friends that he met beside the road will deeply mourn the death of Alfred Englet. He was a public-spirited citizen and an untiring booster in all things pertaining to the welfare and upbuilding of the community. He was president and took an active part in the Lavina Commercial Club. He was a liberal supporter of the church and all forms of charity."

Daniel Jeffrey Donohue has had a business experience as a merchant in Montana during thirty years. He learned merchandising with one of the largest wholesale and retail houses in Chicago and for a number of years was a department manager with one of the leading merchandise concerns of Butte. About twenty years ago Mr. Donohue established himself in business at Missoula where he has developed one of the most complete department stores in Western Montana.

The first eleven years of his life he lived in County Kerry, Ireland, where he was born November 3, 1869. His father Jeffrey Donohue, born in the same county in 1826, and a relative of the Irish patriot Daniel O'Connell, was an Irish farmer and in 1880 came to the United States with his family and lived in Chicago until his death in 1900. In Chicago he was employed by the Chicago and Northwestern Railway. After coming to this country he voted as a democrat. He was a member of the Catholic Church. Jeffrey Donohue married Ellen Nolan who was born in County Kerry in 1834 and died there in 1873. They had a family of four children: L. E., who is in the postal service at Chicago; Daniel Jeffrey; Michael, a merchant in Chicago; and Ellen, wife of Richard Shay, a public official and political leader in Chicago.

Daniel Jeffrey Donohue secured his early education in the National schools of Ireland and in Chicago for several years he attended night school. At the age of sixteen he began earning his living and for six years was an employe of Carson, Pirie, Scott & Company, wholesale and retail merchants. Beginning as a clerk before he left that firm he was an assistant department manager. Mr. Donohue came to Butte in 1890, and the following seven years he was a department manager for M. J. Connell Company, general merchants. Marcus Daly then chose him to take charge of the Daly mercantile interests at Hamilton, Montana, where he remained until the death of Mr. Daly in 1900. In that year Mr. Donohue moved to Missoula and established his present business. In starting his store he was fortified with the knowledge brought by experience both in Chicago and Butte and he invested his capital wisely and has used progressive methods at every point. He now does an immense volume of business annually, and has one of the handsomest and best stocked stores in the state at the corner of West Main Street and North Higgins Avenue.

Mr. Donohue is also stockholder in the Western Montana National Bank, in the Irving-Whitehouse Company of Great Falls, stocks and bonds. He owns the large brick store building and several warehouses used in his business, and also has other real estate in Missoula including a modern home at 829 Gerald Avenue.

Mr. Donohue is a republican, a Catholic, is affiliated with Missoula Council No. 1021, Knights of Columbus, being a third degree Knight, Hell Gate Lodge No. 383 of the Elks, and is president of the Missoula Country Club and a member of the Missoula Chamber of Commerce and the Rocky Mountain Club of New York City.

In 1893 at Butte Mr. Donohue married Miss Kate Hennessy. She is a native of New Brunswick, Canada, and is a graduate of the Girls College in the Dominion. Her brother, the late D. J. Hennessy, was a pioneer merchant of Butte, an associate and partner of the late Marcus Daly. Mr. and Mrs. Donohue have three daughters: Dorothy who is a graduate of the Sisters Academy at Missoula and the State University of Montana; Eileen, a graduate of the Sacred Heart Academy at Missoula and of Trinity College at Washington, D. C.; and Kathryn, a member of the senior class of the State University of Montana.

James L. Gwinn. Energetic, enterprising and eminently practical, James L. Gwinn, superintendent of the Belmont Mine, of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, has achieved success in the various lines of industry with which he has been associated, his forceful individuality and business ability having proved his chief assets during his active career. A son of the late O. M. Gwinn, he was born May 17, 1872, at Kniths Landing, Yolo County, California, of Irish descent.

O. M. Gwinn, Sr., his grandfather, was born in Ireland in 1804. Immigrating in early manhood to the United States, he spent a number of seasons in New York State. In 1850, lured by the wonderful reports concerning the discovery of gold in California, he trekked across the plains with his family to Yolo County, that state, but instead of working with pick and shovel decided to turn his attention to agriculture. Taking up a homestead claim of 160 acres, and pre-empting another 160 acres of land, he cleared and improved a valuable ranch, on which he resided until his death, at Kniths Landing, in 1879.

Born in New York State in 1841, O. M. Gwinn, Jr., was but nine years old when his parents removed to California, where he was reared, remaining on the parental ranch, and assisting in its management until twenty-five years of age. Locating then in Woodland, Yolo County, he embarked in business as a butcher and stock raiser, in which he was very successful, having had an especially large trade while the Central Pacific Railway was being extended through California, supplying the men employed in its building with meat. In 1908, having acquired a competency, he moved to San Francisco, and there lived retired until his death, in October, 1913. He was a stanch democrat in politics, and as a man and a citizen was ever held in high respect.

The wife of O. M. Gwinn, Jr., whose maiden name was Dora Phillips, was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1844, and died in Sacramento, California, in 1904. Five children were born of their union, as follows: James L., of this sketch; H. F., of San Jose, California; Grace, wife of F. H. Pierson, a well known capitalist of San Francisco; R. F., of San Francisco, is a buyer of cattle for Miller & Lux, the largest cattle company in the West; and Ethel, wife of M. Dineen, a clerk in the auditor's office of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, at San Francisco.

Having acquired the rudiments of his education in the rural schools of his native county, James L. Gwinn was graduated from the Woodland, California, High School in 1890, and from the Sacramento Business College in 1892. The following three years he was in the employ of the Wells-Fargo Express Company, at Sacramento, and for two years thereafter was engaged in stock raising on his father's cattle ranch. He was subsequently with the Wood-Curtis Company, wholesale commission merchants, for two years. Coming to Butte, Montana, March 17, 1897, Mr. Gwinn was employed as an underground miner for the Boston & Montana Copper Mining Company for two years, and since that time has been actively identified with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company. Beginning work as a common miner, Mr. Gwinn, in 1907, was made shift boss at the Anaconda mine, and in January, 1908, was placed in the same position at the J. I. C. Mine. Transferred to the Belmont Mine in August, 1914, he served for more than a year as shift boss, and in November, 1918, was promoted to his present responsible position as superintendent of the mine, and in its management is meeting with unquestioned success, ably supervising the work of the 500 men over which he has control. Mr. Gwinn's offices are at the mine, which is located at the corner of Grant and Mercer streets.

Mr. Gwinn, who has never married, resides at No. 63½ West Broadway. He is a democrat in his political affiliations, and fraternally he is a member of Butte Aerie No. 11, Order of Eagles.

LAWRENCE WAKEFIELD. Human achievement in every community is the result of the character found in the citizenship, and particularly in the purpose to serve others as well as themselves and to promote the common weal as well as lay up material treasure. Laying a proper foundation for society involves a civic respect for the Biblical injunction "love thy neighbor as thyself" as well as the application of the golden rule "do unto others as you would have others do unto you." With the spirit of leadership in any community in harmony with these accepted tenents of right living and dealing, its development is certain to be along right lines and its destiny is a progressive and enlightened course. Applying this recognized standard of measurement to the aspiring municipal communities of Montana, Forsyth is readily passed as meeting the requirements and the opinion is ventured that with its continued direction by minds as versatile and discerning as those which have been and are in action today its commanding importance among the cities of the commonwealth is assured. Those most responsible for this favorable result are the men who have visioned the future and fashioned their conduct with an unselfish eye to the common good and the welfare of all, and among this company is the ranchman, land broker and man of affairs, Lawrence Wakefield.

Mr. Wakefield has not the distinction of being a pioneer in point of time, but rather during the decade of his residence in the treasure commonwealth has been a pioneer in initiative, in leadership, in causing things to happen which had not happened before. Best of all his work has been animated by a purpose to accomplish something, not only for himself, but for others outside the realm of real estate and the ranch.

He came into this locality with an experience as a successful farmer and stock man and with a scientific as well as a practical knowledge of land. That knowledge made obvious his choice of the land business and the promoting of immigration to a region where good rural homes were awaiting the developer on terms easy to meet. As a means of showing his faith in this country and his sincerity in recommending it to others, he became a land owner and rancher himself, and thus his own toil and efforts have contributed to the material improvement of the locality where he cast his lot.

His methods of conducting business have been characteristic of the man. He did not wait in his office for a chance seeker, but placed his bargains before the traveling public in bold letters and assured buyers that he was handling lands at owners' prices and not resorting to the questionable methods that have brought the real estate game into disrepute at times. For such boldness he was indirectly attacked by jealous competitors and others who could not see that his success was their own ultimate success as well. The poison of the knocker on another man's legitimate enterprise only boosts him and harms but the knocker himself, and thus Mr. Wakefield has continued to sing the praises of Montana and of Rosebud County. The homes established in this region through his agency are owned by emigrants from numerous states of the Mississippi Valley, and much wealth has been added to Montana because of his efforts in this and other directions.

Not all the money he has made for himself in such work has remained in his own purse. As the occasion arose he has encouraged community and state and even national movements which called for and received liberal donations from him. As a means of benefiting the youth he has contributed numerous sums of educational institutions, has opened his purse to the promotion of the Gospel and church extension, promptly contributed to movements for the establishment of the work of the Young Men's Christian Association and has given time and money toward the Interchurch World Movement, thus putting himself on the right side of every educational and moral question. In the statewide movement for prohibition in Montana he was the chief contributor to the fund necessary to make the dry fight in his locality, and signed the petition circulated to start the battle and was one of the most active of the Forsyth men in the ranks. For his part in the work he was called from his home and assaulted by henchmen of the saloon interests with whom he had never had a personal difference, but the assaulting party picked himself up from the porch of the gritty law and order advocate a wiser man.

So much for his patriotism locally, but he also demonstrated his untarnished Americanism and supreme loyalty to the flag when he gave four sons to the cause of freedom and universal liberty during the World war. One of these Legionaires went with the Expeditionary forces to France in 1917, and with the "Gypsy Division" helped win the first laurels for the United States at Cantigny with a record of six months on the firing line. He escaped death but came off with scars made by German gas and with promotion to a sergeant before the armistice was signed. Mr. Wakefield carried his portion of the burden of the Red Cross and other auxiliary work of the war, and emphasized his farming venture for the production of more food while the struggle was going on. He encouraged his sons in the trenches with letters and newspaper accounts of what was happening at home, and lent inspiration to the community by his public utterances upon the exigencies of the situation and pointed out the plain duty of every young man physically fit to fight the common and world enemy to a finish. For one of his addresses he received congratulatory messages from many of the leading papers, public men and heads of institutions, complimenting him upon being the father of four soldier sons and upon the sentiment of his address. Colonel Roosevelt said: "I appreciate your talk and thank you for it." The Literary Digest asked about the four Wakefield boys as did the War Department, and the president of his old college at Shenandoah, Iowa, wrote a congratulatory letter upon having so many sons in the service fighting the world's battles and upon the sentiment of his speech, endorsing "every word of it."

Lawrence Wakefield was born in Cass County, Iowa, December 25, 1869, and grew up in the home of a successful farmer, George W. Wakefield, who was born at Mercer, Maine, in 1825, and moved out to Iowa in 1853. He reared a large family of children to places of honor and responsibility in the world. After many years of residence in Cass County George W. Wakefield moved to Hazen, Arkansas, where he was a merchant and hotel man and altogether his business interests were prosecuted with success, so that he left a good estate when he died at Omaha, where he spent the last years of his life at the home of his daughter. His death occurred at the age of eighty years ten months. He was a republican in politics and a Methodist. His wife was Miss Mary J. Clare, who was born near Lowell, Massachusetts, July 6, 1828, and died in Cass County, Iowa, in November, 1905, aged seventy-eight. She was the mother of twelve children, and those still living are: George W. of Iowa; Charles, of Valentine, Nebraska; Henry H., of Crookston, Nebraska; Wilbur I., who was adopted by his aunt Mrs. Wingate of Marysville, California; Lawrence; and Mrs. May L. Keaton of Omaha.

Lawrence Wakefield is descended from Puritan stock, his first ancestors landing in Massachusetts in 1636. His forbears were John Wakefield of the first generation; James Wakefield of the second; John Wakefield of the third; John of the fourth; Ezekiel of the fifth; John of the sixth; George W. of the seventh; Lawrence being of the eighth generation. The genealogy of the family was published in a 374 page book in 1897 by Dr. Homer Wakefield of Bloomington, Illinois, entitled the "Wakefields of the World," a work that can be found in many of the national libraries, the pages abundantly testifying to their active work in the business, social and religious affairs of the many states and communities wherever they have cast their lot. The high standards and achievements of the family as measured in this volume have no exception in the career of Lawrence Wakefield.

He has always been grateful for the fact that his youth was spent on a farm where he acquired a vigorous constitution. He attended the common schools of Iowa, and in 1890 graduated from the Western Normal College of Shenandoah. For a year or two he taught in Nebraska, and began his career as a practical farmer southeast of Atlantic, Iowa, where he entered the sheep business. He soon became an authority on this industry, and lectured before Farmers Institutes and wrote many newspaper articles on the subject. There as in Montana he showed himself a leader in community affairs, served as secretary of the local telephone company, was census enumerator of his county in 1890 and in 1900, and was the first enumerator to finish his work in the county the latter year. A practical dairyman, he was for a time secretary of the Farmers Co-operative Creamery Company.

Eventually feeling that section of the Middle West too crowded, he sought a new locality, went to Nebraska and proved up a homestead in Knox County, but later returned to Cass County, Iowa, and from there came to Montana in 1910.

In this state he invested much capital in lands in Rosebud County, and these holdings have continued to expand with the passing years. In 1911 he formed a partnership with Arthur Bland in the real estate business, and during the following seven years they did a business aggregating in value a million dollars. Since the dissolution of the firm in 1918 Mr. Wakefield has carried on the business alone.

Among his associates Mr. Wakefield has earned the reputation of being a very keen business man, a judge of men and affairs, properly conservative, but with a wonderful enthusiasm and energy whenever committed by his judgment to any undertaking. For several years past he has given much of his time and influence to securing the success of one of the country's greatest inventors. In 1918 he became identified with the A. L. Powell Power Company, Incorporated, serving on its board of directors over three years. Only after long and thorough investigation did he take up and enlist himself heartily in the lever mechanism invented by Mr. Powell, and after proving to his satisfaction that this invention was mathematically and scientifically correct became next to Mr. Powell the heaviest investor in the corporation, and helped raise the money to finish the first gas engine which afforded an adequate test of the mechanism. Mr. Wakefield has regarded it as the greatest honor of his life to be a director in the company. He was present at the test at Washington, D. C., March 12, 1921, when a 6-cylinder Franklin engine, equipped with the Powell mechanism, showed a gain of nearly 100 per cent increased efficiency with the same consumption of fuel. The invention doubles the work done by any engine through a technique of levers for transmitting the power of the piston stroke to the crank shaft. Mr. Wakefield has always been grateful to the Town of Shenandoah not only for the education he received there but because while attending college he won the wife and companion of thirty years. A few weeks after his graduation he went to Washington County, Nebraska, and on July 27, 1890, he and Miss Frances J. VanValin were married at her home. She was born in Washington County, Nebraska, daughter of Alfred and Adaline Van Valin, and finished her education in the Western Normal College at Shenandoah, Iowa. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Wakefield are: Herbert E., a graduate of Iowa Agricultural College at Ames, a practical farmer at Howard, Montana, who married Bertha Mace and has two children; Arthur R., now a senior in Bozeman College; Alfred W., a senior in the State University at Missoula; Wayne W., a student of vocational training; Sylvia, who attended the State Normal School and is a teacher in the public schools; Rex R., an employe of the Jewel Tea Company at Billings; Esther T., a high school student; and Marjorie B. in the grade schools.

Lieut. Arthur R. Wakefield left college to enlist in April, 1917, and though rejected because of two missing fingers was accepted in the draft July 22, 1918, and remained with the colors until discharged in January, 1919. Alfred W. Wakefield enlisted June 26, 1916, in the Montana National Guard for Mexican border service, was mustered out of that service on the 5th of November of the same year, and a few months later, March 27, 1917, left college to join the National army and for fourteen months was in France, receiving his honorable discharge March 6, 1919. Wayne W. Wakefield enlisted from college April 20, 1917, and was the first Rosebud County soldier to go overseas. He participated in the battles of Cantigny, Soissons, St. Mihiel and the Argonne Forest, and accompanied the Army of Occupation into Germany. He won a Croix de Guerre and Victory Medal with four bars. The fourth soldier son was Rex R., who enlisted at nineteen with the consent of his parents in the navy.

Such a spontaneous manifestation of patriotism from one family as shown in this record is rare indeed, and inspires a parental pride words can not describe. Moreover the service is a rare one in a state and distinguishes the community from which four members of one family are drawn at the call of patriotism. Thus Forsyth for a time held the attention of the nation as a center of inspiration and patriotism.

Thus Lawrence Wakefield has done more and is doing more than to make a success of his own business affairs. He has lived and labored so that some of the rewards of success might make it easier for some of the youth of Montana to become good American citizens. He has never sought wealth for the pleasure of possessing it, but has kept it busy in a judicious exercise of philanthropic purpose. He has achieved and is achieving the purposes which animated him in the beginning of his career, and in doing so escaped the public criticism earned by those who live and labor and hoard.

Fred C. Burks. Whatever may be the real cause, about which political economists, philanthropists and social service workers wisely differ, it remains true that in every community there exists certain individuals so determined upon lawlessness that restraint is necessary in order to protect the innocent. Hence laws have to be formulated and officers elected to carry them out and in the choice of these officers lies in great part the efficacy of the laws. This is particularly true in the selection of men to fill the dangerous and responsible office of sheriff of a county and comparatively few men possess every desirable requirement for such position. Physical strength and endurance must be combined with calm judgment, and high order of personal courage, a keen intellect, dexterity and adroitness that will enable him to meet any possible advantage taken by the lawless with which class much of his duty is concerned. Thus endowed is Fred C. Burks who is now serving as sheriff of Granite County.

Fred C. Burks was born at Havana, Illinois, May 12, 1872, a son of George W. Burks, and comes of Irish origin, the Burks having been established here by a forebear who came from Ireland to this country long prior to the American Revolution, and located in Virginia. George W. Burks was born at Owensboro, Kentucky, in 1837, and died at Philipsburg, Montana, in 1913. In young manhood he went to Havana, Illinois, where he was married and became a shoe merchant, remaining in that line of business until 1903, when he retired and came to Philipsburg. All of his mature years he was a republican. The Methodist Episcopal Church had in him one of its faithful and working members, and he was equally consistent to living up to the ideals of the Masonic order of which he was a member. During the war between the North and South, he served in the Union Army. The maiden name of his wife was Frances Wheeler, she was born in what is now West Virginia, in 1840, and died at Havana, Illinois, in 1882. Their children were as follows: Sarah B., who married John B. Harris, an electrical engineer, lives at Philipsburg; Edwin who died at the age of twenty-one years; Lucy, who married A. S. Huffman, a grocer of Philipsburg, died in 1914, but Mr. Huffman survives her and has been chairman of the county commissioners for twelve years; Sheriff Burks, whose name heads this review; and George O., who is a grocer of Deer Lodge, Montana.

Fred C. Burks attended the public schools of Havana, Illinois, and was graduated from its high school in 1889. Following his completion of his studies, he came to Philipsburg, and was one of the pioneers of this city, working at milling and mining. When the Spanish-American war broke out, he enlisted, and participated in the Cuban campaign under General Shafter, being mustered out of the army in 1899 as first sergeant. Returning home he re-entered the mills, and was employed in them until 1908 at which time he engaged in the forest service of the United States Government, and remained a federal employe on through 1915. In 1916 he was elected sheriff of Granite County, and re-elected in 1918 on the republican ticket. His offices are opposite the courthouse. In addition to serving as sheriff, Mr. Burks made a record for himself as marshal of Philipsburg following the close of the war with Spain. He belongs to the Presbyterian Church, of which he is a trustee. Fraternally he belongs to Flint Creek Lodge No. 11, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Philipsburg Lodge, Loyal Order of Moose, and of the Spanish-American Veteran Association.

In 1900 Sheriff Burks was married at Philipsburg to Miss Elizabeth Gambell, a daughter of John and Margaret (Fulton) Gambell of Winfield, Iowa. Mr. Gambell died at Winfield, Iowa, being at that time a retired pioneer farmer. Mrs. Gambell survives her husband and continues to reside at Winfield. The children born to Sheriff and Mrs. Burks are as follows: Edwin, who was born April 21, 1901, was graduated from the Philipsburg High School in 1918, and is now in the employ of the Cordts Reduction Mills of Philipsburg; Margaret, who was born July 29, 1902, is attending the Granite County High School; Carlisle, who was born October 3, 1904, is attending the Granite County High School; John, who was born April 11, 1906, is also attending the Granite High School; Oscar, who was born October 7, 1907, and James who was born in April, 1909, are both attending the city public schools; and Ruth, who died at the age of six years.

Sheriff Burks is one of the fearless and efficient men of this part of Montana, a terror to criminals, and a source of comfort to the law-abiding element. While he is relentless in his pursuit of those who have broken the law, he is equally firm in insisting that those under his protection receive justice and will not tolerate any infringement upon his authority in this matter. Personally he has a countless number of friends and everyone respects him. His services to the county are invaluable, and to him is due much of the credit for the maintenance of law and order during one of the most trying periods in the history of the county.

Mrs. Mary Monroe. The romance in the life of the aged lady, known to her tribe as the Fox woman, but to her white neighbors as Mrs. Mary Monroe, reads like a novel, but it is true, and the fact that she and her husband lived very happily together after consummating their love affair, is also authentic. Coming to the tribe of Blackfoot Indians a youth of eighteen years as a representative of the great Hudson Bay Company, Hugh Monroe, a Frenchman, was hampered in his dealings on account of his fear of them which grew out of his not understanding them or their methods of doing business. While trying to negotiate with them for the purchase of their furs, he happened to see the daughter of the chief, known to her people as the Fox woman, and a love which never died was kindled in his breast, but he was not permitted to speak with her, nor could he tell if he had made a favorable impression upon her, for the little Indian maiden modestly dropped her eyes and ran away. Rendered almost desperate through learning of the presence of another suitor who was a member of her tribe, Hugh Monroe sought some other means to recommend him to her father and in vain, until one day he saw the chief trying to light his pipe. Holding out his hand he motioned to the chief to let him have it, and the surrounding Indians thought that had sealed his fate, as this pipe was not for the hands of strangers. Probably, however, the chief knew more of this young man's character than he had hitherto admitted, for to the surprise of all, he gave it to young Monroe and stolidly watched him. This was long before the days of matches, and travelers like young Monroe carried what was called a sun glass with them. By directing the sun's rays on the glass he was able to light the pipe, and after taking a puff of it to see that it was properly lighted, he handed it back to the chief. The latter uttered a cry which made the young man feel that his last hour had come, but which was merely a summons for his warriors with whom he held a conference, all of them smoking the pipe young Monroe had lighted. As a result of this conference he was made a member of the tribe and the husband of the Indian princess. They were married according to Indian custom, the man raising his right hand in the presence of the chief and promising to remain with and care for the woman the rest of her life. He was furnished with a wigwam, richly supplied with furs, and the chief taking him to his band of horses told him to take what he wanted of them. The confidence displayed in him was never regretted. He took his wife's name of Fox among the Indians as was their custom, and lived with the tribe the remainder of his life, learning their language and wearing their dress. He and his wife had ten children. She survives him and is now ninety-two years old.

Mrs. Monroe is cared for by her niece, Mrs. Maggie Fox, a daughter of Edward and Maggie (Monroe) Houseman. Mrs. Maggie Fox has two daughters and one son, namely: Edith D., Olive C., and Cecil. These children have been well educated and attended both the Government and public schools of Montana. The daughters have magnificent heads of hair reaching to their knees. Mrs. Fox's mother was a very handsome French half-breed, who was also noted for the luxuriance of her hair. When sitting in a chair she could throw her hair over the back of the chair and it would reach to the floor in great waves. Leonard Fox, husband of Mrs. Maggie Fox, was a veteran of the war between the North and South. The Fox residence is at Glacier Park, where the family is engaged in ranching. Their neighborly kindness has made them a large circle of friends.

Jess L. Angstman. The United States commissioner of Harlem is the well known Jess L. Angstman, who has been a factor in the business and social life of Blaine County since May, 1912. He is also engaged in the real estate business and ranching, a homesteader of the Turner locality of Blaine County, and a stockholder and a member of the board of directors in both the Blaine County State Bank and the First National Bank of Savoy.

Mr. Angstman was born on a homestead near Aberdeen, South Dakota, February 25, 1890, a son of Jacob H. and Emma (Trout) Angstman. He is a grandson of Peter Angstman, who was born in the State of New York and the son of a German from the Fatherland. Peter Angstman was a farmer, and he died at Farmington, Minnesota, where his widow still lives. They were the parents of two sons, Frank and Jacob, and three daughters, Mrs. Maud Vaux, of Sidney, Montana, Mrs. Emma Straight, of Farmington, Minnesota, and Julia, who died as Mrs. Charles Trout.

Jacob H. and Emma Angstman settled as pioneers in the vicinity of Aberdeen, South Dakota. They were from the State of New York, their native commonwealth. Jacob Angstman died at Princeton, Minnesota, in 1910, at the age of fifty-two, and his widow still survives in that Minnesota town at the age of fifty-seven. In their family were eleven sons and two daughters: Walter and Warren, twins, the former a farmer at Big Lake, Minnesota, and the latter with his mother; Laura, who married James Wheeler and resides at Princeton; Albert, an attorney at law at Helena, Montana; Jess

L., the United States commissioner; Maynard, a printer in Chicago; Lawrence, who is a farmer near Turner in Blaine County; Forest, who is engaged in farming near the old home at Princeton, Minnesota; Esther, a stenographer in Minneapolis; George and Ralph, twin brothers and students of law in the Northwest College of Law in Minneapolis; and John and Ezra, who are both high school students in Princeton, Minnesota. The three soldier sons who were in service during the World war were Albert, who was in the navy, and Maynard and Lawrence, both in the infantry. The two latter saw overseas service, and Maynard participated in some of the memorable engagements of the war, including the battle of Argonne Forest.

The common schools and the high school of Princeton, Minnesota, gave to Jess L. Angstman his early literary training, and he later studied law in the St. Paul College of Law, working his way through the latter institution. He then came West to Montana to engage in newspaper work in Helena. He was chosen by the Harlem News stockholders to take the editorial and managerial charge of that publication, and he carried on the work for fourteen months, until the paper was sold to its present owner, H. C. Anderson. During the time Mr. Angstman was the editor of the paper he was appointed a United States commissioner as the successor of John Collins, and on leaving the paper he opened a real estate office, and has since applied himself assiduously to this and his official duties. He entered his homestead in March, 1913, proved it up, and has been farming it and other adjacent lands since.

In his political affiliations Mr. Angstman is a democrat, having voted with that party since casting his first presidential ballot for Woodrow Wilson. He followed in the political footsteps of his father, but his brothers represent about equally the two dominant political parties. Mr. Angstman is a member of the Masonic fraternity, being a Blue Lodge Mason, and during the World war he was actively identified with the work carried on for its support, serving as a bond salesman and was an associate member of the Legal Advisory Board of Blaine County.

In St. Paul, Minnesota, February 22, 1916, Mr. Angstman was married to Miss Lorena Jesmer, who was born near Princeton, Minnesota, May 26, 1893, a daughter of Sidney and Mary J. (Malotte) Jesmer. She has two brothers, Lyle and Lester, both of St. Paul and Marble, Minnesota, respectively. A son, Jess L., Jr., has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Angstman.

George Thomas Young played a conspicuous part in the early history of the City of Livingston. He was regarded as one of the most fearless men in the state, and his bravery was an invaluable asset to the community at a time when life and property were by no means as well respected as at present. He gave up his life while performing his duties as a police officer. Two of his brothers are well known citizens of Montana, Charles Young of Lewistown, and Dr. W. E. of Three Forks.

George Thomas Young was born near Fredericton, New Brunswick, April 2, 1854, son of William and Margaret (Conway) Young. His father was a native of Scotland and in early manhood settled in New Brunswick, where he married. Miss Conway was a native of New Brunswick. They were the parents of four sons and one daughter: Charles of Lewistown, Montana; Margaret, who lives at Bangor, Maine; Dr. William E. of Three Forks, Montana; Alexander J. of Grass Range, Montana; and George T.

Left an orphan at the age of two years George Thomas Young had to fight his own battles from childhood. At the age of twelve he was carrying mail. At eighteen he volunteered for the service of the Mounted Police in what was then Northwest territory, now the Province of Manitoba, and for two years performed his duty and gained the esteem of his comrades in the service and frequent commendation from his superiors. For one year he was steward on a boat plying between Buffalo and Chicago, and another two years were spent in Minnesota, where in 1879 he married Miss Clara Shaw, formerly of Hartland, New Brunswick.

From Minnesota George T. Young came to Rosebud, Montana, and joined his brother Charles then engaged in the mail and express service of the Northern Pacific. As the construction of that road was extended George T. Young remained in the service in various capacities until Livingston was reached, when he decided to locate and grow up with the town. For a number of years he was in the draying business, and when the city was incorporated he was appointed its first city marshal by Mayor Miles. He left a wife and four children.

Thomas C. Sherman is the son of Edward and Sarah (White) Sherman and was born in Humboldt County, Iowa, January 21, 1867. He was educated in the common schools of his native county and at Humboldt Academy. When still in his teens he entered the First National Bank of Bancroft, Iowa, and progressed steadily in his chosen field of work until he had become cashier. Temporarily forsaking active banking business, he entered the employ of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company as right-of-way agent and was later made assistant secretary, a position which he held for several years. Desiring to re-enter the banking business, he accepted a position as vice president of the First National Bank of Lewistown, Montana, a position which he holds at the present time. Mr. Sherman was married, June 14, 1899, to Miss Eva A. Lantry and three children help to brighten a happy and contented home: Edward Lantry who is a senior at Harvard College, Dorothy E., who was graduated from the Fergus County High School as a member of the class of 1921, and Richard T., who is a student at the same high school. Mr. Sherman has always found time to devote to affairs of public interest and has served as treasurer of the Fergus County Chapter American Red Cross, treasurer of the Lewistown Chamber of Commerce, member of the executive committee, the Council of Boy Scouts, and trustee of the Fergus County High School. He is a member of the Catholic Church and devoted to the principles of the democratic party.

George C. Bennett. Possessing much executive force and ability, and thoroughly conversant with everything pertaining to mechanical engineering, George C. Bennett, of Butte, superintendent of the Leonard Mine, at Meaderville, is actively and prominently identified with one of the foremost industries of Montana, which has, seemingly, an inexhaustible supply of rich and valuable minerals. A son of John G. Bennett, he was born, September 20, 1869, in Keweenaw County, Michigan, of English ancestry.

Born in England in 1845, John G. Bennett immigrated to the United States in early life, locating first in Pennsylvania, from there going to Keweenaw County, Michigan, where he was successfully engaged in mining pursuits for many years, accumulating considerable property. Moving to Duluth, Minnesota, in 1899, he lived there practically retired from business cares until his death in 1910. He was a republican in politics, and while in Michigan served a number of terms as justice of the peace. Religiously he belonged to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and fraternally he was a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Order of Masons; of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and of the Knights of Pythias.

John G. Bennett married, in Keweenaw County, Michigan, Laura Cox, who was born in Wisconsin, in 1850, and is now residing in Duluth, Minnesota. Seven children were born of their union, as follows: George C., of this sketch; Laura, who died in childhood; John, of Duluth, Minnesota, is employed in the Government service; Myra, wife of Capt. Charles Green, captain of a harbor tug at Duluth, Minnesota, died in 1915; William, of Portland, Oregon, is proprietor of a foundry and machine shop; Jennie, a stenographer, resides with her mother in Duluth; and Frank, residing in Houghton, Michigan, is manager of the wholesale department of the Bridgeman & Russell Company, of Duluth, produce brokers.

Obtaining his first knowledge of books in the rural schools of Keweenaw County, Michigan, George C. Bennett subsequently attended night schools in Duluth, and after coming to Butte continued his studies, specializing in mechanical engineering and geology, acquiring an education that has amply fitted him for his present responsible position in the mining world. But twenty years old when he arrived in Butte, Mr. Bennett entered the employ of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company as a miner, and displayed such interest in his work, and so much ability, that he was ere long made timber boss, afterwards being promoted to shift boss, and then advanced to assistant foreman, a position that he ably filled until 1913. In that year he was made superintendent of the Leonard Mine, an important and responsible position which he has since filled to the entire satisfaction of the company, and in a manner reflecting credit upon himself as an adviser and as a manager. This mine, which is situated at the eastern end of the firm's holdings, in Meaderville, was formerly one of the Boston-Montana Company's properties, and is quite valuable.

Mr. Bennett married, December 24, 1895, Lydia Tyack, a graduate of the public schools of Virginia City, Nevada. Her father, James Tyack, born and reared in the East, journeyed by way of the Isthmus of Panama to California, thence to Nevada, where he was a pioneer worker at the old Comstock Mine. In 1889, having accumulated a competency in his mining operations, he located in Butte, Montana, where he spent the remaining years of his life. His wife, whose maiden name was Hannah Peters, still resides in Butte. Mr. and Mrs. Bennett have one child, Harry P. Bennett, born December 11, 1896. In 1915 he entered the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, where he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and is now, in the spring of 1920, a senior in the law department of that institution, working for the degree of Doctor of Laws. Mr. Bennett is identified with the republican party, and affiliates with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Episcopal Church. Socially he is a member of the Silver Bow Club. His home, at No. 420 North Jackson Street, is very attractive, and its doors are ever open to the many friends of himself and family.

JOHN WACHHOLZ. As a builder and upbuilder of the community of Forsyth no one individual has been more conspicuous than John Wachholz, the prominent contractor whose name is synonymous with practical skill in the art of carpentry and also with efficient executive management that has enabled him to build up a complete and adequate force and organization for the handling of every type of construction work.

Mr. Wachholz who first came to this section of Montana in 1893, was born at Luzk in the State of Volhynia in Little Russia March 22, 1868. His father Andrew Wachholz was born in the province of Brandenburg, Germany, and as a child accompanied his family to Russia during the exodus of the Germans to that country. Andrew spent the rest of his life in Little Russia. He married Elizabeth Kistmann. The oldest of their seven children, Christ Wachholz, is also a resident of Forsyth, is a mechanic, and furnished two sons for the World war, both going overseas, one with the navy and the other in a machine gun company.

However, it was John Wachholz the youngest of the family, who first left the old home in Little Russia and came to the United States. He had acquired a fair education in his native land, and though his father was a carpenter he learned his trade under a different master as the result of a three year apprenticeship. In 1889 at the age of twenty-one he sailed alone on a White Star liner from Hamburg, Germany, and on the 8th day arrived at Halifax, thence going across Canada to Winnipeg, and coming into the United States in North Dakota, making his first stop at Nitche. Although an accomplished worker with tools, he determined to make himself familiar with the English language and gain a knowledge of American ways as a farm worker. He hired out to a farmer by the month in North Dakota, and remained about two and a half years in that employment. By that time he had acquired a considerable knowledge of the English language, which enabled him to resume his trade. Thus in 1893 he came to Forsyth as a carpenter in the employ of the Northern Pacific Railway Company. Later he was made foreman of a crew of house carpenters and remained in the service of the Great Northern eighteen years and six months. With this long record of faithful and efficient service he left the railway company and set up an independent business of his own as a contractor and builder at Forsyth, though in recent years his personal business affairs have become so extensive as to require practically all his time.

Some of his conspicuous work as a builder is in evidence in the homes of Myerhoff, McCuiston, Frank Runyan, and also his own splendid residence. He also put up the brick block known as the Wachholz Block, an office and store structure, the chief of its kind in the county seat. Through his enterprise a number of other houses and blocks have been erected and sold to others.

John Wachholz though of European birth exemplifies those qualities which make a type of citizenship of the highest value to America. He practiced industry from the first, became a student of our customs and laws, and fitted himself for the intelligent use of the franchise, though office seeking has never been attractive to him and he has been satisfied to preside over the destinies of his own fortune. He took out his first papers in St. Paul, and was granted final proof of citizenship in Glendive. His first national ballot was cast for General Harrison for President in 1892, and he has been steadily a republican.

At Forsyth Mr. Wachholz married Mrs. Sophia Gunderson. She was born in Sweden and came to the United States at the age of sixteen. In Minnesota she became the wife of Nels Gunderson and soon afterward they came to Montana and located at Forsyth, where Mr. Gunderson died leaving no children. Mr. and Mrs. Wachholz have a daughter Marie Elizabeth, born February 27, 1910.

The Wachholz home, an example of its owner's skill and industry, was erected in 1916, and nothing was omitted to make its appointments complete as a model residence. It contains eight rooms, full basement and laundry, and is one of the very attractive residences of Rosebud County.

Mr. Wachholz is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Independent Order of Foresters. During the World war he gave free office space in the Wachholz Block for the use of the Council of Defense. Moreover, he purchased his quota of securities and contributed to other war objects, and left nothing undone in the way of a complete patriotic record.

JOHN A. LOWRY, mayor of Big Timber and president of the board of trustees of the Big Timber Carnegie Library, is a prominent business man of that city and has been in Montana for over twenty years.

He was born at Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, December 24, 1871. His maternal ancestors were Scotch-Irish and settled in Pennsylvania in colonial times. His father Albert S. Lowry was born at Chambersburg in 1843, was reared in his native state, was married in Franklin County, and in 1878 moved to Dickinson County, Kansas, where he was an early settler and farmer. He died there in 1912. He was a republican and a member of the Lutheran Church and for a number of years was a trustee of the Dickinson County High School and held other township offices. He was affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Sons and Daughters of Justice. Albert S. Lowry married Amanda Snyder, who was born near Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, in 1846 and died in Dickinson County, Kansas, in 1914. Of their children John A. was the third. Anna L., the oldest, lives at Waverly, Massachusetts, wife of Martin L. Baughey. Carrie L. is the wife of Ira J. Miller, bookkeeper and timekeeper for the Government in the Bremerton Navy Yards at Washington and a resident of Seattle. Curtis M. is a salesman living at Enid, Oklahoma; Maude is the wife of Guy Hall, county surveyor, living at Chapman, Kansas; Elsie F. is unmarried and is a stenographer and bookkeeper at Seattle, Washington; William L. is a mail clerk living in Kansas City, Kansas; Lesta B., the youngest of the family, is the wife of J. B. Gleason, auditor for the Northern Pacific Railway at Billings.

John A. Lowry attended the rural schools of Dickinson County, Kansas, from the time he was seven years of age and graduated from the County High School there in 1892. He became a teacher and it was in that capacity that he was first known in Montana. For many years he taught in Dickinson County and in 1896 graduated from the State Normal School at Emporia, Kansas. He then taught another period of two years in Dickinson County and in April, 1898, came to Lewis and Clark County, Montana, where he taught for four years. The fourth year he was principal of the East Helena school. In 1902 he came to Big Timber and was principal of schools for three years. In 1905 Mr. Lowry engaged in the real estate, loans, abstract, bonds and insurance business, and has perfected an organization immediately directed under his personal supervision that is one of the most complete and adequate of its kind in Southern Montana. In 1908 he also bought out the undertaking business of James A. Mulkern, and is owner of that establishment. He owns the office building and a lot on the north side of the Grand Hotel at Big Timber and has a modern home at 7th Avenue and Anderson Street. His undertaking parlors are at the corner of Anderson and Third Avenue.

An evidence of his prosperity since becoming a Montana resident is found in the fact that he owns a ranch of 305 acres twenty miles north of Big Timber in Sweetgrass County.

Mr. Lowry is county coroner, having been appointed in the fall of 1918 and regularly elected to the office in April, 1919. For six years he also served as a trustee of the public schools and is now president of the Sweetgrass County High School Board as well as president of the Carnegie Library Board. Mr. Lowry is a republican, a member of the Lutheran Church, is clerk of Big Timber Camp No. 10610, Modern Woodmen of America, is chancellor commander of Big Timber Lodge No. 25, Knights of Pythias, and a member of the Big Timber Chamber of Commerce and the Sweetgrass County Good Roads Association. He is a director and treasurer of the Big Timber Building & Loan Association.

In 1910 at Billings Mr. Lowry married Miss Addie L. Dean. Her mother is deceased. Her father George Dean is a retired farmer at Groton, South Dakota. Mrs. Lowry is a graduate of the high school at Grand Meadow, Minnesota, and received her Bachelor of Science degree from the Wesleyan University at Indianapolis, Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Lowry have one son, Curtis Dean, born April 11, 1911.

AL WRIGHT. Many people have a vague sort of impression that a successful career is something apart from the day's work, that it is a mysterious something, determined largely by fate or destiny. The truth is, as experience and observation constantly demonstrate, success depends entirely on how a man manipulates his personal assets. The material from which success is built is in the hand of each person, and the building is the work of every day. It consists in living life up to its maximum, and not in watching the clock. It is just a question of honest, earnest, persistent endeavor every day, every hour; of always trying to do the best and make the highest moment permanent. Because so many will not recognize these self-evident facts there will always be divisions between workers in the world. The man who takes these facts to heart will become the property owner, the employer, the man of independent means. The one who refuses to believe in them will continue to be the employe, the renter, the atom in the masses of humanity.

There are very few who inherit great wealth and of those few, not all by any manner of means retain their riches, so that it can be truthfully said that the majority of prosperous men of any community have attained to their success by the proper use of their natural and cultivated abilities, and one of the men of Broadwater County who measures up fully to the above requirements and suggestions is

Al Wright of Townsend, well known over a wide area as a farmer and stockraiser, and one of the members of the board of directors of that sound financial institution of this region, the State Bank of Townsend.

Al Wright came into the world at Winona, Minnesota, on April 22, 1864, as a son of Albert Wright, a native of Scotland, born in 1836. When a young man Albert Wright left his native land and came to the United States. and selecting Winona, Minnesota, as his new home, settled there, but died in the spring of 1864. He was married at Winona to Catherine Snyder, born in Bohemia in 1839. She died at Radersburg, Montana, in 1897, aged fifty-eight years, having married as her second husband Robert Hossfeld, who was born in Saxony, Germany, in 1836, and was murdered at Radersburg. By her first marriage Mrs. Hossfeld had but one child, Al Wright, and those by her second union were as follows: John, who is a rancher of Crow Creek Valley, Montana; Robert, who is a rancher of Radersburg, Montana; George, who is a rancher of Chico Springs, Montana; Minnie, who married William Holdaway, a stockraiser and mine owner of Radersburg; Richard, who is on the coast in Oregon; Joseph, who is a miner of Butte, Montana, and Catherine, who married Peter Tuchner, a rancher of Florence, Montana.

Al Wright attended the public schools of Radersburg, having been brought there by his mother and step-father, who, going from Winona, Minnesota, to Kansas, came thence to Virginia City, Montana, and finally to Radersburg. Mr. Hossfeld, who was a butcher by trade, established himself in business there and was one of the town's pioneer business men. After leaving St. John's Academy, which he attended for two years, Al Wright learned to be a cow puncher and was a regular cowboy in Jefferson, now Broadwater, County, and was so employed until 1906. He then went to wrangling horses and is still so engaged, being one of the most expert in this line in all of this region. Mr. Wright has branched out and is now an extensive raiser, buyer and seller of horses, mules and jacks. He is a large property owner, having a 240-acre ranch adjoining Townsend, another one of 320 acres twenty miles north of Townsend, and a third, which is twenty miles south of Townsend, and leases 750 acres additional for his stock operations. The comfortable modern house he occupies at Townsend is his property, and he owns another residence at Radersburg. In politics Mr. Wright is a democrat, but aside from exercising his right of suffrage does not participate in public life. A Mason, he maintains membership with Valley Lodge No. 21, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Townsend; Helena Consistory No. 3, Scottish Rite, in which he has been made a thirty-second degree Mason, and Algeria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Helena, Montana. Mr. Wright also belongs to Radersburg Lodge No. 61, Independent Order of Foresters, and has been a representative to the Grand Lodge of Montana. For some years he has been a stockholder of the Townsend State Bank, and is now on its board of directors, and his connection with it gives it added strength.

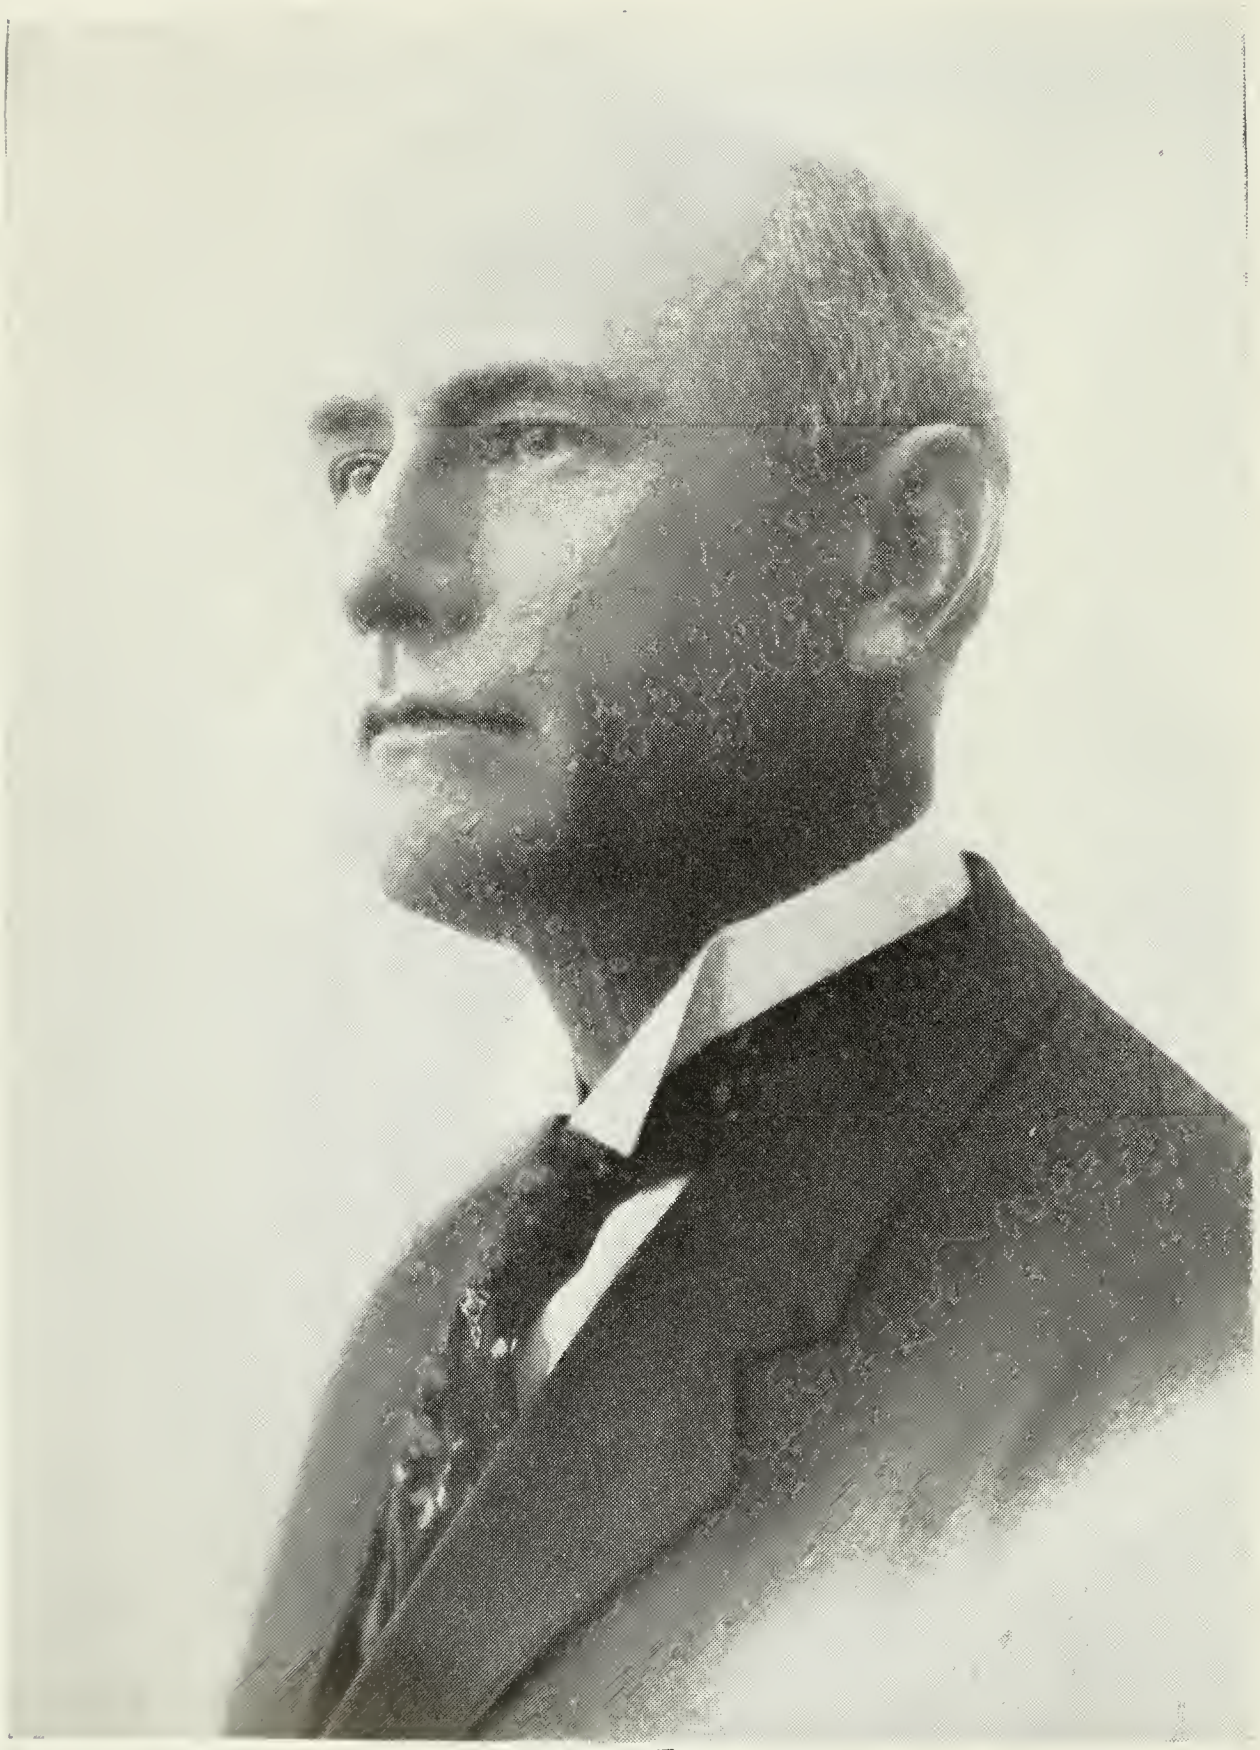
In 1890 Mr. Wright was married at Radersburg to Miss Susie Sitton, a daughter of James M. and Rachel (Yates) Sitton, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Sitton was a farmer of the Gallatin Valley, who came into Montana in 1870. Mr. and Mrs. Wright became the parents of a daughter, Vanga Fay, who was born September 1, 1891, was graduated from the Broadwater High School and attended Notre Dame University at Notre Dame, Indiana. She is now in the internal revenue office at Helena, Montana.

Timothy E. Crowley is a real Montana pioneer, having lived in the territory and state for over forty years. His experiences have given him a knowledge of the development of many localities, though his principal residence has been in Fergus County.

He was born at Brasher Falls, St. Lawrence County, New York, August 17, 1857, a son of John C. and Mary (Hurley) Crowley. His parents were both natives of County Cork, Ireland. His father died in 1883, at the age of eighty, and his mother in 1898. They were married in Ireland and made the voyage to America as their wedding trip. The voyage on an old sailing vessel required nine weeks and six days. They landed at Quebec, and in a few years settled in St. Lawrence County, New York, where John C. Crowley was a pioneer and by dint of hard work made a farm in the wilderness. Their first house was constructed of logs, and the flooring he whipsawed from native timber. Later he built a fine frame house of twelve rooms. He was a hard working man and very able in the management of his business affairs, and before his death had a large and well appointed farm of 480 acres. He never cared for public office, voting as a democrat, and was a member of the Catholic Church. He and his wife had ten children, seven sons and three daughters, three of whom are still living.

Timothy E. Crowley, the sixth child, spent his boyhood days on his father's farm in Western New York. He secured his education there and at the age of twenty-one came to Montana. The year of his arrival was 1878. From Corona, Utah, he came to Helena by stage coach and his first employment was working in the saw mill of A. M. Holter. He was there about three months, and then went to the mines at Belmont. A carpenter by trade, he was employed for about a year in erecting a five-stamp mill. After that he engaged in farming and stock raising near Canton, and on April 8, 1880, located on Spring Creek in what is now Fergus County. Subsequently he was in the merchandise business with the firm of Conrad & Muth at Belmont for about two years. He then engaged in the mercantile business for himself at Maryville, Montana, and on selling out his interests took up the teaming business at Helena. In 1888, having sold his interests at the capital, he returned to Canton and engaged in farming and stock raising. Three years later he made another move, this time locating at Lewistown and engaging in dairying and stock growing. Selling out there, he made his last and permanent move and is now living on his old homestead 2½ miles north of the court house. He has 300 acres, and it is used chiefly as a hay farm. Since 1915 he has been practically retired from the heavier responsibilities of farming. Mr. Crowley is a republican, a member of the Knights of Columbus and the Foresters, and is active in the Catholic Church.

May 7, 1882, about four years after he came to Montana, he married Ida May Sears. A large family of fourteen children were born to them, thirteen of whom are living: John E.; Daniel E., who married Nellie C. Kirbey and has three children; Annie F., who is the wife of Benjamin Muggy, is the mother of one child; Ida May, wife of Claud Pentcost, and they have three children: George, who married Ada Jossler and has three children; Clarence S., who enlisted January 9, 1918, and was a captain in the American Expeditionary Forces in France; Mary; Alice; Viola, attending high school at Lewistown; Dorothy,



Thomas J. Mathews

Cecelia and Timothy, Jr., attending the parochial schools; and Walter D.

THOMAS J. MATHEWS, of Roundup, one of the most learned corporation lawyers of this part of the state, is rendering his community valuable service, and making himself well known to his fellow citizens. He comes of an old and honored line, and is descended from Francis Cooke and James Childon, passengers of the historic Mayflower, who landed at Plymouth Rock, in what was later to become the State of Massachusetts in 1620. Seth Washburn, Mr. Mathews' great-great-grandfather on the maternal side of the house, commanded a regiment during the American Revolution, participating in the battle of Bunker Hill, and later was a member of the first constitutional convention of Massachusetts.

Thomas J. Mathews was born on his father's farm in Lincoln County, Wisconsin, June 18, 1865, a son of Thomas P. and Martha A. (Green) Mathews. Thomas P. Mathews was born in New York City, New York, December 9, 1825, and died at Merrill, Wisconsin, on December 29, 1887. His wife was born in Beaver Center, Crawford County, Pennsylvania, May 20, 1837, and died at Merrill, Wisconsin, on April 30, 1890. Educated in the public schools of Saint Lawrence County, New York, Thomas P. Mathews came West to Ripon, Green Lake County, Wisconsin, in 1854, and became one of the pioneer lumbermen of this county, and continued to operate in it and adjoining counties. Later he established a lumber business in Lincoln County, Wisconsin, and served that county as treasurer and held the office for three terms, and was also on the school board of his district for many years. The City of Merrill had him as its mayor in 1883. He was one of the organizers of the republican party in Wisconsin and always continued to be prominent in it. As an Odd Fellow he was also well known, and he was recognized as one of the most representative men of his locality.

Thomas J. Mathews was sent to the public school of Merrill, Wisconsin, and then began the study of law in the office of Bump & Hetzel, completing them in the law department of the University of Wisconsin, from which he was graduated in 1892, although he had passed his examinations and was admitted to the bar in 1891. For two years he was engaged in general practice at Merrill, and was then appointed city attorney and in 1893 was appointed by Governor George W. Peck, county judge, to fill out an unexpired term, and then in April, 1893, was elected to the office, and re-elected, serving in all eight and one-half years, or until January 1, 1902, when he resumed his practice. On January 21, 1911, he came to Roundup and shortly became attorney for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, and is still looking after its interests as well as those of the Republic Coal Company, the Roundup Coal & Mining Company, and other corporations. In 1914 he was elected city attorney of Roundup, and re-elected to succeed himself. Since 1913 he has been a trustee of the school board. Mr. Mathews belongs to the American Bar Association, the Sons of the American Revolution, the Mayflower Society of Massachusetts and was made a Mason by Virginia Falls Lodge No. 226, Merrill, Wisconsin, from which he demitted to Unity Lodge No. 71, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Roundup. Both he and Mrs. Mathews are members of Jewell Chapter No. 4, Order Eastern Star. Politically he has heretofore affiliated with the democratic party.

On October 29, 1896, Mr. Mathews was married to Grace Peck, born at Neenah, Wisconsin, a daughter of J. W. and Ann M. (Tipler) Peck, natives of England, both of whom are now deceased. They had twelve children, of whom Mrs. Mathews is the eighth in order of birth. Mr. and Mrs. Mathews have three children, namely: Grace, who is the wife of Harry G. Lennox of Chicago, Illinois; Thomas, who is attending the State University at Missoula, and John W., who is the youngest. Mr. Mathews is recognized as an authority upon corporation law, and he has put much concentrated thought and study on the subject, and is able to handle the problems presented to him in a manner which excites the admiration and envy of his associates, and inspires the confidence of those companies depending upon him for the settlement of all their litigation. His reasoning powers have been developed until he can see clearly and quickly the pensive lawsuits, which might ensue were some of the best way to secure justice, and to avoid long and ex- problems handled less ably.

FRED S. SANDEN, thirty-five years a resident at Helena, one of the city's leading merchants and business men, is of Swedish birth and parentage, and the chief significance of his career perhaps has been its hearty and steadfast Americanism. He was undoubtedly the right kind of immigrant, self-selected, has proved a decided asset to his adopted country and a brief sketch of his life has a particular importance in this publication.

He was born on a farm near Gothenborg, Sweden, November 14, 1863. His father S. S. Sanden was an honest, old-fashioned, everyday farmer, well to do for his time and country, and was frequently honored with offices of trust such as those corresponding to an American county commissioner, school director. He was also a deacon in his church.

Fred S. Sanden declares that he has attended school all his life, has been an aspirant for the "D. D." degree, which he interprets as "to do and to dare," and is not yet through. Of formal schooling he had the advantages of the common schools of Sweden from the age of seven to fourteen. In 1880 he came to America and for a time was a pupil in the public schools of Wausau, Wisconsin, and during his residence at Helena since 1885 he spent about a year when he first came in the Helena Business College.

A hard-muscled youth when he came to America at the age of sixteen, he had developed a good physique by work on the home farm. He earned his first wages in America in Northern Wisconsin, working in the saw mills, in the woods, as a carpenter and clerk in stores in and near Wausau. Leaving for Helena, Montana, in 1885, he found some employment at his trade, and also clerked in clothing stores for a few years. His willingness, industry and fidelity brought him promotion to the post of manager of such a store, and later he bought a half interest and was a partner until he sold out and bought a small general store, out of which he has developed one of the highest class department stores in Montana, a business employing forty people. He is president and general manager of this business, known as the Sanden & Ferguson Company.

While the head of a very successful business Mr. Sanden has always recognized the best claims of the community upon his time and means. During his early years at Helena he enlisted in Battery A of the Montana National Guard as a private, and served four years, having two commissions, one as first lieutenant and one as captain of the battery. This military service came before the Spanish-American war, so that he has never had any active service as a soldier, though his training enabled him to render some practical work. The Government let him know that he was too old for service in the most recent war, but he sent his only son who was in France ten months and on the front line three months. Mr. Sanden was elected as a democrat and served as a member of the Seventh and Ninth Legislative Assembly of Montana. He is a Jeffersonian democrat in political principles, and is also classed as a moderate single taxer. He believes in the taxation of privileges, and that for the successful conduct of the Government only three taxes are necessary, a land tax, income tax and inheritance tax.

Mr. Sanden is a member and director of the Commercial Club of Helena and a director of the Rotary Club. He has been a member of the Helena Public Library Board of Trustees continuously since 1911, and since 1914 has been president of the board. He is a member and former district deputy grand master of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, former treasurer of the Fraternal Order of Eagles and a member of the Woodmen of the World. He was reared a Lutheran and is now a member of the Unitarian Church or Society.

In 1893 at Helena he married Miss Jennie Peterson. Her father, P. J. Peterson, was a pioneer miner in Colorado and later located on his farm near Lawrence, Kansas. Mr. and Mrs. Sanden have two children: Eugene S., the son, born in 1895, graduated A. B. from Stanford Jr. University in California, and was in the National Army two years, ten months of that time in France. He is now a student at the University of Chicago. The daughter, Florence Sanden, born in 1900, is a student in the Montana University at Missoula.

Frederick A. Lyon. Among those who are justly entitled to be enrolled among the makers of Fergus County is Frederick R. Lyon, whose thirty-eight years of residence in this community have covered the era that marks the entire history of settlement, civilization, progress and final attainment of aims and ambitions. Although born in Ohio, where he had a comfortable home, he early saw the great possibilities which the West afforded, and as a consequence took up his abode in the unsettled region. He possessed no rich inheritance or influential friends to aid and assist him in establishing himself in business, but he was filled with high hopes and a laudable ambition to succeed, and a volition which shrank from no obstacles or difficulties that presented themselves to bar his progress.

Mr. Lyon was born at Columbus, Franklin County, Ohio, December 6, 1848, the second and only surviving child of the three sons and one daughter born to Israel and Theodosia (Vandine) Lyon. His father, who was born in 1808, near Rochester, Monroe County, New York, spent his early days in that state, and was married at Rochester to Theodosia Vandine, who was born there in 1812. In his youth Mr. Lyon had learned the carpenter trade, and upon his removal to Columbus engaged in contracting, a capacity in which he assisted in the building of the Ohio State Capitol at Columbus. Subsequently he held the position of state carpenter for several years, but in 1865 removed to Williamsburg, Iowa County, Iowa, where he followed his business as a carpenter and contractor until within a few years of his death, in 1892, his wife having passed away in the previous year. At the time of his arrival in Iowa County, Mr. Lyon, who was a pioneer of that locality, entered 160 acres of good land, and during the rest of his life combined farming with his other business enterprises. He was first a whig in politics and later a republican, and he and Mrs. Lyon were faithful members of the Baptist Church.

Frederick A. Lyon secured his early education in the public schools of Columbus, Ohio, and was but sixteen years of age when he left home with an elder brother, Mortimer, in April, 1865, and made the difficult journey overland to Williamsburg, Iowa, their father subsequently following them by rail, and then by stage. While living on the 160-acre farm, the youth continued his studies, although he had to walk three miles to attend school. Eventually he entered upon his career as school teacher, and during four winter terms drove five miles each way every day to instruct his classes. During this time he furthered his own educational knowledge by attendance at Grinnell College.

When Mr. Lyon started out as a farmer, it was in Thayer County, Nebraska, where he purchased 360 acres of land, but was unfortunate enough to do so right at the time of the grasshopper invasion. This disgusted him with Nebraska as a farming community and in the spring of 1879 he came to Jefferson County, Montana, traveling by rail from Omaha to the end of the Union Pacific Railway, and on the Oregon Short Line to Idaho Falls, where he took the stage-coach to Clancy, Jefferson County. There he engaged in keeping a roadhouse and dairy, finding plenty of custom among the passengers on the stage-line, but this did not satisfy him, and in 1880 he moved on to Helena, where he remained until the fall of 1882. At that time he went to the Forest Grove, on McDonald Creek, twenty miles from the present site of Lewistown, southeast. Fort Maginnis at that time was the nearest trading point, but Mr. Lyon courageously began his career as a homesteader on what was practically desert land. That proved the nucleus for his operations which have grown and developed and prospered until today he is the owner of 2,000 acres of valuable and productive land, of which he has about 300 acres under cultivation for farming, the remainder being given over to his 250 head of cattle. Mr. Lyon, always progressive, was one of the pioneers in the business of alfalfa growing in Fergus County and has met with much success in this department of agricultural work. He is a republican in his political views, and while he has never cared for public office, was one of the pioneer members of the school board in Fergus County, serving with Granville Stewart and C. L. Coder. In 1918 he served as register for his district during the first draft.

Mr. Lyon was married September 24, 1874, to Mary Elizabeth Jones, who was born near Utica, New York, and to this union there have been born seven children: Walter Hayes; Frank O., who married Mary Shepart and has two children, Margaret and Gerald; Anna Theodosia, wife of Lawrence W. Watson, who has four children, Adena, Lyon, Edward and Mary Ellen; Ida Virginia, the wife of Paul Lirkhand; Hattie E., the wife of C. Callahan, who has two children, Clarissa and Buster; Harry Harrison, who died February 13, 1919, married Essie Pierce and had three children: Myrtle, Marnell and Vernon; and Mervin L., who married Nettie Collins, has two children: Marion and Beryl.

John Nevin. The Nevin family were pioneers in the Melville community of Sweetgrass County, where they have been conspicuous in ranching and other affairs for forty years. It was near Melville that John Nevin, a well-known resident of Big Timber, was born April 12, 1881.

His father, Oswald B. Nevin, was born in New York State in 1840, a son of Benjamin Nevin and a grandson of John Nevin. The Nevin family came from Ireland, where Benjamin Nevin was born. Benjamin acquired a large amount of land near Albany, New York, and spent his last years there. Oswald B. Nevin had a fondness for the romance and adventure of remote and unsettled districts, and spent much of his life out on the frontier. For several years he traveled over the northern provinces as an employe of the Hudson Bay Company. He also served in the Civil war as member of a New York regiment. He came to Montana during the '70s and as a pioneer homesteaded a tract near Melville, later selling his homestead and buying another adjoining ranch, where he lived until his death in September, 1905. He was prominent in affairs in Sweetgrass County and at the time of his death was incumbent of the office of County Commissioner. He was a republican and was affiliated with the Knights of Pythias. Oswald B. Nevin married Mary Whitford, who was born at Winnipeg, Canada, where they married. She died on the home ranch near Melville. She was the mother of ten children: Sarah the oldest died in childhood, the third was also named Sarah and died at the age of seventeen, the ninth was Edward who died when twelve years old, and Richard, the youngest, died at the age of eighteen in California. Ben, second among the children, is a ranchor near Melville, and in that same community reside his brothers, Tom and William, both on ranches, while Dave has a ranch on the Sweetgrass River. The sixth in the family was John and the seventh is Jemima, wife of Harry Manning, a rancher near Lewistown.

Charles C. Richard E. Roy H.

JOHNSON THE ABSTRACTMAN

John Nevin finished the work of the common schools in Sweetgrass County and he also spent one year in All Hallows Business College at Salt Lake City, Utah. For two years he was a student in the State Agricultural College at Bozeman, and on leaving that institution in 1901 took charge of his father's ranch as administrator and in 1906 sold the property for the benefit of the heirs. He then bought and was part owner with his father-in-law, John Rye, of an immense ranch of 24,000 acres. He lived on it and was active in its management until 1916, when the property was sold. He then made his home at Big Timber, on Sixth Avenue near Anderson Street.

Mr. Nevin passed away August 3, 1920, while managing his ranch on the Sweetgrass River, where he had 6,000 acres devoted to grain and stock raising. He handled blooded stock of different kinds, including sheep.

Mr. Nevin was a republican in politics and a member of the Catholic Church. He had been a stockholder in the Citizens State Bank of Big Timber. In 1905 at Butte he married Miss Bertha S. Rye, daughter of John and Lena (Olesen) Rye. Mrs. Nevin attended a settlement school at Melville. They were the parents of three children: John Brodie, born October 8, 1905; Richard Woodbury, born December 3, 1910; and Sayre Rye, born December 23, 1913.

John Rye, father of Mrs. Nevin, is one of the oldest settlers of Sweetgrass County, and as a retired resident of Big Timber is enjoying the comforts brought by many years of exceptional business activity. He was born near Trondjem, Norway, March 20, 1852. His father Erasmus Rye was born in Norway in 1798 and spent his life in that country, at first as a tailor and later as a farmer and died in 1858. He had been a member of the Regular Norwegian Army and was affiliated with the Lutheran Church. His wife was Bertha Peterson, who was born in Norway in 1818 and after the death of her husband came to America and died at Melville, Montana, in 1904. She had four children, John Rye being the youngest. Peter, the oldest, came to Montana in 1883 and is a retired farmer at Kalispel, Montana. Malina died in Norway, wife of Louis Matthewson, who is a farmer in that country. Olena living at Eau Claire, Wisconsin, is the widow of Sever Stein, who was in the lumber business in Wisconsin.

John Rye attended common schools near Trondjem and to the age of twelve lived on his father's farm and then became a herder of sheep and cattle and worked on the farm until he came to the United States in 1872. His first home was at Menominee, Wisconsin, where he worked in saw mills as a lumberjack, and also had some employment in a store. On coming to Montana in 1883 he located in the Melville community and homesteaded 160 acres. From that quarter section his possessions grew until he had 640 acres. He finally sold his homestead in 1909. In the meantime he had acquired in association with John Nevin the great ranch of 24,000 acres on Fish Creek, and was active in its management for four years. Since 1911 he has lived in Big Timber, but he still own 640 acres at Gibson and runs it as a wheat ranch. His modern home is on Sixth Avenue in Big Timber and he also has three dwelling houses in Billings and 160 acres east of Melville. Mr. Rye is widely known over his home county, having served six years in the office of county commissioner. He is a republican, a member of the Lutheran Church, and is affiliated with Big Timber Lodge, Knights of Pythias. He married at Eau Claire, Wisconsin, in 1874, Miss Lena Johnson, who was born and educated in Norway. She is a member of the Lutheran Church. Mr. and Mrs. Rye have three children: Richard who attended Carlton College at Northfield, Minnesota, and lives on his father's ranch; Olga, wife of William Murer, a merchant at Springdale, Montana; and Bertha, Mrs. John Nevin.

CHARLES C. JOHNSTON of Mondak is active head of the Roosevelt County Abstract Company, and is also president of the larger organization operating under the familiar title in a number of Montana localities as "Johnson, the Abstract Man." Mr. Johnston personally is one of the leading authorities on land titles in the Northwest and has been a diligent student of land titles nearly all his active life and in many states.

Mr. Johnston was born at Springfield, Ohio, April 8, 1881. The family originally came from England, being among the early colonial settlers of Maryland. Some of the name were American soldiers in the Revolution. His grandfather, Benjamin Johnston, married Marie Hughes, of Kentucky and their three sons were: Henry, foreman of the old Champion Binder Works at Springfield, Ohio; William A.; and Irvin Johnston, a farmer in Ohio.

William A. Johnston, father of Charles C. Johnston, was born in Clark County, Ohio, in 1852, and was well educated. For many years he was a partner in the Kenton Boiler Works at Kenton, Ohio, was a merchant there and elsewhere in Ohio, and subsequently moved to Michigan, where he acquired farming interests in the vicinity of Onawa, where he now makes his home. He married Annabell Barringer. Her father, Jacklin A. Barringer, a retired contractor, was a native of Virginia but was reared in Ohio near Dayton, and married Miss Harriet Styles, of Boston, Massachusetts. Annabell was their youngest child and died at Kenton, Ohio, in 1886. Her children were: William H. and LeRoy Albert, both of Minneapolis, and Charles C.

Charles C. Johnston attended the public schools of Kenton, Ohio, the East Liberty College, and took a commercial course in Lentz College at Dayton. He finished his education when about nineteen years of age, and had already acquired some practical experience as a bookkeeper with the National Cash Register Company. On leaving Dayton he went to Lakota, North Dakota, and was employed as a typist and abstractor with an abstract company, eventually becoming a half owner in the business. Selling out, he returned to Dayton, and there continued his study and interest in abstract work, but became more active in the affairs of the National Cash Register Company. He was secretary of its foreign department, later was promoted to secretary of the inventions department, and then became one of the executive secretaries of the corporation. He was with that well known organization for about five years.

His next field of work was in Texas, where he gained new abstract experience by a year's study in Spanish Grant titles. From there he came to Montana in June, 1910.

At Glasgow Mr. Johnston became associated with R. E. Johnson in abstract work and investment banking. About a year later Mr. R. H. Johnson became associated with them and as they had acquired abstract offices in other cities in the state they became known as "Johnson, THE Abstract Man," as mentioned in the first of this article. R. E. Johnson was then president of the concern, and at his death Charles C. Johnston became executive head. When Roosevelt County was created Mr. Johnston with his partner J. H. Johnson organized the Roosevelt County Abstract Company and Mr. Johnston moved his home to Mondak in March, 1919.

The Johnson organization has compiled numerous sets of county records, including those at Great Falls, Cascade County, Malta in Phillips County, Glasgow in Valley County, Plentywood in Sheridan County, Mondak in Roosevelt County and at Scobey in Daniels County. At the beginning of the World war many of the office force left to enroll with the colors and for this reason the firm sold its records at Great Falls, Malta and Glasgow, but still retains and operates the others. The firm are members of the Montana Abstractors Association and Mr. Johnston is one of the vice presidents of that organization.

He is also president of the Johnson Farm Loan Company of Glasgow, and is interested in the management of the Stevens-Johnston Investment Company of Minneapolis. The Johnson Farm Loan Company made the first farm loan in Valley County, and aside from those made by one local bank did the first farm loan business in Eastern Montana.

Mr. Johnston was reared in a republican home, and cast his first presidential ballot for Colonel Roosevelt in 1904. He has been an active leader in his party in Montana, and for a time served as secretary of the Valley County Republican Central Committee, and for several years was a member of the Glasgow School Board. He became a Mason at Glagow, where he affiliated with the lodge, chapter and commandery, is a member of the Shrine at Helena, and is active in the Knights of Pythias Order, his local membership being at Glasgow and he is deputy grand chancellor of the Northeastern Montana District.

Roy H. Johnson, who has been prominently identified with the business life of Plentywood since its formative period, is the manager of the Sheridan County Abstract Company and a member of the Roosevelt County Abstract Company. The former corporation has transcribed the records of the county, and has its books to date for the making of a complete showing as to titles to all lands within the county. It is a bonded company for the sum of $5,000, a safe and reliable institution for the transaction and sale of Montana's lands.

Mr. Johnson was born in Dexter, Iowa, January 30, 1892, but when he was a lad of seven years he was taken by his parents to Minnesota, where he grew to mature years on farms near Hancock and Alexandria, gaining his education in the meantime in the public schools and a business college at Alexandria. He was a youth of nineteen when he embarked upon his business career, and at the same time became identified with the life and interests of Montana.

Charles F. Johnson, his father, was a native of Sweden, but left his native land for the United States when nineteen years of age. For a time after his arrival he was employed as a wage earner in the Rock Island Arsenal and at Galesburg, Illinois, later was a railroad brakeman, and finally learned the mason's trade and followed that occupation until failing health caused him to give up the work and retire to the farm, depending upon his sons to carry on its work. He became a naturalized citizen of his adopted land, voted with the republican party, and always proved himself a thorough American, in sympathy with its institutions and government. His death occurred at Alexandria, Minnesota, in January, 1916, when he had reached the age of sixty-nine. He had married in Dexter, Iowa, Miss Clara A. Samuelson, who was also a native of Sweden, and they met for the first time at Galesburg, Illinois. She survives her husband, and is the mother of the following children: Albert, who is engaged in farming near Clontarf, Minnesota; Gus F. and Walter R., both residents of Northwood, Iowa; Roy H., of Plentywood, Montana; and Marie C., the deceased wife of R. E. Johnson, the originator of the Johnson interests in the Valley County Abstract Company of Glasgow.

In 1913 Roy H. Johnson arrived in Montana, a young and enthusiastic lad of nineteen years, and he established himself in the embryo Town of Glasgow and entered upon the duties of a clerk and stenographer in the office of R. E. Johnson, the founder of the Valley County Abstract Company. When Sheridan County was created two years later R. E. and C. C. Johnson of Mondak and Roy H. Johnson organized the abstract business in Sheridan County, and in November of that year, 1913, Roy H. Johnson assumed the management of the business and has continued to transact its affairs ever since, save when he wore the uniform of his country as a soldier in training for the World war. The partnership in the Sheridan County Abstract Company was dissolved upon the death of the senior member of the firm, R. E. Johnson. C. C. and Roy H. Johnson are also the owners of the Roosevelt County Abstract Company at Mondak.

With the exception of always casting an intelligent and patriotic ballot and working for the upbuilding of his community Roy H. Johnson has never been an active participant in political affairs. His first presidential vote was given to Colonel Roosevelt, and he became a member of the progressive party in 1912, while in 1916 he supported Hughes for the presidency and is a believer in republican principles. He entered the ranks as a soldier April 23, 1918, enlisting in the United States Marines. He was sent to Mare Island, California, where he remained until June 11 following, when he was transferred to Galveston, Texas, and remained at that camp until discharged in February, 1919. He is a charter member of the Plentywood Post of the American Legion, also its post commander.

Mr. Johnson is unmarried. He was made a Mason in Plentywood in 1915, and he belongs to the Blue Lodge and Chapter of that city, to the Commandery at Glasgow, to the Shrine at Helena, and took the work of the Consistory at Galveston, Texas, in 1918, and belongs to the Scottish Rite bodies there. He is also a member of the Eastern Star in Plentywood. As a Blue Lodge Mason he held the office of secretary, and at the present time he is serving as secretary of the Chapter.

Richard E. (Dick) Johnson was born at Norcross, Minnesota, September 6, 1881, and died at Glasgow, Montana, December 25, 1916.

Mr. Johnson moved to Kensington, Minnesota, in 1888 with his parents, and his early education was obtained in the public schools of Kensington and Minneapolis. Later he attended the Glenwood Academy at Glenwood, Minnesota, where he completed a course in business.

Mr. Johnson first came to Montana in 1899, when he accepted a position with the Lewis-Wedum Company Store at Glasgow, but after a short time returned to Minnesota, where he accepted a position with the Wilcox & Wells Store at Hancock, Minnesota. This proved an important step in his life, as it was there that he met Marie C. Johnson, and the acquaintance formed blossomed into one of the most beautiful and affectionate love stories that we are privileged to see in life. After a few months at Hancock he again returned to Glasgow and reentered the employ of the Lewis-Wedum Company, for which firm he served as bookkeeper and assistant postmaster. This position he held until he was appointed cashier of the Lewis Brothers Bank (later the First National), at Glasgow, which position he held until he resigned in March, 1904.

April 5, 1904, he was married to Marie C. Johnson at her home near Hancock, Minnesota, and there began what was, as near as earth can give, an earthly paradise. At first the young couple lived at Glenwood, Minnesota, where Mr. Johnson engaged in the real estate business, but in the fall moved to Flaxton, North Dakota, where he and associates established the First State Bank, and he was its cashier. The following year they moved to Rolette, North Dakota, where Mrs. Johnson had the distinction of being the first woman in the town. At this place Mr. Johnson was cashier of the First State Bank, and remained in Rolette until January, 1909, when he disposed of his banking interests.

January, 1909, found Mr. Johnson back in Glasgow, this time to stay, as he purchased the abstract of title records of W. J. Pierce and formed the Valley County Abstracting Company, which he later incorporated as the Valley County Abstract Company and became its president. In June, 1910, Charles C. Johnson became associated with him and in April, 1911, Roy H. Johnson came, both of whom were constantly associated with him until his untimely death on Christmas Day, 1916. The firms owned and established by the three Johnsons have always been and still are more popularly known as "Johnson THE Abstractman."

In March, 1913, the Sheridan County Abstract Company was incorporated by the above men, and Mr. Johnson became its president. In March, 1915, a deal was consummated whereby the Johnsons disposed of their interests in the abstract of title records of the Valley County Abstract Company, retaining, however, the farm loan and insurance business, which they incorporated into the Johnson Farm Loan Company, and Mr. Johnson also became its president. Just prior to his death he was instrumental in organizing the Farmers-Stockgrowers Bank of Glasgow, of which he was to have been interested.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Johnson were active in the welfare of the community in which they resided, and were especial boosters for Montana and Glasgow. Mrs. Johnson preceded Mr. Johnson in death, she passing away on September 26, 1914. No children were born to this happy marriage.

Mr. Johnson took a keen interest in public enterprises as well as in politics, but he never held an office. He was a great admirer of "Teddy" Roosevelt, and was a delegate to the National Convention of the progressive party in 1912 at Chicago. Otherwise he was always identified with the republican party.

Mr. Johnson was confirmed in the Lutheran Church, but attended the Congregational Church in Glasgow for a number of years. Prior to his death, however, he became interested in Christian Science. He belonged to the several Masonic bodies, the Blue Lodge, Chapter, Commandery and Eastern Star in Glasgow and the Scottish Rite bodies and Shrine in Helena, Montana, his funeral being in charge of North Star Lodge No. 46, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Glasgow. He also was a member of the Modern Woodmen and Yeomen lodges.

Mr. Johnson's father, Erick H. Johnson, was born December 27, 1842, at Ahus, Sweden, and received his education in Sweden, coming to America in 1863. During the Civil war he served with Company H, 132nd Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and later was a prominent member of the Grand Army of the Republic. He was postmaster at Kensington, Minnesota, at the time of his death in October, 1903. He was married December 26, 1867, to Miss Ingri Ringhdahl, who preceded him in death in the spring of 1889. Three children were born to this union: Edward H., the eldest, who was accidentally killed while displaying fireworks in Fargo, North Dakota, in June, 1899; Richard E., now deceased; and Ebba V. (Bee) Halgren, of Watertown, Minnesota.

Joseph Peter Zeman, who, for many years, was a prosperous merchant in Wisconsin, came to Montana in 1915, and founded and is president of the principal bank at Ballantine. Mr. Zeman was born near Prague, Bohemia, December 30, 1866. His father, Frank V. Zeman, who was born near the same Bohemian city in 1842, was a stone mason by trade, and in 1867 brought his family to the United States. He settled at Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, and lived there the rest of his life, following his trade and also working as a machinist for a railroad. He died in Prairie du Chien in 1916. He was prominent in municipal affairs in the Wisconsin city, serving as alderman for many years and a member of the school board. He was a democrat and active in the Catholic Church. Frank V. Zeman married Ann Hroch, who was born near Prague in 1842 and is still living at Prairie du Chien. Joseph P. is the oldest of her children; Charles M. was in the clothing business for many years, but is now in the shoe department of the Milwaukee store of Schuster & Company; Mary, who died at Denver, Colorado, September, 1918, was the wife of F. G. Horal who was a carpenter, builder and skilled mechanic in Denver; Annie lives with her mother; Frank died in infancy; Stasia is a teacher at Minneapolis, Minnesota; Frances is the wife of John H. Widman, a hardware merchant of Prairie du Chien, and was a school teacher for many years before her marriage; John F. is in the motorcycle business at Prairie du Chien; and Alvina, the youngest of the family, died at the age of twenty-one.

Joseph Peter Zeman was an infant when brought to the United States, and grew up and received his education in the parochial and public schools of Prairie du Chien. He left school at the age of fourteen. At that time all of Southwestern Wisconsin was the scene of many busy saw mills and other evidences of the flourishing lumber industry. For two years he worked in a saw mill and for another year was employed in a sash and door factory at Chicago. His longest permanent position in business, however, was in Prairie du Chien where from 1889 to 1915 he was a manufacturing and retailing confectioner.

Mr. Zeman came to Montana in December, 1915, and became president of the Ballantine State Bank and is one of the men most active in the affairs of that city. The Ballantine State Bank has a capital of $20,000 and surplus of $5,000. The other officials are C. T. Garvey, vice president, Hardin, Montana, and C. O. Stout, of Ballantine, also vice president. Mr. Zeman is interested in Montana farming, having a forty-acre irrigated ranch by the schoolhouse on the town site of Ballantine, and also 280 acres of dry farming land two miles south of Ballantine. His modern home is on Cane and Fourth streets.

Mr. Zeman married Miss M. Patricia Garvey of Sheridan, Wyoming, in 1912. She was born in his home city, Prairie du Chien, was educated at St. Mary's Catholic College there, being a graduate in literature and music and took a post-graduate course with the Madames of the Sacred Heart in Omaha. Mrs. Zeman is a talented musician, and taught that art for several years. She is active in the Catholic Church and is a member of the Women's Catholic Order of Foresters. Her father, Christopher Garvey, was born in Ireland in 1834, and came to the United States at the age of sixteen, and for many years was the leading general merchant at Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, where he died in 1894. He was a democrat, and a Catholic. Mrs. Zeman's mother was Maria Prant, who is still living at Prairie du Chien. She was born at Kenosha, Wisconsin. Mrs. Zeman was the oldest of four children. Her sister Stasia is the wife of Dwight T. Chambers, an artist on State Street, in Chicago; Rose Marie is the wife of Dr. F. J. Antoine, a physician at Prairie du Chien and Christopher Trant is cashier of the Stockmen's National Bank at Hardin, Montana.

JOHN H. BOOTH. The general public has ever taken great pleasure in tracing the history of a man who started on life's career handicapped in many ways, but who, notwithstanding innumerable obstacles, pushed forward manfully and finally reached the goal of success set before him. The career of the gentleman whose name appears above has been full of unusual incidents, some agreeable and others unpleasant, and he is eminently deserving of the title "self-made," for all that he has and is has been gained entirely by his own efforts, without assistance from others.

John H. Booth was born in Liberty, Bedford County, Virginia, February 22, 1850, and is a son of John Curtis Booth. The latter was a native of Connecticut, but established a merchant tailoring business on Canal Street, New York City. He married a Miss Nichols, of Virginia, who died in New York three months after the birth of their son John H. The other children born to that union were as follows: Daniel, who died in California, and Sarah, who became the wife of David S. Holt, of Liberty, Virginia. John C. Booth was afterward married to Margaret Leavenworth, by whom he had a daughter, Henrietta. Mr. Booth died in Sacramento, California, in 1862 and his son John was left to his stepmother for rearing and education. Mrs. Booth subsequently became the wife of Judge Leonard W. Ferris, a Vermont man, who proved a friend of the orphan boy. The stepmother had no such interest, however, and made life at home so uncomfortable for him that in his early teens he left home and took refuge with an old friend of his father in Virginia City.

Mr. Booth's coming to the West was of an unusual and thrilling nature. He was brought here as a child, accompanying his grandmother from New York by boat by way of Panama to San Francisco in 1861, and stopping at Sacramento, where the father had established a business two years before. However, the grandmother on visiting San Francisco and Oakland became dissatisfied with the coast country and wished to return to New York. It was finally decided that young Booth, then in his teens, should return with her and enter school in New York City. They took passage on the "Golden Gate" for the Isthmus, and when almost opposite Mazatlan, Mexico, the ship caught fire and was burned, the grandmother losing her life. The lad remained on the boat until driven into the sea by the fire, when he jumped and was eventually rescued and taken to Mazatlan, where he awaited the coming of the "St. Louis," by which he returned north and to his father at Sacramento.

Mr. Booth was given the opportunity to do some service in the military establishment of the United States during the last years of the Civil war, Judge Ferris securing him a position in the quartermaster's department at Salt Lake City, under Lieutenant Melville, under whom young Booth had attended school at Virginia City. However, the experience was not very satisfactory, as the young man was defrauded out of his capital and his wages by the commander, who disappeared from the fort with his ward's funds. His next employment was at Fort Bridger in 1864, where he was in the cattle business with Dan Leavitt, after whom he worked for W. A. Johnson, of Green River, Wyoming, for five years, at fifty dollars a month. Johnson saw there was more than ordinary ability in the boy, who had also accumulated some property of his own, and he proposed a partnership on such fair terms that Booth accepted, the result being that at the end of seven years, when they divided and settled up, Mr. Johnson paid him about $12,000 in cash. With this capital Booth went to Buffalo, Wyoming, and engaged in the livery business. However, over-confidence in friends and the total loss of his stable by fire so reduced his resources that he abandoned the business and the town. He then made the journey from Buffalo to Miles City, Montana, by horseback and became a cowboy for the Murphy Cattle Company, with whom he was employed for three years. He then formed a partnership with W. F. Jordan in the retail liquor business at Ekalaka, Mr. Booth taking charge of the business and conducting it until 1910, when he sold out. He then formed another partnership and became interested in a ranch eleven miles southeast of Ekalaka, though he retained his residence in the village. In 1915 Mr. Booth was appointed postmaster of Ekalaka, holding the office for four and a half years, or until January 1, 1919, though he had tendered his resignation in the previous October. In the following March, Mr. Booth engaged in the confectionery and tobacco business in what is known as the Postoffice Store, in a building erected by himself, and which business he is still conducting.

Though a man of unpretentious demeanor, Mr. Booth possesses qualities which attract men, and he enjoys the respect and good will of the people of the community to a degree that indicates him to be a man of some merit. He is public spirited and gives his support to every movement for the advancement of the community in any way.

HORACE G. LANTIS. It is generally considered by those in the habit of superficial thinking that the history of so-called great men only is worthy of preservation, and that little merit exists among the masses to call forth the praise of the historian or the cheers and appreciation of mankind. A greater mistake was never made. No man is great in all things, and very few are great in many things. Many by a lucky stroke achieve lasting fame who before that had no reputation beyond immediate neighborhoods. It is not a history of the lucky stroke which benefits humanity most, but the long study and effort which made the lucky stroke possible. It is the preliminary work, the method, that serves as a guide for the success of others. Among those in Carter County who have achieved success along steady lines of action is the subject of this review.

Horace G. Lantis was born at Newton, Kansas, July 8, 1886, a son of Moses and Cornelia (Feighner) Lantis. Moses Lantis was a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1836, but in childhood was taken by his parents to Tazewell County, Illinois, where he grew to manhood and was educated. During the Civil war he was in the West, mining and fighting Indians from Puget Sound to the mouth of the Yellowstone River. He was over the west coast from old Mexico up through California, and covered the Rocky Mountain region. His wife was of Scotch ancestry, and was born in Ohio in 1854. To Moses and Cornelia Lantis were born the following children: Effie, the widow of Henry Guiot, of Peabody, Kansas; Addie, wife of John W. Eilert, of Carter County, Montana; Homer, deceased; Lewis H., of Camp Crook, South Dakota; Alonzo M., also of Camp Crook; Bessie, the wife of Harry Eves, of Wichita, Kansas; Horace G., the immediate subject of this review; Almeda R., wife of James B. Armstrong, a ranchman of Carter County; and Laura E., the wife of Robert Livingston, of Ekalaka.

Horace G. Lantis had but little opportunity to secure a school education, but he has been a close student of nature and a careful observer, so that he has acquired a comprehensive fund of general information. His early life in Montana was spent as a cowboy on the range. In 1902 he came to what is now Carter County. At that time Custer County embraced all this region of the state, and he began his career in what was known as the Long-pine Division of the Sioux National Forest, at the head of Speelmon Creek, and at that time unsurveyed land. When the Lantis boys first located there they engaged in ranching. Horace G. was then but a lad of sixteen years, and until 1907 he aided his father on the ranch. In that year the Lantis brothers established a saw mill in that region and manufactured all kinds and dimensions of lumber, operating a planing mill in connection with it. Horace Lantis remained a partner in the enterprise until in April, 1909, when he went to Dakota and entered a homestead near Camp Crook. He maintained his home there until he proved up on it, built himself a log house 18 by 18 feet in size, and he raised a good crop each of the three years he was there.

Leaving his homestead, Mr. Lantis removed to the Ekalaka division of the Sioux National Forest, locating a saw mill at the head of Mussell Creek. He operated at that site from June, 1911, to April, 1914, when he moved the plant to Allenbaugh Springs, where he continued the manufacture of lumber until the spring of 1919, when he leased the mill and became a resident of Ekalaka. Here he engaged in the lumber business, stocking his yard from his old mill plant and adding several cars of commercial material. At that time he associated himself with C. G. Rickard, and they are doing a prosperous business. Besides being general dealers in lumber they also deal in building lots and have erected a number of houses on their lots, which they then sell, and in this way they have contributed in a very definite way to the upbuilding and improvement of Ekalaka. Mr. Lantis is also a stockholder in the Ekalaka Amusement Company.

Horace G. Lantis was married in November, 1909, to Callie Armstrong, a daughter of Marion Armstrong, who came to Montana in 1905 from Amarillo, Texas, being now a prosperous sheep ranchman here. To Mr. and Mrs. Lantis have been born four children: Ralph and Ruth, twins, Helen and Mildred. Politically Mr. Lantis is a democrat, though he does not take a very active part in public affairs. Personally he is a man of fine qualities of character, and to a marked degree enjoys the confidence and good will of the people of his community, for he has consistently stood at all times for the welfare of the people.
